Mr. MADDEN. I agree with the gentleman's conclusion, but I am explaining what this explanation means, which was written by this man. I assume that this bill was drawn by experts down in the War Industries Board, or some other place where they have the benefit of the learning of all the great lawyers of the United States, and no doubt this amendment was written by these same wise men, and this explanation was written by one of the wise men who wrote the substitute and wrote the bill. And so we have before us a complicated situation which perhaps the contract suggested in the amendment may obviate in the long run. In the meantime we are dealing with an uncertain problem. It is a farce from the beginning to the end.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that this argument which the gentleman from Illinois treats so facetiously was a statement why the substitute should be adopted rather than the original language. The contract is entered into not by compulsion; it is to aid in equipping the private plant. The Government enters into a contract with the owner as to what shall be paid at the end of the contract period instead of using the "then-value" provision. It goes on to show that the "then value" at the end of the contract period may be worth practically nothing, whereas they provide in the contract what shall be paid and what to write off for war losses in advance. They make an estimate; the power plant might make the best guess and the Government lose, or the Government may make the best guess and the private owner lose. Anyway, it is a contract and agreement entered into in advance as to the terms of the settlement between the Government and the aided plant when the lease period has expired.

As the gentleman from Illinois says, it is better than the language of the substitute, and I hope there will be no objection to adopting it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the objection to the proposed substitute is that it does not clearly state its purpose; it does not clearly set up any standard upon which the remission of the wastage can be determined. The original bill does clearly state that the Government can enter into a contract with the operator of the plant whereby repayment of the difference between the value of the extensions at the time it is made and the value at the end of the contract period will be waived. That purpose is specifically set out in the original draft of the bill and furnishes a guide to those making the contract as to what the intention of Congress was with respect to the amount which might be so waived. Under the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee the amount which will be so waived becomes the subject of agreement in advance and thus may be an entirely arbitrary amount.

In other words, suppose that extension is made to a plant for which the Government advanced the operator $50,000. We will assume that the difference between the value now and at the end of the war period is $20,000. Under the original draft the Government would waive repayment of $20,000; and under this proposition, if the Government agreed in advance that the difference would be $25,000, it would have to waive the amount, and if the agreement was for only $15,000 it would have to waive that amount. The matter must be determined in advance under the substitute proposed by the committee. It is an arbitrary amount, and it assumes that those who make the agreement in the first place are good guessers; that their judgment in advance is a perfectly good judgment. It seems to me that is assuming a good deal.

As I said in the first place, there is absolutely no language in the amendment at all which establishes the measure of the amount which it is intended the Government shall waive. Now, somewhere in this amendment it should be stated that the purpose of the amendment is to permit the Government to waive the payment of the difference between the value of the extensions at the time of the installation and at the end of the contract period. Then, it seems to me, the administration, under this portion of the act, would have some sort of a standard by which they might be guided. But if they take the language of the substitute they have no gauge at all, and it might become entirely an arbitrary matter. When the contract for the extension is made, a purely arbitrary amount which is to be waived at the end of the contract period is established. This amount is likely to be largely favorable to the operator.

This sort of an arrangement opens the way for error, mistake, and for favoritism. I do not believe we ought to open up the matter in that way without some sort of a standard by which the amount of the waiver shall be determined.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I favored the substitute as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee and did so for the following reasons: The bill originally provided for a basis of allowance of war wastage upon the then value at the time of the settlement, whether it be at the end of five years or any intervening period. If you use that as a basis, you are likely to do an injustice to the operator, because at the time of that adjustment the plant, machinery, and appliances which the Government has put in may be of very little or any value to the operator. He may have sufficient appliances or machinery already of his own to take care of his normal business. If you enforce upon the operator the then-value basis, you do him an injustice.

On the other hand, suppose you make the basis the cost of reproduction at the time of the adjustment or settlement. That may work a hardship to the Government, because the cost of reproduction at the time of the adjustment may be in a period of peace when values may have tumbled, and hence the Government would not get nearly what it was entitled to, and it therefore would cover a very large per cent of the war wastage. So in lieu of either of these standards of measure we thought best to contract in the first instance the measure of the amount which the Government should recover out of the advances it had made to the operator. Measured in that way there can be no doubt because the Government can know every dollar it has put into the plant and the amount it cost. It can figure, and the operator can join in the figuring, upon the percentage of the reduction of the war cost of these additions, appliances, and machinery so as to fix the amount the Government is to recover.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. As I understand, the provisions of the bill as originally drawn provided that at the settlement period they might agree by arbitration or otherwise at the then value, and the President had the right to waive any portion or all of it.

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. And the amendment provides for contracting in advance, and also gives the President the right to waive all or any part of it.

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is not that the difference between tweedledee and tweedledum? Why is the language any better in the proposed substitute because they can still do it by arbitration? If you agree then you ought to agree, otherwise you should waive any part or all of it.

Mr. ESCH. Because the use of the words "then value" itself involved an elaborate consideration of the relationship between the operator and the Government. We obviate all of that by putting in the contract in the first instance the ratio the Government is to receive from the amount of its advances.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the gentleman will pardon me again, the very fact it gives to the President the right to waive any portion or all of it, yet your substitute involves the very language you say you are seeking to avoid, and that is an investigation and agreement between the Government and the owner as to the then value or value of this new machinery and new appliances and new business that the Government puts in the plant?

Mr. ANDERSON. You guess in advance.

Mr. HAMLIN. You guess in advance, and if not satisfied with the guesses then go ahead with the same performance again.

Mr. ESCH. No; it is more than a guess, because we know every dollar the Government has invested; we know the percentage of depreciation—all that can be determined. We can fix it in the contract and by so doing we can insure the Government at least a reasonable return upon its expenditures, and I think the substitute is better than the original text.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I want to be heard on the original amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the original amendment is exhausted.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then I make the pro forma amendment to strike out the last word of the amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Let us see if we can not have an agreement as to the conclusion of debate on the substitute and all amendments to the substitute.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Very well.

Mr. HAMLIN. How much time does the gentleman want—five minutes?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Five minutes will be sufficient for me.

Mr. ANDERSON. I want to offer an amendment to the amendment—I do not know that I shall require much time on it—and possibly another amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman from Iowa care to proceed before the gentleman from Minnesota offers his amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no objection to letting the gentleman from Minnesota proceed and I will defer to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment to the substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the substitute amendment offered by Mr. SIMS: Line 4 of the amendment, before the word "such" insert "in order that the United States may assume the difference between the cost of such equipment or expansion at the time of installation and the value thereof to the operator at the end of the contract period."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, of course the amendment which I have offered has no binding force upon anybody. All I seek to do is to make the purpose of the substitute clear. The purpose of it is that the Government shall assume the difference between the cost at installation of the structures and expansion of the plant and the value at the end of the contract period. I state that purpose in order that those who administer the provisions of this subsection will have some sort of legislative declaration as to what was intended to be done by the subsection.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if the gentleman from Wisconsin has considered his amendment, and if it is acceptable to him I have no objection to it?

Mr. ANDERSON. I have not submitted it to the gentleman. I do not know what his position is with respect to it.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported as it would read with the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be reported as it would read with the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 of the amendment, before the word "such," insert the following, so that it will read: "in order that the United States may assume the difference between the cost of such equipment or expansion at the time of installation and the value thereof to the operator at the end of the contract period; such terms may include an agreement that if at a time provided for therein, which shall not be later than five years after the expiration of the war period, it shall appear that the actual reasonable cost of equipping or expanding such plants exceeded the sum fixed in or to be ascertained by the method prescribed in such agreement, and if the machinery, structures, or appliances constitute such extension, expansion, or their equivalent shall have been maintained and operated in accordance with his direction, repayment of the whole or any part of such excess shall be waived. Such agreement shall provide further for determining the amount of such excess by arbitration or otherwise."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota has made a laudable attempt to clear up the meaning of this amendment, but I respectfully submit that it is beyond the ability of any gentleman upon the floor to make it perfectly plain. I think for that reason not only his amendment, which might otherwise be helpful, but the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, ought to be voted down. Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee does not accomplish what the gentleman intended and does not accomplish what the original provision effected. The original provision gave the President power to waive the difference between cost of the machinery and its value after the war.

But this provision is "that such terms may include an agreement," and so forth, and "that when it shall appear that the actual reasonable cost of equipping or expanding such plant exceeded the sum fixed," and so forth, the difference may be waived. Now, that refers back to the terms "reasonable cost."

Mr. SIMS. Fixed by the contract.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes; fixed by the contract, but it refers to the cost of the machinery. But, as I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], that is not the reference that is intended at all. By the words "the sum fixed" is intended the amount of loss.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But you can not make that language include that.

Mr. SIMS. Of course the cost at the time would be the amount of money that is advanced and whether or not the man to whom it was advanced shall pay it back or not is all provided for in the contract.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With all deference to my friend from Tennessee, you can not make this provision bear such a construction. That may be what you mean, and doubtless is what you mean, but that is not what this amendment says at all. It does not define what is meant by the sum fixed. If it refers to anything, it must refer to something that is in the provision itself and has preceded it, and the only thing that is in the provision itself and has preceded is "the reasonable cost" of the machinery. But that is not what this is intended to refer to at all. Now, I am not very much worried about this provision, because I am satisfied it will not be in this bill when it comes back to us, but I do not like to see it go through the House in that form. The original provision for which it is intended as a substitute, while it may have the defects that were set forth by my friend from Wisconsin, at least was fairly clear in its meaning and as to what it intended to do. But this is not. If it does anything at all, it will do something that is not intended by the parties who proposed it, and for that reason it ought not to be adopted. In my judgment, it is so drawn as to be entirely unintelligible, and nobody can tell what is meant by it except as it is explained, and when the explanation is given it is found that the terms do not comprehend any such meaning as is thought to be given to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 4.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. WALSH. I see that a large number of Members have just come in and I will withdraw it.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if other Members of the House have the same experiences that I have had in the last day or two with the telegraph operated by the Government, and if they continue I am afraid we will find it very hard for us to vote for this bill, with its public-ownership tendencies.

I never thought that the service of the Western Union Telegraph Co. was perfect, except as I compared it with the slow and unreliable methods of communication which the Post Office Department has given us ever since it became demoralized under its present management. Of course, compared with that, the Western Union did seem excellent. However, yesterday I had such an experience with the telegraph, now under the control of the Post Office Department, that I look back with great regret and admiration to that service that I formerly got from the private corporation. And that makes me feel that a bill like this, which is going a step further in Government ownership, is going to have a rocky road if we Members are all going to have daily these experiences with the present Government agencies.

I am afraid the Western Union has already become almost as unreliable and disappointing in its service as we have been accustomed to in the Post Office Department since this administration took charge of it and it is obviously falling into that same rut of incompetency.

Another fact came to my notice yesterday which emphasized the disappointment I was having with my telegraph service, and which no doubt all of the rest of you are having daily.

Each of us has had hundreds of letters complaining about the mail service to the soldiers in France. I know that some months ago I complained, and that a great many other Members have complained, and you have all wanted to complain, but the answer was given us from the Post Office Department that the reason for that delay was because they could not identify the soldier over there; that he was moved about so rapidly that they could not locate him. And I had thought perhaps that was one reason that it was not entirely the intrinsic incapacity of the Post Office Department which caused all the trouble. But yesterday it was brought to my attention that a general of the United States Army had had letters written to him regularly from April to July and during that time never received one of them.

Now, we have not so many generals over on the other side, at the head of American forces, that they could not identify and locate the generals. They can not get distributed about in such inaccessible places that that would be an excuse for the Post Office Department. And this was back months ago, before the department was given over, as they tell us now that it has been, to the military. So that brought to my attention again this culpability which we have so often criticized, in that a general in the American Army could not get letters from home, although they were written to him regularly from the month of April to the month of July.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman realize that the Post Office Department here in the city at this time is about 100 clerks short by reason of the salary that is paid to them, and that the men are walking out every day to take better positions?

Mr. GILLETT. I am rather surprised, from the treatment they get from the Post Office administration, that it is able to keep any clerks.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not the treatment that is given them there the result of the action of Congress?

Mr. GILLETT. Who has control of Congress?

Mr. BLANTON. In fixing the salaries——

Mr. GILLETT. Who has control of Congress?

Mr. BLANTON. But just now a salary which would be a good salary under ordinary circumstances, although not as good a salary as other businesses are paying, is not a good salary, and naturally the men walk out to take better positions.

Mr. GILLETT. If we are not giving them adequate salaries, you are responsible for that.

Mr. BLANTON. We can not compete with war-time wages that are paid, where an ordinary mechanic in Baltimore can make more than a district judge of the country can make.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to oppose the important amendment just offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. The gentleman must recollect that at the time the wire-control bill was introduced the stimulating, moving cause was a threat of a strike.

Mr. MADDEN. That was only a pretense.

Mr. GILLETT. We were told that was not it. We were specifically told from high authority that that was not it.

Mr. SIMS. One moment, if you please. It was considered by the committee, and the argument was made on the floor of this House, that because notice of a strike had then been given by a large number of Western Union operatives. But that was not the only or the chief reason. The chief reason was that during the war the transmission of intelligence and dispatches of every kind should be in the hands of the Government, and every operator on the lines—the cable lines and the telegraph lines and the telephone lines and the wireless operators—should be at the beck and call of the Government during the war.

Mr. MADDEN. But the trouble was——

Mr. SIMS. Let me make my statement first, please. Those were the chief reasons. Nobody who supported the bill supported it simply because it was Government operation either permanently or temporarily. I do not suppose anybody thought that the American Telephone Co. needed aid. Its stock was away above par. The Western Union Telegraph Co. did not need financial aid. And, coming to this bill—because I do not think the gentleman stated all the reasons moving the committee and the House in passing the bill—the gentleman will remember that there was much criticism on the floor about that wire-control bill, the wire-control legislation, and when it went to the Senate certain Senators said, "The House of Representatives know that we will consider these measures thoroughly, and that is one of the reasons why they send them over here half considered"; and it was stated here on the floor of the House that it would take three weeks' hearings on that resolution before it could be reported to the Senate. But it was reported to the Senate without any amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. And sent back to the committee that reported it because the committee did not have any authority to report it.

Mr. SIMS. It was reported to the Senate without amendment, just as it was passed by the House, and Senator UNDERWOOD, who used to be the talented leader on this side of the House, whom we all know and whose ability we all recognize, said that it was the best-drawn resolution that had ever been sent from the House to the Senate, and no amendment whatever was adopted by the Senate.

Gentlemen are extremely critical in this time of war. The gentleman from Massachusetts balks at Government ownership. Is there one line in this bill that purposely looks to Government ownership? Are we going to refuse to the Government in time of war the authority to all that may be necessary to be done for the successful prosecution of the war because somebody who may favor Government ownership sees fit to claim that what is done is an argument in favor of public ownership. The gentleman from Massachusetts alleges that the service is worse in the hands of the Government than it was in the hands of private owners, as an argument against Government ownership. If the service is not so good as when in private operation, why does he fear that Government ownership will result from the poorer and less efficient service?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(4) To acquire any private power plant within the boundaries of the United States.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer to that.

Mr. WALSH. Well, let the gentleman offer it.

Mr. MADDEN. Is that for Government ownership?

Mr. SIMS. The amendment is:

Provided, That no plant owned or operated by a body politic shall be acquired without the consent of the body politic.

That is the amendment to this section offered by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMS: Page 6, line 21, insert, after the words "United States," the following: "Provided, That no plant owned or operated by a body politic shall be acquired without the consent of such body politic."

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ESCH as a substitute for the Sims amendment: Page 6, line 20, strike out subsection (4) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"To acquire by any known method of procurement any private power plant within the boundaries of the United States that the President may deem necessary for the prosecution of the war: Provided, That no plant owned or operated by a body politic shall be acquired without the consent of such body politic."

Mr. SIMS. I am very willing to accept the substitute.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, just a word in explanation. We struck out the definition of "to acquire," so I have put in the words here that are really the same as in the national-defense act, and then incorporated the amendment we put in on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SIMS. I have no objection to it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss it. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. It would seem, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] is to be preferred, with the exception that I do not think the proviso ought to be in there.

Now, we are attempting to give the President the authority to acquire any plant that he deems essential for the winning of the war, and in the very same language we are putting it in the power of some small municipalities to prevent the President from acquiring a plant which he might deem essential for the winning of the war. For those reasons I think the section is not only contradictory, but we are conferring a power which contains within its provisions an opportunity for any small group of citizens incorporated as a village to refuse to permit the President to take over their power plant, and I do not think, in view of conditions throughout the country, that we ought to limit the authority of the Commander in Chief to take over any of the instrumentalities which he deems essential to the winning of the war.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that I heartily approve just what he has said in every respect, but on account of the possibilities of fear that might arise as to municipal plants, that are serving cities and communities, being taken over and being cut out of service or having its service reduced, it has been thought best to require the consent of the municipalities before doing anything of the sort for the purpose of preventing disturbances and things of that sort.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the committee how much of this $175,000,000, which is to be available, is intended to be used for the acquisition of private power plants?

Mr. SIMS. The $138,000,000, I believe it was, as pointed out by Lieut. Stanley, is what will be required for the increase of the power where it is now short.

Now, I do not know that there will be a single construction from the bottom up. I do not know that there will be a single new plant required. I know that the object and purpose of the bill is—and I take it that this is the purpose of those who are promoting it, which is to help existing power plants by assistance from the Government to render extra needed service during the war period.

But it was thought not wise to pass a law that would not authorize the President to acquire a power plant or even to build a new one. But the whole purpose of it, as shown by the Secretary of War, by Mr. Baruch, by Mr. Dillon, by Mr. Myers, and Mr. Cook, who was representing the Shipping Board, was to aid in increasing the output of power plants that might not otherwise need the increase, and could not do it if not aided, who, if they did it, would stand to suffer a great loss after the war was over, because the amount of the increase necessary for war purposes probably would not be needed after the war was over. Now, as far as I know, no one has any idea of constructing a plant anywhere from the ground up by the Government unless it is to develop power at navigation dams which have already been constructed by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has been using my time.

Mr. SIMS. I ask that the gentleman may have the extension, so that I may answer his question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. There are a number of navigation dams, some in Ohio, some in Minnesota, some in Arkansas, where the Government has already built the dams, and water power of considerable horsepower can be immediately developed by putting in generating machinery and transmission lines that will serve industries engaged in the manufacture of war material. Now, that is contemplated if needed and if thought advisable. That would be original construction, not so far as putting in the dams is concerned, but so far as putting in the generating plants and the transmission lines, where a private company, in all probability could not do it, or else to aid some private company in installing this generating machinery where a dam has already been constructed at Government expense. Now, that is all I have heard in private or in any other way, and if any gentleman who has been sponsoring this bill is trying to foist upon the Government of the United States a policy of permanent Government ownership and operation, no one has communicated that fact to me, either in private or in public.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman knows that this provision is for the acquisition of private power plants. There is nothing in here as to how the Government shall divest itself of the ownership of these power plants after it has acquired them.

Mr. SIMS. There is in another portion of the bill. There are provisions for selling or otherwise disposing of them. It applies to all of them.

Mr. WALSH. That applies to leases and agreements.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; and to the title also.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out the proviso in the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. SIMS. No; the amendment is offered to the substitute. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee accepts the substitute?

Mr. SIMS. I said I had no objection whatever, and that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin might be treated as a committee amendment, so far as I am concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Tennessee withdraws his amendment. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MADDEN. I beg the pardon of the Chair. There is a motion to strike out the proviso.

Mr. SIMS. The proviso to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH to the amendment offered by Mr. ESCH: Strike out the proviso, as follows: "Provided, That no plant owned or operated by a body politic shall be acquired without the consent of such body politic."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. To the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HAMLIN) there were—ayes 6, noes 10.

Accordingly, the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 9, noes 3.

Accordingly, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to get a little information, if I can, from the chairman of the committee. The chairman, Mr. SIMS, has given the House a great many interesting and illuminating speeches on this bill, which I have listened to with great interest; and I enjoyed some of them so much that I thought I should like to read them in the RECORD. I looked through the RECORD this morning for a speech which the gentleman made the other day, which I enjoyed very much, in which he urged on the Members more faithful attendance, and with his usual accuracy and more than his usual candor, stated that during the debate on this bill the Members on the Republican side had generally been more numerous than the Members on the Democratic side, and he made some other complimentary remarks about us, which, coming from that side, were very unusual, and of which I appreciate the fairness and the courtesy. I remember that some gentleman arose and interrupted him. I think it was the gentleman from South Carolina who asked him if he was making a Republican speech or a Democratic speech, and he said, "I am making a patriotic speech," which, of course, we on this side knew to be a synonym for a Republican speech, and were correspondingly grateful to him. But when I looked to read that historic statement in print, to my astonishment I could not find it anywhere in the RECORD. I should like to ask the gentleman what has become of it, for I hope he has not repented of his patriotism and suppressed it permanently from the RECORD.

Mr. SIMS. I am very glad to answer the gentleman from Massachusetts. That speech has not been published in the RECORD, and I will tell the gentleman the reason why. At the time I made that speech I only asked for two minutes, and my purpose was only to make an appeal to Members on both sides of the House to attend its sessions. When I was given five minutes instead of two, and I began to state my reasons for making the appeal, some confusion arose and questions were asked me by gentlemen who, I suppose, did not know from what I was saying whether I was making a Democratic speech or not. I answered the question candidly. I wanted to finish that speech, and it would take about five minutes more to do it. The withholding of the speech was intentional. I intended to ask that I might have five minutes more in which to finish it, and then publish both parts of it at the same time. When I used the five minutes I thought I had better wait until further along in the debate before I asked for the unanimous consent.

Mr. GILLETT. I withdraw any criticism which I seem, perhaps inferentially, to have made.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee have five minutes in which to conclude that speech at this time.

Mr. SIMS. I object. There are too few Members here. I made the other speech to a pretty full House.

Mr. WALSH. We can get them in.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, let us go on with the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman wants an audience.

Mr. SIMS. I do not want to finish that speech now.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I will withdraw the point and give notice that I will make it at half past 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

(5) To construct any pipe or other transmission lines, or other structures, facilities, or appliances that he may deem necessary or useful for the purpose of better utilizing or of increasing the facilities of any power plant, or of combining the facilities or power of two or more such plants, or of better utilizing the gas, power, or products generated by them.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like the chairman to explain the extent to which subsection 5 goes which gives the Government the right—

To construct any pipe or other transmission lines, or other structures, facilities, or appliances that he may deem necessary or useful for the purpose of better utilizing or of increasing the facilities of any power plant, or of combining the facilities or power of two or more such plants, or of better utilizing the gas, power, or products generated by them.

The purpose of my question is to ascertain whether or not it would extend the power of the President to the construction of pipe lines from the gas fields to points in Indiana, Illinois, New York, or Pennsylvania, if it was thought proper by the President to extend pipe lines for that distance.

Mr. SIMS. I do not think anything of that kind was contemplated. I never heard it discussed. The extension of the pipe lines was for use in the production of the by-products from coal, because the by-products are necessary in the manufacture of steel and are necessary for shipbuilding and other war material. There has never been a word said that it was to cover the ordinary pipe lines in use in natural-gas fields. It was intended for central power plants in regard to coal mines, where one large power plant furnishes the power to a number of coal mines. There may be quite a lot of gas accumulated which might be piped to where it was needed for use, as I have tried to explain. But as far as piping gas from the natural-gas fields, I do not think anything of that kind was contemplated, as I never heard it mentioned.

Mr. MADDEN. I was wondering whether it went that far, but if it applies only to the construction of a line from a central power plant to coal mines, and these manufacturing plants operated from a central power plant, that would be a very proper power to give to the President. But in view of the fact that we already have pipe lines carrying gas and oil and commodities of that kind all over the United States, and that the pipe lines are owned by people who can afford to extend them at their own expense, I would not like to see the Government enter upon a policy of advancing money to those corporations—the Standard Oil Co., for instance—to enable them to increase their output.

Mr. SIMS. There is no thought of that.

Mr. MADDEN. I apprehend that they could come to the assistance of the Government better than the Government to them. I am glad the gentleman has been able to explain it satisfactorily.

The Clerk reads as follows:

(6) To maintain, operate, and extend any plant, pipe, or other transmission line, or other structure, facility, or appliance which he shall have constructed or acquired pursuant to the provisions of this act, and to deliver the power generated, and the products produced in any such plant to such persons and in such proportions and at such times and at such rates as he may deem proper.

Mr. SIMS. I offer a committee amendment, on line 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 7, line 9, insert after the word "persons" the words "or body politic."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the chairman a question. Upon what theory is this amendment offered at this particular point? Is it going to facilitate the manufacture of munitions or the construction of ships to extend the pipe line for illumination purposes to some municipality which is not even engaged in building ships or making munitions?

Mr. SIMS. I do not suppose it was intended to aid a municipality that had no connection with war production. But where a municipality is engaged in the production of war material and it is necessary to increase the power, then the Government would aid in furnishing the power to do so if necessary.

Mr. WALSH. This would give him the power to maintain or to operate a plant or pipe line or transmission line owned by a private corporation, by a lighting or power corporation, for the purpose of furnishing power to a municipality.

Mr. SIMS. Delivering power to it.

Mr. WALSH. How is that compatible with the theory of the previous provisions of this bill?

Mr. SIMS. Let me give the gentleman a concrete case: Los Angeles has a municipally owned plant. There is a shipbuilding plant at its port a little distance off, and the shipbuilding plant is furnished with power by this municipality. Now, it might not be convenient, right, or just to force that municipality to increase its power plant in order to deliver all the power that might be needed by this shipbuilding plant, and this bill will permit the Government to increase its power by building pipe lines or construction work or adding to or aiding the municipality in doing what was essential in order to do the war work. The same situation exists at Portland, Oreg., but I understand they are able to do it without Government aid.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman knows that if they needed more power at the Los Angeles shipyard the Government would not go to the trouble of building an extension and furnishing the power to the municipal power plant.

Mr. SIMS. It might do it.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman thinks it might do it?

Mr. SIMS. It might be absolutely necessary; otherwise the municipal power plant would have to reduce its supply to the shipyard.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the subsection has nothing to do with the building of power plants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman take five minutes so that I can ask him a question?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not true that this section only refers to the extensions of plants, pipes, or transmission lines with reference to delivering power that has already been generated?

Mr. SIMS. Well, it refers to maintaining, operating, or extending any plant, pipe or other transmission line, or other structure, facility, or appliance which the President shall have constructed or acquired pursuant to the provisions of this act and, to deliver the power generated, and the products produced in any such plant to such persons or body politic and in such proportion and at such times and at such rates as he may see proper. That seems to be very clear that it is to deliver power the Government has generated and developed or aided in creating.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

(7) To require the operator of any private power plant within the boundaries of the United States to place at the disposal of the United States or to acquire from such operator, during the war period, the whole or any part of the power generated by such plant; and during such period to transmit or distribute, or to require such operator to transmit or distribute, such power to any other power plant or to any other persons for such periods, in such manner and quantities, and upon such terms as he may direct.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We already provide, Mr. Chairman, that the owner or operator of any private power plant within the boundaries of the United States must place at the disposal of the United States during the war period the whole or any part of the power generated by such plant, and during such period the President is empowered to require such operator to transmit or distribute such power to any other power plant or to any other persons for such periods in such manner and quantities and upon such terms as he may direct. Now, we require first the owner of the private power plant to turn over all of his plant to the President of the United States and then we require him after he has turned it all over to furnish the power to the United States or to anybody in the United States in such quantities and upon such terms and at such times as the President may direct. It seems to me rather conflicting that a man when he is giving up all that he has shall, after he has done that, be required to make distribution of what he has not by the order of somebody else to whom he has turned it over.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does not the gentleman think he is drawing on his imagination just a little bit? The first part of this refers to the operator of a private power plant within the boundaries of the United States to place it at the disposal of the United States, or, failing to do that, give the Government the right to acquire, if it desires to do so, all he has or part of it. He has the choice to do either.

Mr. MADDEN. If I am drawing on my imagination, of course, I am just following out the logic of the men who wrote the bill, because they seem to have drawn upon their imaginations for their facts and upon their memory for their wit and it would not do to be inconsistent in the consideration of a bill like this, so I am trying to be as consistent as I can under all the circumstances.

Mr. HAMLIN. Well, I think this section is about as clear as any other section of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. If that is the best the gentleman from Missouri can say, it is not very clear. However, I have not any desire to obstruct the consideration of the bill whether it is clear or muddy. I do not want to disturb the unrestricted current of the stream.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

(8) To lease for the war period or for such period thereafter not exceeding five years or for any shorter period and upon such terms as he may deem reasonable, to any person or body politic for use or operation by such person or body politic, any plant, transmission line, or other property or part thereof, constructed or acquired pursuant to the provisions of this act.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "five years" in line 21, page 7, and insert "one year."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 21, strike out "five years" and insert in lieu thereof "one year."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I only desire, Mr. Chairman, to call the attention of the committee to the fact that if the President puts a single machine inside of a big factory plant he can lease that machine to somebody else not the owner of the power plant for five years after the war period and let them operate it against the desire of the owner instead of having control of it only for the war period. I think that that is not a reasonable time and it is entirely too long. I think that one year is sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey) there were—ayes 9, noes 7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out subsection 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, beginning in line 20, strike out all down to and including line 2, page 8.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this provision here gives the President the authority to put into private plants machinery and appliances or to erect structures and additions and extensions to private plants and then to come along and lease them to somebody else besides the operator of the private plant. Now, that is not authority that we ought to give the President in connection with the development of this power. If he is going to improve these private plants by putting machinery in there he ought to do it under agreement or a contract with the operator of the private plant and provide that the owner or operator should operate this machinery and conduct the business of the private plant for the benefit of the Government in connection with its war program. We ought not to make it possible for the person who will be charged with the administration of this measure to have part of a private plant under Federal operation and control and the other part under private control, and I am opposed to this provision, because it seems to me entirely out of harmony with the rest of this bill, and it does not in any way come up to the representations as to what the measure provides as set forth by the chairman of the committee when he explained the measure here the other day and as he has explained it from time to time. Now, it says he can lease for the war period, or for any shorter period, upon such terms as he shall deem reasonable to any person or body politic for use or operation by such person or body politic, any plant, transmission line, or other property or part thereof. Before he can lease the plant to somebody else he has got to acquire it. That would mean that the Government would acquire the ownership of these private plants and that then it would lease them to somebody else or it would put machinery into the private plant or build an addition to it, retaining the title in the United States, and lease that to somebody else outside of the owner or operator of the plant.

It seems to me it would just confuse the situation and it would not result in the harmonious operation of this law. And I do not recall having come across in the hearings any particular reason why this power should be granted, nor do I recall that the chairman of the committee or any member of it has given a sufficient explanation. It seems to me that before the President can exercise this power, so far as a plant is concerned, the Government would have to acquire the ownership of it. Now, before he could exercise it, so far as machinery or structures are concerned, he would have to put them into a private plant under some understanding or arrangement with the owner or operator, and there is nothing to be gained, and certainly I can not see any situation which would arise where the Government would derive benefit by having a part of a private plant go under and operate under the owner's direction and supervision and another part operated and conducted by somebody else to whom the property or machinery had been leased.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the gentleman will read the last three or four lines, which he did not read, of that subdivision——

Mr. WALSH. I read it all.

Mr. HAMLIN. He will see it says "plants constructed or acquired," not extensions made to private plants.

Mr. ANDERSON. If they are constructing it, why not operate it?

Mr. HAMLIN. I was calling attention to the fact that it does not apply to plants where the Government is putting them in by way of extension.

Mr. WALSH. It says:

Any plant, transmission line, or other property or part thereof, constructed or acquired.

Part of a plant would be machinery put in there which the Government would certainly acquire before they put it in there.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, this is such an important provision of the bill that we ought to have a quorum here to consider it or adjourn overnight.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] A quorum is not present. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MADDEN. Most everybody thinks they can go to their office all day, but there are those here who have as much business as they have, that do not have the time to go to their offices.

Mr. SIMS. I think the gentlemen ought to stay here, but they do not do it, and to call them here wastes half an hour.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman going to rise?

Mr. SIMS. Not on the point of no quorum. Let us work half an hour, and then we will rise. We could not adjourn here at 4.30. The sun is two hours and a half high. Our boys in France are not adjourning at half past 4 and going home.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman must realize that, although we are not adjourning, we have lots of work to do, and there are lots of men now over at the Office Building attending to their office work.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman from Illinois, who is not even a member of the committee, wants to take charge of the bill, all right.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's motion comes too late.

Mr. MADDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Clerk had commenced to call the names.

Mr. MADDEN. The Clerk had not called the first name since the point was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk was instructed to call the roll and had called the first name.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask the Clerk to say whether or not he had called the first name.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk says he has called the first name. The Clerk will proceed.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Thereupon the committee rose; and Mr. FOSTER as Speaker pro tempore having resumed the Chair, Mr. HOUSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 12776) to provide further for the national security and defense and for the more effective prosecution of the war by furnishing means for the better utilization of the existing sources of electrical and mechanical power and for the development of new sources of such power, and for other purposes, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, whereupon 170 Members, a quorum, had answered to their names, and he reported a list of the absentees for printing in the RECORD, under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose a motion was pending, offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, to strike out the subsection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. I was recognized before the committee rose.

Mr. SIMS. I understood the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts had expired. If it had not, of course the gentleman was entitled to continue.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he really wishes to strike out the eighth section because it gives to the President the power to lease acquired property during the war. I believe the President ought to have all necessary powers, and I think the gentleman also thinks so.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think the interpretation of this section is susceptible of that construction.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It says in the last three lines that he is to lease property that was constructed or acquired.

Mr. WALSH. The point I make is that the President under this section could lease a part of the property which he had acquired to somebody else other than the owner of the plant.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Exactly. He ought to have that power.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think that is going to tend to harmonize the administration of the powers of this act.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. But during the war he ought to have full power. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. WALSH. Then if that is the gentleman's view, the gentleman ought to endeavor to pass a bill to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I was assured by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] that he would answer one or two queries that I wanted to propound to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time had expired.

Mr. WALSH. I did not hear the Chair state that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman had concluded, because he turned around. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(10) In furtherance of any of the foregoing purposes to acquire any property or property rights, including any public or private rights, or any interest in any such rights; or any material, machinery, appliances, or processes, patented or otherwise, which he may deem necessary or useful for the construction, development, expansion, or operation of any such plant or transmission lines.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 8, line 13, after the word "purposes," insert the words "of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 8, line 14, after the word "property," where it first occurs, strike out the words "or property rights, including any public or private rights, or any interest in any such rights; or any material, machinery, appliances, or processes, patented or otherwise."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(11) If in his judgment such action shall be necessary or useful for the purpose of this act to form one or more corporations under the laws of any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States for the purchase, construction, extension, lease, maintenance, or operation of any such power plants or facilities, or for the merger or consolidation of any private power plants, or for the purchase of the whole or any part of the capital stock thereof or of the property thereof: Provided, That not less than the majority of the capital stock of any corporation thus formed shall be subscribed, and during the war period shall be retained by the United States, and that at no time shall it be a minority stockholder therein.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: Strike out paragraph 11.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have been a Member of this House now pretty nearly eight years. During that time some of the most difficult and politically dangerous propositions have arisen in the history of the country. The period includes some of the greatest crises in the entire history of the country. But I think that during that period no proposition has ever been offered which is so dangerous and which so affronts every proper ideal of public morality or so subverts every principle upon which the institutions of free government are founded as this one.

It provides that the President may authorize a corporation to be formed for the merger or consolidation of private power plants or for the purchase of the whole or any part of the capital stock thereof or of the property thereof. That authorizes the creation by the Government of a holding corporation. It is not so long since every orator in the country was inveighing against a holding corporation as a device of high finance and alleging that under its shadow every species of financial chicanery was indulged in. This provision authorizes the holding corporation to gamble and speculate in stocks of other corporations. It does not require that the Government shall own all of the stock in the corporation, but, on the contrary, it provides that 49 per cent of the stock may be held by private individuals.

In other words, the purpose of this provision is to permit the Government to go into partnership for purposes of stock ownership with anybody in the country who desires to buy stock in a Government enterprise or who is sufficiently interested in the power proposition to want to be on the inside. The Government, of course, can not say who the owners of the other 49 per cent of the stock may be. If it can, then this bill simply gives to the persons authorized to administer this provision the power to grant to some men the privilege of purchasing stock in the corporation and to deny it to others.

If it can not say who the other stockholders shall be, then anybody who is sufficiently interested in the development and control of the power situation in the country can be a joint stockholder in the corporation with the Government.

It is bad enough to have men who have official responsibility to the Government issuing orders that make some men rich and other men poor, without providing that some person who has no responsibility to the Government at all accept the responsibility of an officer or a director in a private corporation and shall issue the same kind of orders.

Suppose, for instance, the Government organizes this holding corporation and subscribes 51 per cent of the stock and private individuals subscribe the other 49 per cent. Suppose that those who administer this law, under the power which this bill gives them, increase the rates for power, and thus make a lot of money for the Government and a lot of money for the private stockholders. Do gentlemen see what a scandal there would be in connection with such a transaction? Do gentlemen not see how this provision offends against every principle of free government? What will be the attitude of these private stockholders in this corporation if the corporation loses money instead of making it? Does anybody think that they will accept their losses without recourse to the Government? Will they not insist that those who administer this law see to it conditions are created which will insure a profit? Oh, it seems to me that if democracy means anything it means that governments are instituted to make men free, not to make men rich. This provision that the power of the Government may be exercised for the purpose of making a profit or, for that matter, for making a loss for private individuals so affronts every notion of proper public ethics that it seems to me obvious that it ought not to be permitted in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were—ayes 39, noes 24.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

(12) To sell or exchange any plants or structures constructed by him and any property to which he shall have taken title, and any rights acquired by him, whenever in his opinion the interests of the United States will be furthered by such sale or exchange: Provided, That no public right acquired by him shall be alienated for any term in excess of five years after the war period upon any terms or conditions other than those prescribed by the sovereignty from which such public rights shall have been acquired: Provided further, That whenever in the opinion of the President any structure or appliance which he shall have installed in any private power plant or any structure or appliance in any such plant to which he shall have taken title, or any property or right which he shall have acquired from the owner of such plant, shall constitute an integral portion of such private plant, or shall be of such character that it would be uneconomical to separate it therefrom, the owner of such private power plant shall be accorded an option to purchase the same at the then reasonable value thereof, to be ascertained either by agreement or by arbitration wherein the President shall select one arbitrator, the operator a second, and the two thus selected a third, before the same shall be otherwise offered for sale or exchange.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 9, line 12, after the word "sale," insert the words "or exchange."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 10, line 1, to strike out the last three words of the line and the first three words of the second line, the words stricken out reading—

At the then reasonable value thereof—

And insert in line 1, after the word "at," the words "an amount," and before the word "agreement" insert the word "the," and before the word "arbitration," in the third line, insert the word "an."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "the then reasonable value thereof" and substitute therefor the words "an amount."

Page 10, line 2, after the word "by," insert the word "the." Line 3, after the word "by," insert the word "an."

Mr. WALSH. Let us hear it as it will read when amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

So that it will read: "The owner of such private power plant shall be accorded an option to purchase the same at an amount to be ascertained either by the agreement or by an arbitration, wherein the President shall select one arbitrator—

And so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 14, page 9, the words "five years" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one year."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 9, line 14, before the word "after," strike out the words "five years" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one year."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state simply that this is a proviso that no public right acquired by the President shall be alienated for any term in excess of five years after the war period upon any terms or conditions other than those prescribed by the sovereignty by which such public right shall have been acquired. Now, it is quite possible that the President may take a municipal power plant or he may take one having State rights and franchises; but any such plant is taken only for the war, and I respectfully submit that he should not sell it to anybody else to be used free from the rights of the State or the municipality for a term of five years after the war. One year is enough. Really it ought to be simply for the war period. Therefore I offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey) there were—ayes 29, noes 32.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

(13) To appoint and fix the compensation of such attorneys, engineers, draftsmen, clerks, and other employees as he may deem necessary for the execution of the powers herein conferred.

Mr. ESCH. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ESCH: Page 10, line 7, strike out paragraph 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"(13) To employ in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and fix the compensation of such attorneys, engineers, draftsmen, accountants, clerks, and other employees as he may deem necessary for the execution of the powers herein conferred: Provided, That such draftsmen, accountants, clerks, and other employees shall be appointed from lists of eligibles to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the Civil Service laws."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

(14) To amend or modify any contract made by him pursuant to the provisions of this act so as to include therein any terms or conditions which it would have been lawful to include in such contract at the time of the making thereof.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does this mean that the President could modify a contract by putting in a provision which would have been lawful at the time he made the contract, whether the other party wanted the contract modified or not?

Mr. SIMS. I never consulted anyone about it, but my construction is that we give him the power to do so, provided he had the power to make such a contract originally.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman means to modify by a mutual agreement?

Mr. SIMS. That is, provided the President had the power to make the modification originally.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman object to inserting the words "by mutual agreement"?

Mr. SIMS. That was the impression I had; and while he would have the power to cancel the contract, the Government would have to pay compensation in the way of damages, if any resulted.

Mr. WALSH. I will not offer an amendment, in view of the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

Amendment by Mr. MADDEN: Page 10, strike out paragraph 14.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that when the Government enters into a contract with an individual or a corporation it is bound by the terms of the contract. It ought not to have the right to modify a contract whenever it pleased any more than either one of the contracting parties, individuals, or corporations in a contract between themselves.

Mr. SIMS. It is by consent of the contracting party.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not say so.

Mr. SIMS. That is what it means.

Mr. MADDEN. It says:

To amend or modify any contract made by him pursuant to the provisions of this act so as to include therein any terms or conditions which it would have been lawful to include in such contract at the time of the making thereof.

Mr. SIMS. The first contract is a voluntary act, and the amendment is by mutual consent.

Mr. MADDEN. All contracts are voluntary acts. Does the gentleman presume to say that if he entered into a contract with me to do something that I have the power to modify the contract whenever I please?

Mr. SIMS. You can not do it—the Government can not do it—without paying due compensation.

Mr. MADDEN. This does not make any such provision.

Mr. SIMS. It does not have to do it. That is the general law of the whole country, and you can not vary a contract unless you pay damage.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think the Government should have the right to modify a contract any more than an individual.

Mr. SIMS. In time of war we give the Government a great many privileges that we do not give individuals.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman presume to say that an individual that enters into a contract with the Government has any right to modify it?

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Would not the condition be met by changing the section so as to read: "To amend or modify by agreement any contract made by him"?

Mr. MADDEN. That would be all right, but neither contracting party should have the right to modify a contract without the consent of the other.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I was going to suggest that the Government contracts under the general law are made subject to change at the Government's will; the Court of Claims has considered many such cases, and invariably held that the contractor is entitled to increased compensation and any damages he sustained. The gentleman's view of the paragraph is correct; it gives the Government the right to change it without the consent of the contractor.

Mr. SIMS. But the Government has to pay damages. It ought not to be left in a loose way, as the gentleman from Illinois proposes. The Government should have the right to change it, if it was lawful to include it in such contracts; that is, to make a new one covered by the law and paying such damages as may be incurred.

Mr. MADDEN. Why not write that into the law?

Mr. SIMS. You do not have to write it into the law.

Mr. MADDEN. If the other party suffers damages——

Mr. SIMS. The Constitution gives him the right to compensation.

Mr. MADDEN. But he has to go into the Court of Claims to get it.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; if they do not pay him.

Mr. MADDEN. Sometimes they don't get them there.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, millions of dollars.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield. As I construe the language in the latter part of the paragraph it says "to include therein any terms or conditions it would have been lawful to include in such contract at the time of making thereof." That is a limitation. In other words, even by agreement between the governmental authorities and the private owner there can not be put into it a proposition beyond the scope of this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I realize that. The point I want to impress on the committee is that there ought not to be any contract modified without the consent of both parties to the contract.

Mr. SIMS. That is all right between private parties, but not between the Government and contractors in a time of war.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no reason why the Government of the United States should be permitted to confiscate the private property of a citizen by changing a contract.

Mr. SIMS. The Government could not do it.

Mr. MADDEN. Why force a man to go into the courts to enforce his constitutional rights?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that subsection 14 would not give the President the right to put into this contract any matter which he was not authorized to contract about in this bill, but if his contract should be made with an individual not covering all the matters about which he could contract in the bill and then the President sought to enlarge the terms of the contract, do not you in so many words say to the President that he would have the right to enlarge the terms of the contract so as to cover all purposes and provisions of this bill without consulting, if you please, the other party to the contract? Now, the only limitation here is that the President, turning back to section 2, the President is hereby authorized and empowered to do what? To amend or modify any contract made by him pursuant to the provisions of this act so as to include therein any terms or conditions which it would have been lawful to include in such contract at the time of the making thereof. Now, the only limitation upon the President in this language is the limitation upon the authority granted him by this act and if the original contract was not as broad as the act, whether the taking over of the property at the time included in the contract a matter which might have been included or not; whether the other party agrees to it or not the President could compel him under this language to agree to it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think I follow the reasoning of the gentleman from Mississippi. Ordinarily I would be in sympathy with the argument he is making, but if I understand correctly the theory of this bill the only reason that it is brought in here is purely and simply as a war proposition. Now, if that be the correct theory upon which we are proceeding if it were peace times there are not many men in this House who would vote for the bill. Now, suppose they fail to reach an agreement. Suppose the other party does not agree but refuses to agree, then upon the theory of this bill is the Government to be held up in its war operations, if it be a war bill, and that is the theory upon which I support it——

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely not.

Mr. MADDEN. If the other party does not agree——

Mr. SISSON. There would be no contract except as he may seek——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. He would have the right to go into an agreement, but if you put into this bill a requirement that the second party must agree to the proposal of the Government to amend this contract, make that the condition precedent before such an amendment can be made, are not you defeating the very theory upon which we are supporting this very remarkable bill?

Mr. SISSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yielded to the gentleman in order that I might get his view, and I hope if I have to have a little additional time I may get it. Now, I agree absolutely that the power ought to be exerted under this bill, owing to the fact it is for the purpose of taking powers the Government needs irrespective of whether the man owning the power is willing to let him have it or not.

That is, the Government would not be held up, that it shall not be mulcted, and that the Government shall not be called upon to pay too much and enter into too hard a bargain; all of that ought to be contained in this bill, but after the Government shall have entered into a contract I do not believe that the Government then should have any more power than the Government has under subsection 12, where, under subsection 12, when we originally take over the property in the event the parties can not agree under subsection 12, there is a complete remedy given to both parties. Now, the President selects one arbitrator, the operator the second, and so on. Now, after the contract is entered into and the property taken over and the man then surrenders control of his property, feeling at the time that the contract is going to be carried out, I do feel that he ought to have some greater protection other than that, not the President, because it is going to be the man whom the President appoints—the man whom the President appoints is going to be the man the President is going to follow. Now, in practical operation of the Government we know that is exactly what happens. The President, the Commander in Chief of the Army, has the right to pardon whom he pleases, and yet it does not matter how outrageously a man may have acted in the Army in reference to some young soldier, they are nearly always referred back to the original parties with reference to military discipline, and it comes up through all the channels, and the President might frequently do a great injustice to a soldier, and the excuse is war times. Now, just so here great injustice may be done to private individuals. Now, if the private individual enters into a contract there ought to be some protection to him before there should be arbitrary action by some man.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman think it is sufficient protection to the contractor that he has the right of compensation for any damage he may have sustained by reason of the change?

Mr. SISSON. No, sir; I do not believe, although——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have five additional minutes.

Mr. SISSON. I may not use all of the five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee that the gentleman from Mississippi have five minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is not the gentleman familiar with the fact that every Government contract has in it a provision that the Government shall have the right to alter, amend, or change at any time?

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman understands these things come before the committee of which I am a member more frequently than other committees. If the gentleman will permit me one moment, that is not the contract we are talking about here. This is the law. Under the law we authorize all these contracts in reference to public buildings, and the law provides that the Government shall contract with the contractor just as other people contract, and the Government, in order to protect itself, puts into the contract itself this agreement with the man. Here you are giving the Government the right not to enter into a contract with the man, but that the Government may alter, change, or amend, and he enters into a contract with nothing said about it, and the President has the absolute power, or those under him, to change the contract at will, so far as it does not exceed the authority of this bill.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if this is not exactly the same as though such a term were incorporated in the contract? It simply protects the Government against the case where some negligent official would fail to put that term in the contract.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think it is equal in force and effect to merely putting it in the contract, because you say the Government shall have the right to change, annul, and abrogate the contract. For example, the most noted modification lately was a modification of the contract with reference to the cantonments of the country. They had the right to do it. Up to the time it was modified the Government made an arrangement through the Secretary of War that was satisfactory.

Mr. SIMS. Does not the gentleman see that this section provides that the President may amend or modify any contract made by him pursuant to the provisions of this act? Of course, when he makes a contract this provision will be a part of the contract.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, no.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, yes; it will.

Mr. SISSON. Not necessarily.

Mr. SIMS. He makes it pursuant to the provisions of this act so as to include therein the terms and conditions which would have been lawful to include under such contract at the time of the making thereof.

Mr. SISSON. I do not yield any further.

Mr. SIMS. Every contract will have this——

Mr. SISSON. Do not take it out of my time.

Now, I want to say to my friend that if I had a factory that was manufacturing certain articles mentioned in this bill as manufactured articles that you expect to manufacture when you take over the plant, and I agree with the Government they might take it over and manufacture those particular things I was manufacturing, it would be in accordance with this act. But within a few months afterwards they may endeavor to change the whole of my factory and put it into the manufacture of a line of industry that I know nothing about, and that I myself would not have permitted to be done if I could have avoided it in the original contract that I entered into freely and voluntarily; and then they take my factory over and operate it five years after the war is over, and my property may be literally destroyed.

You have simply given me a lawsuit, the right of complaint against the Government, at the end of five years, by going into the Court of Claims, and, by the way, to go into the Court of Claims Congress has got to authorize it. The mere fact that you leave him the right to sue is frequently as hurtful to him as taking the right away from him entirely.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman think it takes an act of Congress to go into the Court of Claims in order for a party to get relief from the Government? No doubt the gentleman remembers the Annapolis contract. There, without an act of Congress, they got an allowance of $80,000.

Mr. SIMS. How can anybody be hurt by it?

Mr. SISSON. By reason of the fact that you permit a little person appointed by the President at any time, in accordance with his wish or will, to change the terms of the contract in which my property may be involved.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SIMS. Let the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] go ahead, and then I will move to rise.

Mr. ESCH. As bearing on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the subsection, I wish to read from the testimony. The witness was Mr. Gans, the draftsman of the bill:

Mr. ESCH. On line 7, page 10, subsection 14, there seems to be a rather unusual provision in legislation. It reads:

"To amend or modify any contract made by him pursuant to the provisions of this act so as to include therein any terms or conditions which it would have been lawful to include in such contract at the time of the making thereof."

Mr. GANS. I had some doubt about that provision when I drew it, but I was drawing the bill in consultation with a number of people, and there were some among them who had the idea that the power to make a contract, unless there was a power to amend or modify, might be too rigid, and that the President or the agent through whom he operated would be bound by the terms of the contract and could not agree to the ordinary amendments and modifications that the development of the situation might require, and therefore, in deference to that opinion, this provision was inserted. My own opinion is that it doesn't provide for anything that wouldn't be accomplished without it.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, it wouldn't materially injure the purpose of the bill if it were stricken out?

Mr. GANS. Not at all, sir, in my opinion.

Mr. SISSON. Let it go out, then.

Mr. SIMS. Strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask that section 3, which is a very short one, be read, and then I will move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the President may exercise the power and authority hereby vested in him and expend the moneys herein and hereafter appropriated, through such officers, agents, or agencies as he shall create or designate from time to time, may require any such officers, agents, or agencies to perform the duties which he shall impose upon them, and fix the reasonable compensation for the performance of such services. But no official or employee of the United States shall receive any additional compensation for such services except as is now permitted by law.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. FOSTER as Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. HOUSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12776) to provide further for the national security and defense and for the more effective prosecution of the war by furnishing means for the better utilization of the existing sources of electrical and mechanical power and for the development of new sources of such power, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DRANE, indefinitely, on account of sickness; and

To Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas, for two days, on account of sickness.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12714. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919;

H. R. 11259. An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of those ores, metals, and minerals which have formerly been largely imported, or of which there is or may be an inadequate supply; and

H. J. Res. 333. Joint resolution to aid in combating "Spanish influenza" and other communicable diseases.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills and joint resolution:

H. R. 12714. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919;

H. R. 11259. An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of those ores, metals, and minerals which have formerly been largely imported or of which there is or may be an inadequate supply; and

H. J. Res. 333. Joint resolution to aid in combating "Spanish influenza" and other communicable diseases.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent to address the House to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, for 30 minutes on war activities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, for 30 minutes on war activities. Is there objection?

Mr. LUNN. I might add that that is the first request of this kind I have ever made.

Mr. GILLETT. Reserving the right to object, I think it ought to wait until after this bill is disposed of.

Mr. SIMS. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts about that. I am not so much concerned about this speech, but I am anxious lest others should make similar requests. Of course, I would be delighted to have the gentleman from New York make his speech.

Mr. LUNN. Then I will amend that by asking that I may have that privilege immediately after the conclusion of action on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York modifies his request by providing that it shall apply after the conclusion of the pending bill.

Mr. LUNN. May I change the request and make it 15 minutes to-morrow? I have not made a request like that before to the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman make that request for to-morrow?

Mr. LUNN. Yes; for to-morrow.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman will put his request, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York modifies his request and asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, on account of this speech, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, October 1, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting copy of a bill designed to amend Paragraph I of section 302 of the soldiers and sailors' civil relief act (H. Doc. No. 1310); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Attorney General, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Department of Justice (H. Doc. No. 1311); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting the draft of an item of legislation to authorize the requisitioning of lands, including buildings thereon, or the temporary use thereof, required for hospital purposes (H. Doc. No. 1312); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BOOHER: A bill (H. R. 13030) granting an increase of pension to John H. Steele; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 13031) granting an increase of pension to George A. Spofford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD: A bill (H. R. 13032) granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Weeks; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13033) granting a pension to Herman Lazarus; to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, October 1, 1918.

(Legislative day of Monday, September 30, 1918.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon.

RELIEF OF JOHN CHICK.

Mr. DREW. Mr. President, I should like to ask unanimous consent to call up a bill on the calendar, the bill (S. 3985) for the relief of John Chick.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Henderson	New	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Smoot
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sterling

Gronna	Martin, Ky.	Shields	Williams
Gulon	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott
Hale	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Hardwick	Nelson	Smith, Md.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is temporarily detained from the Chamber on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, which will be read.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 3985) for the relief of John Chick, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, John Chick, late of Company K, Third Regiment United States Artillery, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 2d day of August, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act, and no pay nor bounty shall become due or payable by virtue thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 284).

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the address delivered by the President of the United States to the Senate yesterday on the question of suffrage be made a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SIMS, Mr. FERRIS, Mr. LEVER, Mr. ESCH, Mr. SINNOTT, and Mr. HAUGEN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 334) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of October, 1918, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

A bill and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4967) granting an increase of pension to Aaron H. Perry (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GORE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 178) to make citizenship of the United States a prerequisite to a vote for Senators or Representatives in Congress of the United States or for electors for President and Vice President of the United States; to the Comtitee on Pensions.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. GORE submitted five amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 285).

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent to present a conference report on House bill 11945, the food-production bill. I will not ask for its consideration at this moment. I suggest that the report be printed. I want to try to bring it up to-day if I can. We have agreed upon everything except the rents amendment, and on that we have reached a disagreement. I shall at the proper time move to accept the report and further insist upon the rent amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the report will be printed and lie on the table.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 14, 17, 20, 29, and 30.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 9, 11, 12, 16, 19, 22, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 31, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language and figures stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following: "market news service on grain, hay, feeds, and seeds, $150,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15a, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language and the figures stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following: "food and fertilizer surveys of the United States, $300,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the Senate amendment insert "$1,955,608"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "grape sirup" and insert in lieu thereof "grape sirups"; and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the language stricken out by the Senate amendment and insert the following language after the word "thereof" in the restored language on page 10, line 7: "which are now or heretofore have been used for such purposes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendment of the Senate numbered 28.

T. P. GORE,
E. D. SMITH,
HOKE SMITH,
JOSEPH I. FRANCE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. F. LEVER,
GORDON LEE,
E. S. CANDLER,
G. N. HAUGEN,
J. C. MCLAUGHLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 200) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I very much fear that "a little group of wilful men" are about to defeat a measure which the President of the United States has declared in all the richness of his vocabulary and with all the emphasis which he could command is vitally necessary for the successful prosecution of the war.

It is a strange spectacle, Mr. President, to me, and I address myself mainly to my brother Senators upon the other side of the Chamber. You are about to flout, disparage, repudiate, and humiliate your President. I sincerely hope that there will not fall upon you that severe condemnation which was at a former time visited upon another "little group of wilful men" who desired nothing more than an opportunity to amend a measure that was then before the Senate.

You are driven to one of two positions. You either refuse to accept the solemn declaration of the President that the passage of this joint resolution is vitally necessary to the prosecution of the war, or you choose to defeat the right of women in this country to vote rather than to aid him in the great conflict in which he is engaged. You refuse to give to him an instrumentality which he has asserted to you with the utmost seriousness is necessary to enable him to accomplish the great purposes he has in view.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for a question only.

Mr. HARDWICK. A question only. The Senator is an advocate of this proposition. Does he regard it as a war measure in itself?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I will come to that question a little later. I intend to state my position with regard to the matter with the utmost frankness, but I am now addressing myself to men most of whom I have heard declare over and over again that whatever the President regarded as essential and necessary to the prosecution of the war they would give him, without regard to their own conclusions on the subject. I have heard, and all of you have heard, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] lecture those of us who now and then insisted we had a right to use our own consciences and our own judgment with regard to measures that were pending before Congress, saying that when the President, who was not only your leader but our leader in the great struggle that is now in progress, declared any proposal or any legislation was necessary to enable him to successfully carry forward his work you would vote for it, that you would accept his judgment. I have heard the senior Senator from Mississippi hour after hour denounce those who undertook to assert their own judgment. Why does he not accept the judgment of the President now at this vital moment? Why does he repudiate him now if he was willing to accept him then without inquiry?

I have heard my dear friend, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] time after time, in measures of the utmost importance, declare with all the fervor of his eloquence that we had no right to question the necessity of a particular enactment if the President told us that it was necessary for the successful prosecution of the war. I listened last night to the very clear and lucid statement of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. It has not been long since I listened to him, standing where the Senator from North Carolina now sits, when the Senate had under consideration a bill which bears the name of the great Senator from North Carolina, as I recollect it, declare that he intended to vote for it simply because the President had declared that it was necessary that he should have the unbridled power conferred upon him in that bill for the successful prosecution of the war.

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, I think the Senator is not quite correct in that statement. I did not state that that was simply the reason why I would vote for that measure. I undertook in that address to give other reasons why I should vote for it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Kentucky to accept without question the judgment of the President upon that subject. I was not present when the bill which transferred the telegraph and telephone companies to the possession of the President was considered. It was understood when I left Washington for a very brief visit to my home that there would be given an opportunity on the part of those of us who questioned the exercise of that power to inquire into its necessity. I am told—I have it only upon hearsay—that the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, who yesterday lifted up his voice in those mellifluous and eloquent phrases which would deceive the very elect, insisted then that there should be no inquiry into the necessity of taking over the telegraph and the telephone companies; that it had been asserted by the President and those who were expressing his views that it was necessary that these facilities should come into the possession of the Government, and that it was the duty of Congress, without any inquiry, without investigation, without a word of testimony, save the declaration of the Executive, to transfer to him that great power. Why is the Senator from South Carolina now questioning the wisdom of the President? Why is he now saying that woman suffrage, as contemplated by the adoption of this joint resolution, is not necessary to the successful prosecution of the war?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, "the Senator from South Carolina" certainly would not insult the intelligence of this body by saying that a temporary surrender of a power that belongs to the people, in order to win the war, and that we may get back as soon as the war is over, is on all fours with an attempt to change the perpetual and fundamental form of our Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not asserting any parallel between the two instances. I am asserting that in everything else, save woman suffrage, so far as it has developed in the legislation since the war began, the great majority of the Senate has been willing to accept, and has accepted implicitly, the judgment and the determination of the President that a particular thing was necessary in order vigorously, energetically, and successfully to bring this war to an end and to compass the nations of the earth after the conflict shall cease. It matters not what the character of the question may be, you either accept his view of it or you repudiate it. If you repudiate it, and he thereby is unable to bring the war to an end, to accomplish the peace which he hopes to accomplish and establish the conditions throughout the world that he hopes to establish, you are responsible for his failure in that regard.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the President may deal kindly and leniently with those who are refusing to remove this obstacle which stands in his way. It has not been very long since the President retired the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] from public life. Why? Because he refused at all times to obey the commands which were issued for his direction. The junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] suffered the same fate. How do you hope to escape? Mr. President, my Democratic friends are either proceeding upon the hypothesis that the President is insincere or that they may be able to secure an immunity from him that these other unfortunate aspirants for office failed to secure.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Iowa seems to be oblivious of the fact that this is not the first time in the history of the world that the voice of the prophet has not been heard in the wilderness. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINS. Quite true. The voice of the prophet was heard in the wilderness very clearly and obeyed implicitly until he spoke in behalf of humanity, until he spoke in favor of the enfranchisement of one-half of the population of the United States. It was only then, may I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota, that the voice was lost, or at least that it was not heeded.

But what shall I say to my associates upon this side of the Chamber? It has been the distinguishing characteristic of the minority leader of the Senate that he was always ready to stand by the President in the prosecution of the war. I do not say that upon every occasion he has abdicated his own judgment, but the one cry has been, "Let us do whatever the President believes ought to be done in order to carry on the conflict successfully and to bring the United States into that high position of honor which we hope she will occupy at the end of the war."

I have not escaped the criticism of my political associates from time to time, because I have insisted that when a proposal was made for the prosecution of the war it was for me to determine whether it ought to be accepted or rejected. I, together with some other Senators, whose names I will not mention, have been crucified on every cross in America because we would not yield our judgment as legislators, and I am amazed at our leader, not only for political reasons—those are unworthy of consideration, although he might bear them in mind, possibly, now and then—I have been amazed that our political leader in the Senate does not sense the situation and do what he can do toward the accomplishment of this great purpose.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is the only—I will not say "the only," but he is almost the only logical and consistent Senator upon the other side of the Chamber; he has maintained the attitude which he now insists upon from the beginning; but how the rest of you, or most of the rest of you, will square what you are about to do with your protestations and assertions in the past I am utterly unable to perceive.

Now, I answer the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. I do not put my support of the resolution for woman suffrage on the ground that it is a war measure. I have been for woman suffrage, expending in its behalf all the energies that I had for more than a quarter of a century. It is a little abhorrent to me, I will confess, to hear it said that women ought to be given the right to vote because a war is in progress. I have no doubt that their enfranchisement will help to win the war, but they are entitled to suffrage without regard to the existence of war. They are entitled to the suffrage because, until it is given to them, this is not a perfect republic; until they are given the power to select representatives who shall make or help to make their laws and help to execute them this is not a true democracy. I am for this resolution because I believe that the Government of the future will be a wiser and better and juster government if women vote than if they are excluded from the vote, as they have been heretofore.

It is a strange thing to me—and now I address myself to both sides, all sides, and from the very depths of my heart—that 33 or 34 men who happen to be for the time being Senators of the United States are about, if appearances indicate the outcome, to deny to the people of the United States the opportunity to determine for themselves whether or not they desire the Constitution to be amended in this respect. What a situation! More than one-half, I am sure, of all of the men of the United States are in favor of submitting this resolution to the States for ratification or rejection; a very large and overwhelming proportion of the women are in favor of submitting it; the House of Representatives by a two-thirds majority has declared for its submission; the sentiment in its favor is everywhere; and now 33 men out of 100,000,000 people are about to arrogate to themselves the privilege and the power of preventing the electors throughout the country from expressing their judgment with regard to woman suffrage. It is a responsibility that I would not want to bear.

I know that it is according to the letter of the Constitution. Our forefathers naturally were somewhat afraid of the people, and they formulated, and there was adopted, a Constitution that was extremely difficult to amend. I believe that the Constitution should not be amended except after full consideration and after grave and serious reflection; but I do not believe that 33 men in the Senate of the United States should have the right to say that an amendment should not be submited to the people for such disposition among them as they might see fit to make of it. We will not have a true democracy until that part of the Constitution is amended as well as the part now proposed to be amended.

I do not wonder that the President stands here and appeals with all his earnestness and with all his heart to put him in a position where he can go before the world and say that if the letter of our Government requires two-thirds majority in the Senate before an amendment to the Constitution is proposed, at least the Senate was democratic enough, liberal enough, and generous enough to submit a proposal that has the support of so large a proportion of our people.

So far as I am concerned, if I were opposed to woman suffrage I would vote to submit this resolution to the people. I think whenever there is a fair and reasonable sentiment or demand for the submission of a constitutional amendment that Senators ought not to allow their individual convictions to prevent the submission to our sovereigns of a proposed change in the fundamental charter of the country. We are not the custodians of the Constitution; we did not make the Constitution; and Congress ought to have nothing to do, logically speaking, with amendments to the Constitution. Amendments ought to be initiated either by the States whose agreement formed the Consitution or by a petition of the people themselves, and I think both courses should be permitted under the law.

I sincerely hope that those Senators who value Republican or Democratic principles, who believe that this is, or at least ought to be, a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people, will not stand in the way of doing this just and righteous thing.

Mr. President, the only argument which I have heard upon the other side of the question that has impressed me at all is the argument made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], which is that from the beginning the States were intended to have complete authority over the qualifications of the voters who were to vote either for Members of Congress, the President, or State officers, and that the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution is the only disregard of what he calls a fundamental compact lying beneath the Constitution itself. I disagree wholly with that view. It is not true, from my standpoint, that the Constitution intended that that subject should always remain at the disposal of the States. Why, the very first thing the Constitution did was to declare that—

> The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

Here is an explicit direction with regard to the qualifications of voters in the States for Members of the House of Representatives. It is quite true that it is not complete, it is not specific, it is not in detail; but it indicates that the framers of the Constitution never dreamed of allowing the States under all circumstances to decide what should be the qualifications of voters for Members of the House.

This same provision was carried forward into the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, when Senators were made elective by the people instead of by the legislatures; and when we enacted the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution we entered the subject again.

The first section of the fourteenth amendment has been very much quoted, and is very well known; but the second section is one upon which we ought to dwell before we concede that this is a subject which should be confined to the legislation or decision of the State. That section reads in this way:

> Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

Here is a direct and—if it were enforced—a most powerful and influential interference with the power of the State to deal with this subject without interference upon the part of the General Government. Every naturalization law which we have passed concerns and governs in a measure the suffrage in the States, and the right to legislate upon naturalization, and the terms upon which aliens may become citizens of this country, is complete. It has no limit whatever. It is reposed entirely in the Congress of the United States.

That is true, likewise, of our legislation respecting Indians. How do Indians get their right to vote? Will it be said that notwithstanding the legislation of Congress the States can deprive an Indian of the vote who, under our treaties with him or with his tribe, and our legislation made pursuant to them, has had the right to vote? Do you mean to say that the States can take away or alter or modify the privilege that is thus given?

It is all wrong to assume that the Federal Government has surrendered its authority to regulate and control the qualifications of voters in the various States. Logically speaking, and if I had my way about it, if I could bring about just that condition which I most desire, I would say that with regard to the qualifications of voters for Members of Congress, for Senators, or for electors, and such other elective Federal offices as we may make in the future, if we make any, Congress should not only declare negatively who should not be excluded, but should declare affirmatively who should be admitted to vote. In other words, Congress should prescribe the qualifications.

I agree that, following this logical development of our system, the States should be permitted to determine the qualifications of the voters for State or local officers. I would have no objection in the world to that; but that is utterly impracticable. We can not hold two elections. The people have tried that plan, and have found it too inconvenient and too expensive to be followed; and therefore we are driven to the alternative. We must either allow the States to declare the qualifications for voters for Members of Congress and the President of the United States or we must undertake, in this negative way at least, to interfere with the qualifications of voters for State officers. The latter is the better way. The latter collides less frequently and less injuriously with the established practices of the people; and I, for one, have no hesitation whatever in going a very little way in that direction—and this joint resolution does not go a great way. It is negative, pure and simple.

If I had my way, I would prescribe the qualifications for the voters for Members of the House, the Senate, and the President; but this joint resolution does not propose that. It asks only the little thing that the States, in determining the qualifications of their voters, shall not discriminate against persons on account of sex. It is entirely compatible with the theory of our Constitution. It is entirely consistent and harmonious with the legislation which we have from time to time adopted with regard to suffrage and the right to vote.

Mr. President, I listened with tremendous interest to the speech made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and I can not close what I am about to say without referring to it. He denounced in his terrific way, first, the women who lobby; second, the so-called militants who sought to bring their influence to bear upon the situation in rather a more forcible and decisive method than was employed by the national association.

So far as representations are concerned, so far as so-called lobbying is concerned, I marvel that the women have been as patient and forbearing as they have been. I think they have a God-given right to swarm about this Capitol, presenting not only to Members of Congress but to everyone else the injustice that is inflicted upon them and insisting upon the repair of that injustice. I do not set any limit to the energy and the persistence and the enthusiasm of women who are engaged in attempting to secure the right to participate in the affairs of a Government whose laws control and compel them.

So far as the militants are concerned, I did not believe in the campaign they were pursuing; but the only reason which led me to doubt or to disapprove it was because I did not think that it was the most effective and persuasive way in which to proceed. I did not believe, either, as I told them many, many times, that they ought to attempt to coerce the President of the United States into bringing his influence to bear upon Members of Congress. I do not believe in that any more now than I have believed in it throughout this administration. I have always protested against it, and if I maintain my senses and keep my reason I always shall protest against it.

But that was simply a question for them to determine; and if they thought that in accordance with the established custom the President should bring his influence to bear more effectively and emphatically than he had, they had a perfect right to burn his message; they had a perfect right to carry banners in Lafayette Park, in front of the White House, or anywhere else; they had a perfect right to bring their banners into the Capitol and display them with all the force and vigor which they could command. I did not agree with them; but they also were making a campaign for an inestimable and a fundamental right.

What would you have done, men, if you had been deprived of the right to vote? What would you have done if you had been deprived of the right of representation? Have the militants done anything worse than the revolutionary forces who gathered about the tea chests and threw them into the sea, and thereby lit the fires of a revolution which emancipated the whole world? Those men were criminals, according to the view of the Senator from Missouri. They did not obey the law; and therefore, according to his logic, they were unfit to become makers of law.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. REED. Of course, the Senator recognizes the fact that the gentlemen who constituted the Boston tea party were in a state of rebellion. It was their purpose to overthrow the Government and set up a new form of Government. Does the Senator put the ladies in that catalogue, and if not——

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Missouri is historically incorrect. The proposition to set up an independent government did not arise for some little time after the Boston tea party.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; the Senator will agree with me, that the Boston tea party were a band of rebels who had not yet declared their independence, but were getting ready to do it. They had not made war on King George, but intended to do it. Surely the Senator does not mean that these dear ladies would really start a rebellion in the United States?

Mr. CUMMINS. I quite agree that the Boston incident was more vigorous than anything that has occurred in Washington; but I still want to be historically correct. The men of Boston who organized and carried out that protest against the taxes which had been levied upon the colonies were not rebels. They still believed that the King and Parliament would give to them the right of representation in the passage of laws which affected them and particularly the passage of laws which imposed taxes upon them. It was not until much later that the continued resistance of the King and Parliament to their just demands led to the proposal to organize an independent government.

Mr. REED. Are we to understand, pursuing the parallel of the Senator, that if we do not yield and give the ladies the right of suffrage they will set up an independent government?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know what they would do. I do not think that is so improbable. You sneer about women voting, but why could they not run this Government as well as we can? I think sometimes if they could not do it better than we are doing it they have but little right to participation, because although they may not have established to the satisfaction of all Senators their competency to make laws and execute them, we have established very clearly to the world our partial incompetency to make laws and execute them. I do not say that we do not make many just laws and that we do not carry into effect many high, exalted principles, but we at least can not claim exemption from radical and sometimes fatal mistakes.

I recur to the militants. I do not believe they committed any crime; and while I had not one particle of sympathy with the manner in which they were conducting their campaign, I think their arrest and imprisonment and the treatment which they received while in confinement are a disgrace to the civilized world, and much the more a disgrace to the United States, which assums to lead the civilized world in humane endeavor. They disturbed nobody save that disturbance which is common to the carrying forward of all propaganda by those who are intensely and vitally interested in it. I wish they had not done it, but I am not to be the judge of their methods so long as they confine themselves to those acts and to those words which are fairly directed to the accomplishment of their purposes. I can not accept the conclusion that because these women burned a message in Lafayette Park or because they carried banners upon the streets in Washington therefore they are criminals and therefore they are unfit to become participants with us in the affairs of the Republic.

This movement has been in progress for 40 years. It is not confined to any particular organization of women. I understand that by far the greater organization is the one whose activities were so beautifully portrayed in the eloquent address of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]; but it is not even a nation-wide movement; it is a world-wide movement. If it were true that there have been excesses here and there in the conduct of the campaign, it is more than illogical, it is absurd, for anyone to contend that, therefore, the movement should fail and that therefore it is unjust and unfair and unwise to extend to the women of the land that privilege which we have monopolized for ourselves these many years.

Mr. President, we may be defeated now. These 33 or 34 men may assume the responsibility of denying to the millions of America the right to pass upon this fundamental advance in government. But they can no more arrest the onward sweep of this ocean of intelligence and sea of justice than though they were to attempt to force back the tides of the sea with their feeble hands. They may just now be able possibly to disappoint these millions of loyal, intelligent, God-fearing women, but they will not be able to disappoint them long.

Just a year or two ago the Senate could command only a majority for woman suffrage, and barely that. It now commands within one or two votes two-thirds of its membership. If that does not teach this "little group of willful men" something of the future, if it does not warn them of the advancing tide of public sentiment, nothing could admonish them.

Mr. President, we vote upon a question as vital as any which commanded the interest and the thought of our forefathers when they framed the Constitution under which we have lived so happily for more than a hundred years; and I can only hope that each vote may be cast remembering that into the hands of that vote is committed the welfare of the greatest country upon earth and justice to one-half of its hundred millions of people.

Mr. MARTIN of Kentucky. Mr. President, the question under discussion has never been at issue in my State and as a consequence my information on its merits has been obtained mostly through the able debate of the subject on the floor of the Senate.

I have reached the conclusion that I should support the resolution on a ground entirely apart from consideration of the merits of the proposition to enfranchise the women. I am led to this conclusion because of the provision of Article V of the Constitution, to the effect that "the Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution," and so forth.

The question arises as to what are the conditions which should move the Congress to permit the people through the legislative bodies of the various States to consider a change in their organic law.

Certainly amendments might be proposed so frivolous in character or so contrary to the spirit of our institutions as to warrant a refusal upon the part of the Congress to even extend the opportunity for action by the States.

It can not be maintained, however, that this resolution before the Senate is either frivolous or offends the principles of our form of government.

The claim of the right of suffrage by thousands of patriotic and intelligent women, their insistent demand for it, the opinion of two-thirds of the Members of the House that they should have it, the advocacy of it by approximately 60 Members of this body, and the plea of the President that it should be granted as a war measure argue to my mind that the proposal is one of such grave moment as that the Senate should "deem it necessary" within the spirit of Article V to submit it to the States.

The debate on the floor of the Senate has been to me interesting and enlightening. I acknowledge the force of the strong reasoning of those who advocate the merits of suffrage on the ground that it is a right due the female sex, and a sentimental chord of my nature responds when I hear the plea of my colleagues, principally from the South, who are apprehensive that the exercise of the franchise by our women will result in depriving them of many of their womanly attributes, lessen their attractions, and place upon them a responsibility they do not wish. My own belief is that the transition of the women into a voting population would not create such a radical and revolutionary change as to work an upheaval of social conditions; likely their chief interest, as now, would still be in the home and home life; that active attention would not be given to matters political, except when social and moral life is directly affected by the questions that may be at issue.

The Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, upon the floor of the Senate yesterday, urged this measure as vital to the solution of the great problems which must be settled when the war is over, advocated it as a war measure, and asked that the executive tasks of this war resting on him be lightened by placing in his hands instruments which he is not now able to employ.

The President's deep concern about this question, his request for favorable action, and the strong and intelligent public opinion behind the measure persuade me that loyalty to our chieftain and fair consideration of the claim of right to have the States pass upon the subject demand that the people should be given the right to ratify or reject the proposal.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, for two days the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] constantly threw out suggestions to the Republican side of the Senate that so long as the Republicans furnished two-thirds of their membership in favor of this resolution it was in the interest of the Republican Party that the resolution be defeated, and carried with it the implied intimation that if there were any Republicans who were in doubt as to how they should vote upon this measure, Republicans who had not committed themselves in favor of it, it was to their political advantage to resolve that doubt against the measure and vote against it.

Mr. President, that intimation has had no effect upon this side of the aisle, but I am very sorry that it was made, because there should be no politics in the consideration of this question at this time.

Mr. President, what I shall have to say I do not suppose will have the slightest effect upon any Senator, so far as his vote is concerned. So far as the other side of the aisle is concerned, if the appeal of the distinguished leader of their party, the President of the United States, could not affect those who intended to vote against this measure, then no speech of any Senator, Republican or Democrat, could affect it.

But I do believe it proper, Mr. President, before the vote is taken that a statement of the exact situation should be made for the RECORD.

In the first place, upon the other side of the aisle those who vote against this measure do so upon one of two grounds, either that they are not willing to do everything to help win the war, or else they do not believe their leader, the President, when he says that the passage of this measure is necessary to help win the war. It is unthinkable that any Senator is not willing to do everything that he thinks is necessary to win the war. So it follows that every Democratic vote against this measure to-day will be because they do not believe the President of the United States when he solemnly tells them that the passage of this measure is necessary to help win the war.

But, Mr. President, there is another consideration to which I wish very briefly to refer. We constantly hear it said, and we shall hear it said more frequently between now and November, that the success of the Democratic Party is essential to the successful prosecution of the war. I hold in my hand a pamphlet bearing the imprint of the Democratic national committee, a pamphlet signed by W. D. Jamieson, assistant treasurer of the Democratic national committee, and I wish to quote from this phamphlet one paragraph, as follows:

> The election of a Republican Congress in November would be viewed as a defeat for President Wilson by our allies, and particularly by our enemies. It would be viewed in Germany as a proof of their unwarranted claim that our country is not behind our war President. It would be a source of comfort and elation to the Kaiser and his cohorts.

Mr. President, I shall not at this time even attempt to characterize that statement as it ought to be characterized, to condemn that statement as it ought to be condemned and will be condemned throughout the United States by every loyal American, regardless of his political affiliations. I do not believe that that statement, coming from the Democratic national committee, finds indorsement upon the other side of the aisle. Democrats in the Senate know better than that; but, Mr. President, it is fair to assume that upon the Democratic side of the aisle those Members should feel that a continuance of Democratic control in the Senate and in the House would be better for the country in the prosecution of the war. That is a fair subject for debate; that is a subject that will be debated in the campaign that is soon to come upon us.

But, Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact now that any Democrat who believes that the Democratic Party should succeed in the fall elections, if he does believe it, is in duty bound to vote for this joint resolution to-day. Why do I say that? The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] the other day made the statement which I now quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> You, Senator SMOOT, pledged them 33 votes, so that they would induce the Democratic members of the committee to get this bill on the floor and you could kill it, and then you could make campaign material out of it in the Western States. You knew that through that action you could carry Montana and Colorado and that you could probably carry the Senate. You know that. You, from a suffrage State, know that if you kill this amendment by a Democratic vote, giving one-half of the two-thirds yourselves and one less than half of two-thirds on this side, you will sweep those States with the women's votes.

That is the statement of the Senator from Nevada, and there is no Senator who is better qualified to speak of conditions in those States or who knows them better than does the Senator from Nevada. He might have added—but I think he did not add through courtesy to his colleague—Nevada to the States of Montana and Colorado. I think the Senator from Nevada is mistaken, however, that the defeat of this amendment will in itself result in the sweeping of those States by the Republicans. Mr. President, the Republicans in the Senate will make their record and furnish more than the two-thirds vote that is necessary. In the House of Representatives, out of 214 Republicans, there were only 33 Republican votes against this joint resolution, while the Democrats furnished but a bare majority for it.

But, now, what I am coming to is this: Is there any Democratic Senator who believes sincerely that the success of the Democratic Party in November is essential to the most efficient prosecution of the war? If there is, how can that Democrat vote against this joint resolution in the face of the statement of the Senator from Nevada that the defeat of the resolution means a Republican Senate and a Republican House? Mr. President, any Democrat who votes against this joint resolution to-day estops himself during this campaign of asserting that Democratic success is necessary to the successful prosecution of the war, for he by his vote, according to the statement of one of his own colleagues, is doing more to injure the success of the Democratic Party than all of the speeches that he might make between now and November.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I still believe that the defeat of this joint resolution, the Democrats failing to give one-half of two-thirds, is going very seriously to affect the Democratic vote in those States, because it is almost impossible for the condition to be realized. We might as well face it frankly. When I made that statement, however, it was in view of the fact that the women of those States, mind you, were not informed of the trickery attempted to be played to bring about that condition. In the present circumstances of the case, and under the evidence submitted by the Senator from Nevada, which stands undenied, I take it that the women of those States will visit upon the Republicans and upon the Democrats alike in this Chamber who vote against this measure the punishment which each and every one of them separately deserves.

Another thing: At the time those statements were made, not only was it in view of the trick that was attempted to be played, but at that time the President of the United States, who is to-day not only the head of this Nation but must remain the head of the Democratic Party, was being charged throughout the United States with treachery to woman suffrage, and the argument was made in support of that charge that he had never gone as far in the support of that war measure as he had in support of other war measures. The President of the United States has come before this body with a sincerity of purpose that not even his enemies will question, and I say to you now that the argument that I hoped would appeal to the Democrats on this side, and which the Senator from Wisconsin has now repeated, is not necessary, as it was before, because the President of the United States is the man who carries the responsibility to-day; and the President of the United States and the men of both parties who have proven their loyalty to him will be backed up by the women of the suffrage States and returned to the Senate and House of Representatives to uphold his hands and lighten his great burdens.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I said in the beginning of my remarks that the effect of the Senator's speech the other day was an implied invitation to the Republicans who might be in doubt to vote against the resolution. I am very sorry, indeed, to find that now not only the effect but the direct statement of the Senator from Nevada to his Democratic colleagues is that, while the other day he was pleading with them to vote for the resolution to promote Democratic success, he says to them to-day, "Gentlemen, it is not necessary for you now to vote for this resolution upon any such grounds." He says the President having set himself right with the women of the country, that now they can win these States whether this resolution shall pass or not.

Mr. President, I was trying in my feeble way to make an appeal to the other side of the aisle to get some votes for this resolution which it has not hitherto had; but now comes the champion of this resolution and destroys whatever effect my appeal might otherwise have had, and says to his colleagues that, so far as political considerations are concerned, it is not necessary for them to-day to vote for this resolution.

Mr. PITTMAN and Mr. SHAFROTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield first to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I did appeal on political grounds the other day to my colleagues on this side of the Chamber who are opposed to this resolution. My object in that appeal, as the Senator from Wisconsin discerned, was to get votes for this resolution. I appealed to them on the ground that we might lose the Senate; that the Republicans would be in an advantageous position if they could give us half of the necessary two-thirds, and could say "we did all that we could," and endeavor to incense women of the country because the Democrats did not give their half. I appealed to the Democrats on political grounds, but at the same time I attempted to expose the Republicans on the other side of the Chamber for the purpose of compelling them to keep their promise and give us 33 votes. You were going to give 33 votes, and you are still going to give 33 votes. The 33 votes the other day when I was talking would have carried this resolution; they will not carry it, possibly, now, since the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BENET] has declared his intention to vote against it. Now, be generous, and give us 34 votes. You can give us 40, if you want to do so; there is not the same obstacle, as you know, on your side that there is on this. I want to say to you if you will give us enough votes to carry this resolution, then you can claim all the credit you want, and I will give my word that never during the campaign will I say another word against the Republican Party in connection with this amendment; but I thank God now that it is not necessary, so far as the western Senators are concerned, to appeal on political grounds to anybody on this side, and I have ceased to make such an appeal, for when the President of the United States comes before this body and states, with all the solemness of his being, that he needs this power to win the war, no other argument is needed; and if that will not reach them, then the mere political argument that it is needed in the West will amount to nothing, and I will never use it again.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I did not intend to refer to the charge of trickery which the Senator from Nevada has so often made, because it has been apparent to every Senator in this Chamber that there was no foundation whatever for a charge of trickery. There was a mistake made; a mistake made i good faith on the Republican side, just exactly as it is now apparent that there was a mistake made in good faith on the Democratic side.

Mr. PITTMAN. But, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. The mistake made on the Republican side was a mistake that would bring this resolution before the body; that was the mistake. As I have heretofore said, the chairman of the committee was very anxious not to bring it up until he could be assured of carrying it. I think he is still of the same view, and I think the Senator from Wisconsin would like not to have had it voted on until it could carry.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, Mr. President, in reply to that, let us see what the situation would have been in regard to the charge of trickery upon the Republican side because there was one vote less than was expected on this side. Supposing that we had had that vote, in the matter of trickery we would have been in exactly the position to charge the other side with trickery after they had lost the one vote that they expected to have. We would not have done so, however.

Mr. PITTMAN. The answer to that is simply this: That the Republican caucus, in which the antis participated, had prior to all of this time unanimously, according to the statement of Senators on this floor, resolved that they intended to bring this resolution immediately before the Senate. The Democratic members of the Woman Suffrage Committee had not resolved to bring it before the Senate; they opposed bringing it before the Senate; they presented a united opposition to the Republican side; and I say to you they only brought it before the Senate by reason of information from the Republican side.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator may think he can make the country believe that it was in the power of the Republican side to bring this resolution before the Senate whenever it saw fit, but the Senator knows better than that; the Senator knows that, whatever attitude the Republican side might have, this resolution could not come before the Senate until the Democratic side was willing that it should come before the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, that is an incorrect statement, as I will show to the Senate. If the Republicans had unanimously voted to bring this resolution up at a time when it must have known that it would be defeated, I am perfectly confident that we would have had sufficient Democrats on this side who are not suffragists who would have joined in that unhappy solution by assisting you in defeating it.

Mr. LENROOT. Furthermore, Mr. President, the only effect of that Republican resolution was to serve notice upon the Democratic side and upon the country that the Republicans were ready to do their part in furnishing the two-thirds vote necessary and that the Republican side was ready to vote at any time when the Democratic side would do their part.

Mr. PITTMAN. And that they did not care whether it was won or defeated, so that they did their part; is that it? That is exactly what you meant.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, that is absolutely immaterial, because it has been within the power of the chairman of the committee to withdraw this resolution at any time; he could know exactly in what position it was before he called for a vote, and this unfinished business could have been displaced at any time upon the motion of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. President, just one word with reference to the charge of playing politics upon this side.

If politics were the sole consideration, if party advantage were the sole consideration upon the part of these Senators who are opposed to this joint resolution, of course we could furnish votes enough to pass it; but there is no such appeal upon this side of the aisle as there has been upon that side of the aisle. The appeal of your party leader necessarily, it would seem, should be more influential upon that side of the aisle than this. Certainly, the appeal for party success which the Senator from Nevada made so strenuously the other day for his party would not appeal to this side of the aisle, because the Republican Party is willing to go before the country upon the record it has made in the support of the war, and appeal for success upon that ground. No one upon this side has made any such admission as the Senator from Nevada made the other day, that a particular vote upon a particular measure was essential for the success of his party.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me suggest to the Senator, as a compromise, that he deliver us as many votes as he can for the success of the Republican Party, and we will try to deliver as many votes upon this side of the Chamber for the success of the Democratic Party; and I hope you will get all of them on that side to enter into such an agreement, whether we get any more or not.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the difference that exists is the constant claim made by the members of the Senator's party that the success of the Republican Party would give comfort to the Kaiser. You have never heard a Republican make any such claim with reference to the Democrats. You have heard no Republican make any assertion that Democratic success would be an aid to the Kaiser. The Republicans do believe, have believed, and will believe that Republican control of Senate and House will mean a more efficient prosecution of the war; but that is far from saying, as Democrats do, that Republican success will give comfort to the enemies of our country. If the Senator does not see the distinction, I think others do.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I am sorry that the Senator from Nevada has now given notice to his Democratic colleagues that it is immaterial, so far as party success is concerned, whether they vote this joint resolution up or vote it down. I am extremely sorry, for that reason, that I rose to speak at all, because if I had not perhaps that statement from the Senator from Nevada would not have been called out, and perhaps the statement which he made the other day, that it was necessary for party success, might have had some influence upon some of his colleagues upon that side of the aisle.

Mr. ASHURST. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GUION in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	New	Smith, Md.
Baird	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Smoot
Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sterling
Benet	Kellogg	Owen	Sutherland
Borah	Kendrick	Page	Thompson
Brandegee	Kirby	Penrose	Townsend
Calder	Knox	Phelan	Trammell
Culberson	La Follette	Pittman	Underwood
Cummins	Lenroot	Poindexter	Vardaman
Curtis	Lewis	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Lodge	Ransdell	Walsh
Drew	McCumber	Reed	Warren
Fernald	McKellar	Saulsbury	Watson

France	McNary	Sheppard	Wilfley
Goff	Martin, Ky.	Shields	Williams
Gronna	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Wolcott
Guion	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Hale	Nelson	Smith, Ga.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] because of illness, and that of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] because of official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, as it seems that we are about to begin voting on the various amendments that have been offered to the joint resolution, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this is a House joint resolution and that it was passed in the House of Representatives by exactly a two-thirds majority, there being not one vote to spare. I feel that no matter how meritorious any amendment may be its adoption would complicate the parliamentary situation and would require that the joint resolution be sent back to the House of Representatives. Consequently, those who are in favor of the measure really run the risk of perhaps losing it in the other House in the event that it has to go back to the House of Representatives to be voted upon.

We therefore feel that there ought to be no amendment made to this joint resolution, because it might jeopardize the chances of the passage of the joint resolution in the other House. In other words, we think that no matter how meritorious a proposed amendment may be it ought not to be adopted and added to this joint resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, "mountains labor, and ridiculous mice are born." When I hear an argument from a Senator of the United States to the effect that "parliamentary complications" might intervene, and that therefore great public measures in the interest of the maintenance of the white man's social fabric in the cotton States of the United States should not be considered at all, and that on account of "parliamentary complications" every voice should be stilled, every aspiration of the white man in the cotton States for his family life and his civilization should be ignored, I confess I do not quite understand it. Parliamentary complications! A joint resolution with an amendment to go back to the other House to see whether or not the other House wants to adopt it, and a lot of speculative argument about whether the other House would or would not adopt it! That is all of his alleged argument.

I do not want the slightest misunderstanding of my position upon this question to go abroad. There is just one thing that I love better than the Democratic Party; there is just one thing that I love better than the United States; there is just one thing that I love better than I do my wife or my children or myself, and that is the hope of the purity and the integrity and the supremacy of the white race everywhere, but, so far as I am concerned, especially in my own native State.

When I think of the past, and the mistakes we have made, and the mistakes I have made, I feel a degree of intellectual humility that I can hardly express; but, notwithstanding all that, in some essential things we were right, and we are right now; and I can not for the life of me see why a Senator from the State of Colorado—bought with the money and the service and the blood of the South in gaining the Revolution and in fighting the Mexican War—merely bought territory with no original sovereignty of any sort—should rise and ignore as if it were hardly worth mentioning a proposition which I have made, which is not in limitation of the suffrage but which is in extension of the suffrage.

My amendment, when it is analyzed, means that we enfranchise every white woman in the United States, and that we do not enfranchise any Japanese, Chinese, or negro woman in the United States, but that we leave to each State the question as to whether or not it shall do that. If California wants to enfranchise the Chinese and Japanese women, let her do it; if Mississippi wants to enfranchise the negro women, let her do it; but do not force upon California and Mississippi the enfranchisement of those women who are not of our race, who are not of our aspirations, who are not of our ideals, who are not of anything that makes an essential part of us.

I can only repeat, as I have done I do not know how many times before this body and the body at the other wing of this Capitol, the old truism that a house divided against itself must fall. When you undertake to erect a structure of democracy, it must be founded upon the four pillars of justice, equality, fraternity, and liberty.

You can not have any real liberty unless you have real equality. You can not have any real equality—and I apologize for repeating this thought now, for it is about the eighth time I have done it—unless you have real fraternity, which means potential blood relationship in lawful marriage. You are not going to have it with Japanese and Chinese upon the Pacific coast and you are not going to have it with negroes in the Southern States. You can not have any fraternity unless you have real equality, and you can not have justice unless the superior race occupying a given territory is endowed with the right to prescribe the terms of justice. Just as long as you keep them menaced, just as long as you keep them frightened, just as long as you keep the women imagining that family life may be threatened, there will be no justice, because there will be no friendly feeling toward justice.

I am astonished at the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH]. I served with him for years in the Senate and the House. I am a Democrat and he is a Democrat. I am a Democrat not only by environment but by temperament. I am not only a Democrat with a big "D," but I am a democrat with a little bit of a "d." Among my friends I count ditch diggers and millionaires. I have never known, even by any inquiry of my own, how much money or how much birth any man has behind him. I have merely known the man. I am a democrat of the democrats with a little bit of a "d." I am almost a social democrat, in fact, in certain respects. But when the Senator comes to me and asks me to menace my wife and my daughters rather than to have a little "parliamentary complication," as he calls it, I confess I am deaf and dumb to the appeal. I am only astonished at one thing.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Deaf but not dumb.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I can not help my deafness. I am not dumb, and if under the circumstances I had assumed to be dumb in order to please the Senator from New Mexico I would be false to Mississippi; I would have been false to her family life; I would have been false to the white man's civilization; I would have been false to Mississippi's traditions and her ideals.

I love the President of the United States personally better than any man on this floor, I expect. I would follow him in any real war measure, that I thought was a real war measure, to the limit. My boys are following him, my sons-in-law and nephews are following him, and I have been doing everything I knew how to help him. I would not put a feather's weight upon his shoulder to save my own life so far as his shoulders are bearing the burdens of this war. But when the President of the United States tells me that we can not whip Hindenburg, that we can not outmaneuver Ludendorff, that we can not scatter the Bulgarians, that we can not reconquer Palestine unless the negro women in the State of Mississippi can vote, I decline to agree with him, and I decline to agree with the Senator from New Mexico, who is here assuming to speak for him.

Now, I want a vote on this proposition, and I want a square, frank, honest vote. I want every man on the other side of the Chamber to express by his vote his real convictions, as I do want every man on this side to do it. I have seen in the last two days—never mind what I have seen; let it go—I have seen men trying to avoid a vote upon this proposition, men who want white civilization, white supremacy, and a homogeneous population, racially speaking, coming to me and begging that they may be relieved of the bitter dose of facing a yea-and-nay vote upon this question.

Do you think that you can make a great world power of America upon any other basis in the world except a white basis, a basis of white man's civilization, white man's traditions and ideals and code of ethics and family life? If you do, you have not sense enough to shake within the limits of a mustard shell. Nine out of ten of you agree with me and seven out of the nine have not the courage to face the chalk mark.

Now, Mr. President, one word more and I am done, and done for good. I leave the result in the lap of the gods; I care nothing about it. God will take care of the result. I take care of my conscience and my vote and my voice. Whatever happens in the long run, happens all right, because God rules this world.

Mr. President, the last word that I want to say is this: I belong to the old slave-holding class of the South. I never belonged to the nigger-hating and nigger-baiting class of the South. They were never composed of slaveholders. We took care of our darkies like they were members of our own family in a way, because in a sense they were. There are 50 or 75 I have upon my roll, and amongst them some of the most honest and true and loyal men and women I have ever known in my life, white or black. Nobody can make a nigger baiter out of me; nobody can make a nigger hater out of me; and nobody in Mississippi can ever make out of me a man who gained, or would gain, office by "cussing" negroes. I not only have no hate for them; I have a positive gratitude to them. On a plantation with 150 negroes during the Civil War, only 6 left. How many Yankee raids there were I do not remember. Three of those six came back and said that they were impressed to drive teams.

One of them stayed out and was killed with Custer—out West, where Custer was killed—a very good boy. I have none of that general talk about race hatred and race prejudice, but I have got race knowledge, and I have race knowledge from a knowledge of both races under my own eyes. It is not a question of color. It is not a question of hair. It is a question of inward racial tendencies and traits.

I am not willing to cast this vote, even at the behest of the President of the United States, whom I love as if he were my only brother. I have only one brother, and he and I are closer kin than any two brothers in the world, so close that we meet to have business transactions only once in a year. He keeps my own private affairs and tells me how much I owe him or how much he owes me. I love the President of the United States with that sort of intense personal affection, but I can not see for the life of me what Ludendorff and Hindenburg and the Bulgarians and Turks in Macedonia and Palestine can have to do with the right of negro women to vote in the State of Mississippi.

Now, adopt my amendment and enfranchise the white women. Your wife and your daughter are just as fit to vote as you—racially, traditionally, ideally. Enfranchise them and mine. Then I will vote with you, and then you will accomplish a great purpose, and you will save the Pacific slope from Oriental domination remotely, and you will save the South from any sort of domination except the white man's and woman's domination now and hereafter.

The Senator from Colorado tells me there are "parliamentary complications." That may be. The two Houses might spend a little time in conference debating whether or not they should enfranchise white women. I want to enfranchise white women, because I love them with all my soul. I started my life loving my mother, and I shall end it with loving my wife, and I shall end it by loving a lot of the sweetest daughters that you ever knew. Talk about "complications!" Why should you complicate this question of the white women's right to vote with the right of the Japanese, Chinese, and negroes to vote? By the way, Mr. President, I hope you heard me say negroes and not "niggers."

If I were taking care of my own darkies upon my own plantation, with no motive in the world except their interest, I would take the exact stand I am taking to-day, because I want to disarm the hostility of the white demagogues against the negro race; and the minute that the negroes are helpless and powerless to threaten white domination and white supremacy and the supremacy of the white man's civilization and family life these demagogues are disarmed. If I were a negro standing here to-day, I would take this position in behalf of the negroes of the States of South Carolina, Louisiana, Mississippi, Georgia, Alabama, Texas, and the balance of the cotton States where they form such a proportion of the population as to constitute a menace in the mind of the white man and woman, and therefore constitute a cause of hostility, and therefore constitute a pretext for demagogues to run for office on a pure negro question and nothing else.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the suggestion which I made to the Senate in order to avoid further discussion upon this measure and to get it to a vote must have been a very important suggestion, for it seemed to raise a storm of indignation upon the part of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. The Senator from Mississippi is against this measure.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon. If the measure enfranchises the white women of the United States and does not enfranchise the negroes and Japanese and Chinese, I am for the measure.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask the Senator if the measure is not amended in any particular, will he vote for it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is what I thought.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the Senator is against this measure. He knows, or he ought to know, that with his amendment and other amendments on the joint resolution there would not be a ghost of a show of ever having it ratified by three-fourths of the States of the Union.

The parliamentary situation to which I referred becomes an important factor in determining how friends of the measure should vote. As I suggested, no matter how important or how wise the amendment might be, the very fact that it is to be placed on the House joint resolution and the House in order to carry the measure must again vote in favor of its passage by a two-thirds majority shows the danger of the situation. Any amendment attached to it in the Senate would compel the joint resolution to go back to the House and run the hazard of the loss by one vote; and it seems to me that any friend of this measure would not put upon the joint resolution any amendment that would make it run that hazard of defeat.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not like to have the statement of the Senator from Colorado go uncontradicted. The truth is—I am very sure I am right—that any amendment placed on the joint resolution requires a majority vote in the House of Representatives to pass it, and only a majority vote. The statement of the Senator from Colorado ought not to go unchallenged. While I do not sympathize with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi and, of course, would not vote for it, it is not quite accurate to say that the loss of one vote from the vote as it passed in the House would defeat the joint resolution. If a conference is asked, the report could be adopted by a majority vote there, or it could here.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, that will have to be the case upon the final passage of the joint resolution in the House, and I can not agree with the position of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am sorry the Senator can not agree with me. We have both served in the House, and I am sure I have stated the rule correctly, and I favor the joint resolution.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I concede that here in the passage of this proposed amendment a majority vote can carry it and as to amending the joint resolution hereafter, but upon the final consummation of the passage of the measure we have got to have a two-thirds majority. That being the case, I can not see how by sending it over to the House it can maintain itself unless it has a two-thirds majority on final passage.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator from Colorado really believe that extending the suffrage in the United States to his wife and daughters and sisters and mine and to the white women of the United States, and stopping it there, would weaken the vote of the white race, solely represented in both Houses of the National Legislature by men like him and me?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I believe in the extension of the franchise in every particular. I believe it is simply a question of giving——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator does not answer my question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know that I took it in. I was reading a note at the time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask it again.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator really believe that with white men in the House and in the Senate a proposition for woman suffrage would be weakened in their minds by confining it to white women?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I say you can never pass the joint resolution by three-fourths of the States of the Union——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the Senator——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I believe the placing of this amendment upon the joint resolution would absolutely prevent its adoption by three-fourths of the States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the Senator this question, and then I will not worry him any further.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well; I am willing to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have known the Senator for a long time in the House and in the Senate. We have been friends, and very close friends.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very close friends.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Would the fact that if white women alone were enfranchised weaken this amendment in the mind of the Senator from Colorado himself?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I believe that you could not get a measure of that kind through.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is not the question I asked the Senator. I asked whether in his opinion it would weaken it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I think it would. I think we must recognize democracy. That is what you have got to do, and you must recognize it in everybody.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the democracy of the Senator from Colorado consists in holding to the enfranchisement of women without regard to race or anything else?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I decline to yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the Senator ought to yield; there is no chance for a real disagreement on the rule.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado declines to yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Very well; I will take my own time if the rule is raised.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right; I am perfectly willing that the Senator should take all the time he cares to take.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will not take the Senator's time; the danger is not that the House will not concur, but the States might refuse to ratify the resolution with the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi attached. This is the only real danger which I apprehend from amendments.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am perfectly willing to yield, but let me get in one expression concerning this matter, and then the Senator may either ask me a question or he can take his own time in explaining the situation.

Mr. President, the situation is that bills and joint resolutions can be and are defeated continually, both in this body and in the House of Representatives, by the creation of parliamentary situations. They can be defeated by filibusters; they can be defeated in a number of other ways. We have a situation now where we have had this measure before the Senate for about a year and one-half, and it has run the gantlet of parliamentary tactics to the present time.

If it were sent back to the House of Representatives, the chances are that that body would not consent to any amendment, because, knowing that amendment would not meet the favor of three-fourths of the States, they would say it would be a useless thing to pass the joint resolution after it was amended, for the very reason that it would be defeated. I have not any doubt that the Senator is earnest in this matter. I have not any doubt that he thinks civilization is at stake with relation to his home people. I do not think so.

But, Mr. President, three-fourths of the States have a right to determine that as well as the Senator has, and inasmuch as the Constitution has provided a method by which a constitutional amendment can be passed, it creates a test which has been made in the Constitution itself as to the wisdom of the measure. The Senator himself ought to concede that when three-fourths of the States say that the constitutional amendment is good he might be mistaken in his thought that it would be so detrimental to the people of his section.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to his colleague?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to ask my colleague whether at this hour, when thousands of both white men and black men under the colors of the United States are fighting the battle for democracy on the bloody fields of France, it is the appropriate time in the consideration of a great constitutional amendment to discriminate as we would discriminate if the amendment proposed by the senior Senator from Mississippi were adopted?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I thank my colleague for the suggestion. That was one of the reasons why I did not feel it was exactly the proper thing to enter into a discussion with relation to the merits of the amendment, and I rose solely for the purpose of expediting the votes that are to be taken upon amendments to the joint resolution.

Mr. President, as I was saying, parliamentary tactics often defeat a measure. You can load a bill with so many amendments that even if they are good amendments you will find people will differ with relation to them, and consequently the bill might be lost. That is done even in ordinary legislation. That can be done even in the passage of bills; but when you add to that the fact that this joint resolution not only would have to go to the House of Representatives again but would have to go to all the States, with the danger that 12 States in the Union might defeat it, it would be almost criminal, it seems to me, to couple with this joint resolution an amendment that might make the measure disputable as to its merits. We have three amendments here. Suppose you were to put all three of them on the joint resolution, would there be a chance on earth of having the joint resolution passed by three-fourths of the States?

That is one of the methods of defeating a measure. One of the ways is to load it up so that somebody will object to it. That is the method which can be invoked in behalf of some of those who are directly opposed, for the purpose of getting aid in some other direction, to a limited extent, and then the joint resolution will fail.

Mr. President, I have called attention to this matter, because I think it is paramount at this time with relation to the success of this vote. That being the case I hope that we can proceed to vote.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I have already addressed the Senate upon this question, but I desire at this point to correct what possibly is an erroneous impression created by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that the wives of Japanese or Chinese are in any way affected by this amendment. The Chinese and Japanese under our naturalization laws are ineligible to citizenship. The naturalization laws provide for the naturalization only of persons of the white race. Therefore, their fortunes are not at all involved in this amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am sure we have all been impressed by the earnestness of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] in discussing his amendment. I know that he feels that he has touched upon a very important subject, and I would not undertake in any way to treat with levity any proposition which he might advance. On yesterday I listened with great interest to an able speech by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] discussing an amendment which he has offered. I know that he feels that he has presented a thought that is worthy of the serious consideration of the Senate. These are subjects which at the proper time or on some proper occasion might be discussed by the various Senators who entertain divergent views regarding them.

But I want to make one statement, and that is that this proposed amendment to the Constitution as it comes to us from the other House is in the same form which it had when it was presented to Congress many decades ago. It has become sanctified by age. The people of the United States, the women and the men who have been discussing this tremendous question, have framed their arguments around the joint resolution as it comes to us from the House; and I know, Mr. President, that if any amendment were put upon the joint resolution it would be a decided disappointment to the millions of men and women of this country who give to this resolution their hearty support. So, with all due deference to Senators who have proposed amendments, I can only request that such amendments be laid aside for future consideration, should the Congress of the United States deem the time opportune. Therefore, Mr. President, I move that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion before the Senate is that of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], that the proposed amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] be laid upon the table.

Mr. REED. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I simply want to get every Senator here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gulon	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Baird	Hale	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Hardwick	New	Smith, Mich.
Beckham	Henderson	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Benet	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Smoot
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Sterling
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Penrose	Thomas
Colt	Kendrick	Phelan	Thompson
Cummins	Kenyon	Pittman	Townsend
Curtis	Kirby	Poindexter	Trammell
Dillingham	Knox	Pomerene	Underwood
Drew	La Follette	Ransdell	Vardaman
Fernald	Lenroot	Reed	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Lewis	Robinson	Warren
France	Lodge	Shafroth	Watson
Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard	Weeks
Goff	McLean	Shields	Wilfley
Gore	McNary	Simmons	Williams
Gronna	Martin, Ky.	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs to announce the absence of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], on account of illness.

Eighty Senators having responded to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. The yeas and nays having been ordered on the motion, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], who, I notice, is not in the Chamber. I am advised, however, that if he were present the Senator from New Jersey would vote as I propose to do, and I accordingly vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILFLEY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who is not here. If I were allowed to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BECKHAM. I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMPSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], but I have an understanding with him that either of us may vote on this proposition. The Senator from Illinois, if present, would vote as I do; so I will let my vote stand.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. SWANSON] is detained from the Senate by serious illness in his family. If he were present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the negative). I have voted under the impression that the question was on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, but now understanding that the motion is to lay his amendment on the table, I change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I now discover that he did not vote. I therefore transfer my pair with him to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. COLT (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], but I am at liberty to vote on the amendment. I will, therefore, allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to anounce the absence of the junior Senator, from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] on the liberty-loan campaign. Were he present, the Senator from Ohio would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 61, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—61.

Ashurst	Henderson	McNary	Smith, Ariz.
Baird	Hitchcock	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Smoot
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Sutherland
Colt	Kellogg	Owen	Thomas
Cummins	Kendrick	Page	Thompson
Curtis	Kenyon	Penrose	Townsend
Dillingham	Kirby	Phelan	Wadsworth
Drew	Knox	Pittman	Walsh
Fernald	La Follette	Poindexter	Warren
France	Lenroot	Pomerene	Watson
Gerry	Lewis	Ransdell	Weeks
Goff	Lodge	Robinson
Gronna	McCumber	Shafroth
Hale	McLean	Sheppard

NAYS—22.

Bankhead	Hardwick	Reed	Trammell
Benet	McKellar	Shields	Underwood
Borah	Martin, Ky.	Simmons	Vardaman
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Gore	Myers	Smith, Md.
Gulon	Overman	Smith, S. C.

NOT VOTING—13.

Beckham	Harding	Saulsbury	Wolcott
Culberson	Hollis	Sherman
Fall	Johnson, Cal.	Swanson
Frelinghuysen	King	Wilfley

So the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS was laid on the table.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] I present the amendment I send to the desk, and I should like at the same time to ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah, in behalf of the Senator from New Jersey, presents an amendment, which will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the joint resolution, after the word "sex," it is proposed to insert the following:

but no male person who is not a citizen of the United States shall exercise the right of suffrage at an election for Senators and Representatives in Congress or for electors for President and Vice President of the United States, and no female person who is not such a citizen otherwise than by marriage, or who, having acquired citizenship by marriage, has not complied with such requirements and conditions as may be prescribed by the Congress, shall exercise such right.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I believe that all Senators present understand that there are substantial reasons why no amendment is desired. The reasons have been given at considerable length, and I therefore move that this amendment——

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator withhold his motion for a moment, because I wish to make a statement?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am in full accord with the statement just made by the Senator from New Mexico. I shall vote against the amendment if it is voted on directly; and if the vote comes on a motion to lay it on the table I shall vote in favor of that motion.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Why can we not have a vote direct on the amendment? We can take it quite as quickly as on a motion to lay on the table.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will say to the Senator that I do not want to show any partiality. I moved to lay the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] on the table, and would really prefer that the same action be taken regarding the amendment now offered.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator from New Mexico withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have not made the motion as yet, and I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I am opposed——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor by the consent of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the Senator from New York desires to address the Senate, I will yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. CALDER. I should like to occupy the floor for a moment or two.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator from New Mexico a question. Why did he move to lay my amendment on the table and not move to lay the amendment just offered on the table?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have just stated, if the Senator will pardon me, that I intended to move to lay the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah for the Senator from New Jersey on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah, I understand; the Senator has just yielded to allow the Senator from New York to make a few remarks of a desultory and unnecessary character on his proposition. Why did the Senator from New Mexico come to that determination?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from New York.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. With all deference to the Senator from Mississippi, I think he had an opportunity to make some remarks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; before the Senator made the motion to lay my amendment on the table.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And every Senator had an opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order being demanded by the Senator from Connecticut, the Chair will have to hold, the Senator from New Mexico having yielded to the Senator from New York, and the Senator from New York having been recognized by the Chair, that the Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sure the Senator from New York will yield to me in order that I may put myself right with the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. CALDER. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I submit to the Senator from Mississippi that every Senator present who desired to discuss the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi had an opportunity to do so before I made the motion to lay the amendment on the table; and I am only according a like privilege to the Senator from New York and to any other Senator regarding the amendment now pending. I am sure the Senator from Mississippi will not feel that I have been at all partial as against him. The Senator from Mississippi knows that if there is any Senator in the Chamber to whom I would extend deference it is the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I knew that, and I knew, as a matter of personal friendship between the Senator from New Mexico and me, that everything was all right; but I just wanted to indicate to the galleries, who seem to be present in considerable number to-day and who seem to be very influential in controlling Senators' votes, that there were discriminations against Senators from the South as compared with Senators from the North, in that the Senator from New Mexico made a motion to lay my amendment upon the table, thereby cutting off further debate, while he had refrained from making a similar motion with regard to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, who is a very much more important democratic factor, spelled with a little "d," than I

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If I had known that the Senator from Mississippi desired to speak, I should have withheld my previous motion, as I will withhold my motion in this instance, so as to give the Senator from New York an opportunity to discuss the pending amendment.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], first, for the reason given by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. I do not think it wise to imperil the passage of the suffrage amendment by attaching to it any amendment of this character. Secondly, I oppose it for the reason given by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] yesterday, when he stated that this matter could be amply provided for by legislation. Thirdly, and perhaps most important, I am opposed to it because we have in this country to-day 5,800,000 white women of foreign birth, many of whom are now voting, and all of whom would be disfranchised by this provision, although married to citizens of the United States. I have in mind a woman who came to this country from Europe when she was 1 year of age, who has lived here for seventy odd years, who was educated here, and who is the mother of children born in this country. Under the terms of the amendment now pending she would be disfranchised. I think the amendment is a very unwise one, and hope it will be defeated.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I shall not occupy the floor more than seven minutes, and I do that only because of the appeal which was addressed to me in common with my colleagues by the Chief Executive on yesterday.

I have voted for every real or alleged war measure since the war began, and I have done so because I believed that those measures were wise and reasonable under all the circumstances. I deeply regret, therefore, that I can not respond favorably to the appeal made by the Chief Executive; but I can not do so, because the more I have thought and the more I have heard upon this matter the firmer has become my conviction that this resolution, if adopted, will impose upon the women of America war responsibilities which they neither desire nor anticipate.

Discouraging and depressing as it is to them and to all of us, we must all admit that to-day force, physical force, physical force without stint, still remains the ultimate defender of all we hold most sacred. We must see to-day that the bayonet is all that stands between us and unspeakable disaster. Mr. President, it is not the fault of the mothers that they are not as well fitted by nature to use the bayonet as are their sons. I think it is to the credit of the sons that, so far in the history of this Republic, they have never declined to use the bayonet in the defense of their mothers, and it is unthinkable to me that they will not in the future, as they have in the past, defend their mothers in peace as well as in war, with the ballot as well as with the bayonet.

It is my opinion that there is no one within the sound of my voice who believes that the time will ever come when a majority of the men in any legislative assembly in this country will cease to love and cherish and defend their mothers. Nevertheless, Mr. President, and unnecessary as it seems to me to be, I would be willing to support a measure that would confer upon the women the burden of the ballot upon all matters where their responsibility is coextensive with that of men. I say "the burden of the ballot"; I call it a burden. It may be a right, it may be a privilege, but it is always a grave responsibility, and one which I sincerely hope will not prove to be too heavy for mortals to bear.

The women should have the right and the duty to vote upon all questions affecting the education of their children. This has been for many years the law in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, and it may be fair for me to state here that the women of Connecticut have substantially ignored that duty. The laws of my State give every preference to the wife, and they carefully guard every property interest of the women. This is as it should be; but this joint resolution goes beyond that. This joint resolution goes beyond the seas and above the clouds. It attempts to tamper with the ballot box, over which mother nature always has had and always will have supreme control; and such attempts always have ended and always will end in failure and misfortune.

We have had a recent demonstration of the accuracy of this statement, and I am surprised that the President of the United States seems to have forgotten it. He may have been disappointed, but I was pleased and reassured in April, 1917, when I read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that the woman Representative in this Congress, when subjected to the "acid test," had proved herself to be just what God made her—a womanly woman under all circumstances—and I was reassured and pleased when I was told by one of the leaders in the suffrage movement in my State that had she been a Member of Congress in April, 1917, she would have voted as Miss RANKIN did, against war, although she believed in a vigorous prosecution of the war once it had been declared.

I was again pleased and reassured when, upon inquiry, I found that she fairly represented her sex. I should despair of the future if such were not the case. Mr. President, I dare not think of what would have happened to all of us if in April, 1917, the balance of power in the American Congress had been in the hands of those so constituted physically and spiritually that they could not vote for war under any circumstances, and I shudder when I think of what will happen to this country in the future when such conditions prevail.

So, Mr. President, it is my belief that until wars and rumors of wars shall cease justice, simple justice, to the women of this country demands that all questions involving declarations of war and terms of peace should be left to that sex which must do the fighting and the dying on the battle field. It may be that the Almighty made a mistake when He gave superior strength to the male; but if He did, I do not believe that this Congress or the Chief Executive can remedy it.

That is all I care to say upon this subject, Mr. President. Of course, the women have done a noble work and made every sacrifice required. There is nothing in language that can adequately measure the value of their services in this war,

But, Mr. President, if the responsibility of the franchise is to be extended or limited, those of us above the fighting age should be denied the ballot, and it should be given to the boys between 18 and 21 who have just been called to the colors; but they are not asking it, and they will not ask it unless they fear that their representatives in the American Congress will accept less than unconditional surrender from our foe, and until they ask it it is my belief that their mothers should be and remain both proud and content.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, two minutes is all that I desire.

The civilized world to-day is following two great leaders in statecraft, believing in them, trusting in them. One is the President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson; the other is Lloyd-George, the premier of Great Britain. The President has spoken to the Senate on this great question. I think it is altogether fitting to place as a companion piece to his remarks the letter of Lloyd-George to the Interallied Woman's Congress in Paris, held in August last, and I therefore ask that the Secretary read the letter, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WOMEN OF ENGLAND HAVE SAVED THE ALLIED CAUSE, LLOYD-GEORGE TELLS WOMEN'S CONGRESS IN PARIS.

PARIS, August 21.

Premier Lloyd-George sent this letter to the Interallied Women's Congress:

"I am anxious to bear testimony to the tremendous part played by the women of England in this vital epoch of human history. They have not only borne their burden of sorrow and separation with unflinching fortitude and patience, but they have assumed an enormous share of the burdens necessary to the practical conduct of the war.

"If it had not been for the splendid manner in which the women came forward to work in the hospitals and munition factories, in administrative offices of all kinds, and in war work behind the lines, often in daily danger of their lives, Great Britain and, I believe, all the allies would have been unable to withstand the enemy attacks of the last few months. For this service to our common cause humanity owes them unbounded gratitude.

"In the past I have heard it said that women were unfit to vote because they would be weak when it came to understanding the issues and bearing the strains of a great war. My experience in South Wales last week is what has confirmed me in the belief that the women there understand perfectly what is at stake in this war. I believe they recognize as clearly as any that there can be no peace, progress, or happiness in the world so long as the monster of militarism is able to stalk unbridled and unashamed among the weaker peoples.

"To them this war is a crusade of righteousness and gentleness, and they do not mean to make peace until the allies have made it impossible for another carnival of violence to befall mankind. I am certain that this resolution of the women of South Wales is but typical of the spirit of the women of the rest of Great Britain.

"This war began in order that force and brutality might crush out freedom among men. Its authors can not have foreseen that one of its main effects would be to give women a commanding position and influence in the public affairs of the world. To their ennobling influence we look not only for strength to win the war, but for inspiration during the great work of reconstruction we will have to undertake after victory is won.

"The women who have been flocking to France to work for the allies are among the foremost leaders in this great movement of regeneration. My message to their representatives gathered in Paris is this: 'Well done. Carry on. You are helping to create a new earth for yourselves and your children.'"

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I favor the object sought to be accomplished by the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I think that unnaturalized aliens ought to be disfranchised. I think that citizenship of the United States ought to be made a prerequisite to voting, not only for Senators and Representatives in Congress, but for electors for President and Vice President of the United States. If the several States will not disfranchise unnaturalized aliens, then I think the Congress and three-fourths of the States, in accordance with the Constitution, ought to take that necessary step—a step to safeguard the elections in this country.

Some seven or eight States to-day permit unnaturalized aliens to vote under certain conditions and limitations. Several of these States are pivotal States. It might happen that a sufficient number of unnaturalized aliens would vote in these States to constitute the controlling factor in electing a sufficient number of Senators and Representatives to constitute the controlling factors in the two Houses. It might be that unnaturalized aliens in these States would constitute the controlling factor in electing a sufficient number of presidential electors to constitute the controlling factor in the electoral college. I say that may happen. Of course, it may be answered that it has not happened and will not happen; but, sir, the possibility of such an occurrence ought to be prevented.

I have offered an amendment substantially the same as that presented by the Senator from New Jersey. I send it to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma tenders an amendment, which will now be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 11 it is proposed to add the following:

No person other than a citizen of the United States shall be entitled to vote for Senators and Representatives in Congress or for electors for President and Vice President of the United States.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, if this amendment or the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey were agreed to, it would not disfranchise, as I understand, the women described by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. It would permit citizens of the United States, native-born or naturalized citizens, to vote. The women described by him are naturalized citizens of the United States, as I understand. There are different methods of naturalization. A person can become a citizen of the United States in only two ways—either by birth or by naturalization—and every person who is a citizen of the United States has acquired that character in one or the other of these two ways.

Mr. President, while I had given notice of my intention to present this amendment, I have decided not to offer it and not to press it upon the consideration of the Senate at this time. I have two reasons for this conclusion. First, I do not desire to encumber the pending joint resolution. In the second place, I have assurances coming from members of the Judiciary Committee on the part of Senators who are much interested in the pending joint resolution, that they will take up the joint resolution which I have offered and undertake to report it, or some similar resolution, to the Senate. At some future time this measure can be considered upon its own merits. I trust that it will be reported at an early date, that it will be submitted to the States by the Congress, and will be ratified by the required number of States.

While I can not vote to table the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, I was not willing to take the responsibility of pressing such an amendment upon the consideration of the Senate at this time.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I move that the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey be laid upon the table.

Mr. LODGE. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi makes a parliamentary inquiry. The Senator will state it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to know if the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] was an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator that it was not, as the Chair is informed. The Senator from New Mexico moves that the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey be laid upon the table, upon which motion the Senator from Massachusetts asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). Announcing again my pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMPSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). As announced before, I have a general pair with the mover of the amendment [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. WILFLEY (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I again announce that my colleague [Mr. SWANSON] is detained from the Senate by serious illness in his family. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—50.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Smoot
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Sterling
Culberson	Kellogg	Owen	Sutherland

NOT VOTING—13.

Beckham	Hollis	Martin, Ky.	Swanson
Fall	Johnson, Cal.	Saulsbury	Wilfley
Frelinghuysen	King	Sherman	Wolcott
Harding

So Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN's amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I move to amend by striking out, in line 11, page 1, the words "or by any State," so that if amended the amendment would read:

SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States on account of sex.

I have already made some allusion to the purpose of that amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida having made the motion heard by the Senate, the Senator from New Mexico is recognized, but the Chair desires to say to the Senator from New Mexico that there has been a request for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have no objection to that. I desire to make motions similar to those I have previously made regarding the other amendments. I move to lay this amendment upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from Florida upon the table.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary state the amendment. Some Senators do not seem to understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Florida will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On line 11 of the amendment it is proposed to strike out the words "or by any State," so that if amended the section will read:

SECTION. 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States on account of sex.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as read the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] moves to lay upon the table. The yeas and nays were requested, and a sufficient number having seconded, a roll call will be had.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I am informed that my pair, if present, would vote in the affirmative, and I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILFLEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SWANSON] if present would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 65, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—65.

Ashurst	Hale	McLean	Sheppard
Baird	Henderson	McNary	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Myers	Smith, Mich.

So Mr. FLETCHER's amendment was laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ascertain if there be other amendments pending not disposed of. [After a pause.] The joint resolution is as in Committee of the Whole and is still open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, it will be reported to the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. They are both absent, and I understand that if present would vote "yea." If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay." In their absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BORAH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. If those Senators were present, they would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. HARDING's name was called). I was requested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to announce that because of the action of the Republican State convention of Ohio, were he present he would vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], who is unavoidably absent. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea." I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. Those two Senators, if voting, would vote "yea." If I were voting, I would vote "nay." I withhold my vote under the circumstances.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia (when Mr. SWANSON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SWANSON] is detained from the Senate by illness in his family. If he were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay." He is paired on this vote with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. WILFLEY] and the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). As has been stated by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and I are paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], but I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], who, if present, would vote "yea." He is detained, being a member of the committee of the Federal Reserve Board in Chicago, and is out on a liberty-loan campaign. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILFLEY (when his name was called). As has been announced by the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], I am paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who is absent on account of illness in his family. If he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to change my vote from "yea" to "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—53.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not having a sufficient two-thirds majority, the joint resolution does not pass.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on the next legislative day of the Senate I shall move to reconsider the vote which has just been taken.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico subsequently said: It has been suggested to me by some Senators that in giving notice I would move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed I should state that I did not mean to intimate that I expected to call for another vote within the near future. My purpose is to permit the motion to reconsider to remain on the calendar, so that it may be taken up later on should there be a change in the Senate between now and the 4th of next March. I desire to announce, however, that no action will be taken without due notice to all Senators.

Mr. REED. Four or five days' notice?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Certainly; there will be ample notice of a vote.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I object to the consideration of the conference report to-day. The Senator from North Carolina says to me that the conference report is very important. That is very true, but the distinguished conferees have omitted a very important part of their duty. They have left out amendment No. 29, which the Senate unanimously put on, and I hardly think the conference report will be agreed to to-day under that situation of affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona object to the consideration of the report?

Mr. GORE. It does not require unanimous consent. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report.

Mr. ASHURST. That motion can not be made under the rule on the same day the report is presented.

Mr. GORE. The Senator is mistaken. That rule does not apply to a conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know the Senator has a perfect right to move to proceed to the consideration of the conference report under the rule, but the bill has been in the Senate or the House or in conference for months. It is a very important measure. The conference report has not been printed. I ask the Senator from Oklahoma not to press it to a vote at this time. Let the conference report be printed, and then we will see just what the conferees have agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, I will state my reason for asking for the present consideration of the conference report. The other House lost a quorum on Saturday last. They succeeded yesterday in obtaining, I understand, a bare quorum. It is feared that they will lose a quorum and that it will not be possible for them to act on the conference report unless they receive it at an early day. I am also informed that the chairman of the House committee had a death in his family that requires his absence from the city. I have no desire from any other consideration than that to press this matter upon the Senate. If there be any question which I can answer and clear up any misunderstanding or any doubt touching the conference report, I shall be very glad to do it. Of course if we can not reach a decision to-day and Senators insist on its going over, I realize that they really have a right to have the report printed before it is considered; but I am very anxious to have it considered while the House is in a situation to act upon it.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, October 3, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, October 1, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, that out of the world-wide war is coming a clearer and broader view of life and its purposes.

"He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

What hurts one hurts all; what helps one helps all, since each man is an integral part of the human family.

Make therefore our paths straight, that we may be one with Thee in thought and purpose, and thus bear our part in the dispensation of Thy Providence, our God and our Father, in His Name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of absence for three days for my colleague, Mr. DILL, who is detained at his home by sickness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for three days' leave of absence for his colleague [Mr. DILL] on account of sickness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, for 10 days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks leave for his colleague for 10 days. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. Is it on account of illness for himself or his family?

Mr. FREAR. I am not sure. He is in Wisconsin, and it will be very difficult for him to get back sooner.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered. Gentlemen requesting leave of absence should fill out the printed slips.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

BILLS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of the pending power bill it shall be in order for the Committee on Military Affairs to call up, until finally disposed of, such bills as are on the House and Union Calendars that have been favorably reported by that committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the pending bill it shall be in order to take up and consider until disposed of bills on the House and Union Calendars reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Reserving the right to object, I certainly do not wish to prevent any necessary or desirable military legislation. At the same time one of the important matters which ought to be considered immediately is the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I think we had better wait and see when we are going to get through with this pending bill. We can not tell from the progress we have made in the last few days how long it will take. After that is finished, then we can decide on subsequent business. For that reason I object temporarily.

Mr. DENT. I hope the gentleman will withhold that for a minute.

Mr. GILLETT. I certainly will.

Mr. DENT. Notwithstanding the fact that we are in the midst of a war, outside of the regular supply bills and the new draft legislation the Committee on Military Affairs have had only two days of the time of this House during this session of Congress for the purpose of enacting war legislation.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman can get the bills considered at any time he wishes, if it is important. All that is necessary is to have the Committee on Rules bring in a rule.

Mr. DENT. I will state further to the gentleman that there are only about half a dozen of these bills. I do not think they will take over one day. There will probably be three or four more bills reported by the time the occasion is reached.

Mr. GILLETT. I think for the present I will object. I would like to see the bills, and also I would like to see how soon we get through with the pending power legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

WINNING THE WAR.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN] has 15 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Speaker, during my 15 minutes I desire not to be interrupted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman announces that he does not wish to be interrupted during his 15 minutes.

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Speaker, 17 months after Congress declared war against the Imperial German Government the Army of the United States numbered 3,200,000 men. When we pledged all our resources in a death struggle against autocracy in all its forms we registered our determination to prosecute this war to a successful finish, regardless of cost or sacrifice.

Few realized the colossal tasks ahead of us and the almost impossible problems that had to be solved. The greatest task was that of raising and equipping an adequate army. Upon the Military Affairs Committee of the House was laid the responsibility of first deciding and recommending what, in their judgment, seemed to be the best method for providing the man power essential to the great task confronting the Nation. There were members of the committee who sincerely believed that the volunteer system should be adopted. There were others who, with equal sincerity, believed that a selective service law would constitute our strongest support.

During the several weeks of deliberation not one note of partisanship was sounded within that committee room. When a test vote was finally taken it revealed that there were 13 members who favored reporting to the House a volunteer bill. There were 8 members who believed otherwise. The following incident reveals how completely absent was any thought of partisanship: Immediately after this test vote was taken a Democratic member of the committee, favoring the selective draft, called the other seven members of similar view to his room for a conference. He stated his own unalterable conviction as to the necessity of adopting some form of selective draft, and that he would be one to bring in a minority report and report the same, even if his were to be the only vote cast in its favor. The remainder of the eight expressed themselves as being equally determined. It was then decided that the eight members would stand together and make a minority report.

Democrats and Republicans alike of that minority agreed that they would tolerate no partisanship, and in that spirit, and swayed by that spirit, they turned to the oldest member of the committee, JULIUS KAHN, as their leader. These eight members of the Military Affairs Committee, Democrats and Republicans, worked hand in hand and perfected the minority report which was offered to the House.

The result is well known. The House sustained the position taken by these eight Members. In the long debate preceding the action of the House I do not recall a single speech containing a phrase of partisanship. It is, therefore, unfortunate, to say the least, that anyone should attempt to claim partisan credit for a nonpartisan accomplishment.

We had in the Regular Army of the United States at that time 127,588 men. If the Nation at that time had said to the War Department, We shall expect you to take your Regular Army of 127,588 men and, in effect, divide them into companies of 10 each, and by September, 1918, we shall expect each of these companies to be recruited up to full strength of 250 men, giving us an army of 3,200,000 men; and, further, we shall expect these men to be thoroughly equipped with rifles and other munitions, thoroughly trained as fighting forces, well clothed, sufficient food provided, shelter—in the form of great cantonments—arrangements for medical service, with hospital accommodations for thousands; the development of an air service; the development of ocean transportation, that we may send hundreds of thousands of troops to France—I say that if such an order had been given the War Department at the declaration of hostilities it would have seemed an impossible task. But the Nation went further, saying, in effect, to the War Department: We shall expect you to have a fighting force of 3,200,000 men by September, 1918; and between April, 1917, and August, 1918, we shall expect you to furnish the following articles: Shoes, marching and field, 27,276,000; coats, cotton and wool, total, 19,537,000; breeches, cotton and wool, total, 29,820,000; shirts, cotton and flannel, total, 25,487,000; undershirts, cotton and winter, total, 83,971,000; drawers, cotton and winter, total, 83,042,000; stockings, cotton and wool, total, 156,672,000; hats, service, 7,779,000; and blankets, 21,005,000. We shall expect you to furnish between April, 1917, and September, 1918, the following quantities of six staple food articles: Bacon, 11,451,670 pounds; flour, 625,461,392 pounds; dry beans, 102,894,742 pounds; rice, 38,421,256 pounds; tomatoes, 72,274,529 cans; sugar, 186,582,316 pounds. We shall expect you to purchase 15,800 rolling kitchens to properly prepare this food. We shall expect you to purchase 1,064,251 tons of hay and 592,749 tons of oats. We shall expect you to purchase 278,732 horses and 131,917 mules. As a necessity for the transportation of materials and men by land, we expect you to provide 106,000 motor trucks, 10,700 passenger cars, 54,400 motorcycles, 11,500 bicycles, and 13,000 cargo and tank trailers. In air service we shall expect you to increase your officers from 65 to 7,465; we shall expect an enlargement of your enlisted men from 1,120 to 147,434. Instead of your three small aviation fields we shall expect you to provide 29 flying fields, thoroughly equipped for the training of America's flying forces. This will be in addition to the American airdomes and assembly fields in France and England. We shall expect you, by September, 1918, to produce 6,931 training planes, 1,440 De Haviland planes, 7,647 Liberty motors, and 12,500 training engines. By September 1918, we shall expect you to have 8,000 aviators training in the United States, besides 4,000 awaiting assignment to the ground schools. In addition to the large number of planes and engines delivered to our Army from the French and British, we shall expect American-made planes and American-made engines to be in actual combat service by July, 1918. We shall expect the ordnance section to meet the heavy requirements of our Army, producing in addition to purchases in France the following program:

American production in August, 1917, January, 1918, July, 1918, and August, 1918.

[July, 1918, includes four weeks, June 29–July 27, and August, 1918, includes five weeks, July 27–Aug. 31, except for explosives and propellants, which are for calendar month.]

Grand total	60,724,000	84,784,000	92,887,000

We shall expect you, on June 5, 1917, to have the young men between the ages of 21 and 31, inclusive, register throughout the Nation, which number shall total 9,586,508 men. We shall expect you to register on June 5, 1918, the young men who have become 21 since June 5, 1917, to the extent of 744,865 men. A similar registration we shall expect on August 24, 1918, to the extent of 159,151 men. Out of this total registration up to September 1, 1918, we shall expect the fighting forces under arms to number 3,200,000 men.

If the Nation had called upon the War Department at the declaration of war to meet this colossal program it would have seemed too staggering for achievement, and yet it has been done. If the Nation had said to the War Department in April, 1917, We shall expect you to transport more than 1,800,000 troops for foreign service by October 1, 1918, it would have sounded like the weird tale of the impossible—and yet it has been done.

The figures I have given are not the figures of estimates but the figures of accomplishment. The most tremendous program in the history of mankind has been successfully carried out by the war Department in the last 17 months. Germany's vaunted efficiency has nothing to compare with this achievement.

If the frontier of democracy had been on the American Continent instead of on the French front, and we were battling on our own soil against an overwhelming enemy; and to our rescue France, England, and Italy—with little to begin with—had at the end of 17 months dispatched to our shores an army of more than 1,800,000 men we would have called it marvelous. Is it any less marvelous that America has accomplished this gigantic task?

Mistakes have occurred, unquestionably. Is it even conceivable that such a tremendous program could ever have been achieved without mistakes? It would have been utterly impossible for this Nation to have reached its present progress in our war program without mistakes, unless every activity had been carried on by a host of perfected beings from heaven above; and yet we have had continuous and carping criticism from some individuals who do not hail from that particular region.

I entertain no feeling of resentment at criticism as such. Criticism coming from a heart pulsating with a desire for greater accomplishments is always helpful. Criticism that is constructive is always beneficial. But criticism that is simply carping and political is little less than treason. Happily such criticism has been crushed in the light of actual results.

But the accomplishments of the War Department during the past 17 months is not the whole story. They have a prodigious program still before them. The present Army of 3,200,000 men actually in the field, thoroughly armed and equipped, with every provision made for them, is being increased and will be increased without limit.

It is difficult to conceive the actual size of our present forces, let alone the larger forces yet to be. Do you realize how long it would take the present American Army of 3,200,000 men to pass a given point? Let us see how long it would take for the American forces, if it were possible to assemble them, to march in infantry formation by the steps of the National Capitol. It would appear to me that six hours a day for this type of marching, continued day after day, would be a fair average. If they were to begin such a march to-day—October 1, 1918—they would continue marching every day during the month of October, and not until the 20th day of November would the last column of soldiers pass the Capitol. If such a march in review were possible, and were delayed until next June, the time for marching troops by the Capitol would consume nearly three solid months.

But mere bigness is not the essential of strength. We might multiply our Army tenfold and still be weak. We might build guns without number, and not be strong. We might produce material resources mountains high, and still be overwhelmed. The strength of America lies in the spirit of her people at home and on the battle front. They are animated by a real love of their country, not because of her material greatness; not because of her broad acres; not because of the riches of her fertile valleys, nor the wealth hidden within her mountains. They love America because of the ideals and principles for which she stands—principles without which life would be a mockery and civilization a madman's dream.

Challenged by a brutal military autocracy the spirit of America was aroused in defense of interests the most vital and sacred. There followed the mobilization of our tremendous material forces. America was rich, and she willingly poured forth the utmost of her treasure. This was what Germany feared most of all. Steeped in her philosophy of the unconquerable might of the material forces, Germany failed utterly to realize the incalculable strength of our spiritual assets. She took no account of the soul of America. She estimated our strength in the number of our soldiers, failing completely to realize the kind of soldiers that we were sending. She did not—I dare say she could not appreciate the spirit back of American arms. To Germany, America was but the melting pot of nations, incapable of national unity and wholly contemptible as a military power. Little did Germany realize the influence of America in retaining the devotion of her native-born sons, and transforming the foreign-born sons into citizens equally patriotic, equally loyal and devoted. Let me quote two short speeches delivered in Madison Square Garden, New York City, in celebration of the Fourth of July. One boy, a descendant of a native American, spoke as follows:

I am an American. My father belongs to the Sons of the Revolution; my mother belongs to the Colonial Dames. One of my ancestors pitched tea overboard in Boston Harbor; another stood his ground with Warren; another hungered with Washington at Valley Forge. My forefathers were American in the making; they spoke in her council halls; they died on her battle fields; they commanded her ships; they cleared her forests. Dawns reddened and paled. Staunch hearts of mine beat fast at each new star in the Nation's flag. Keen eyes of mine foresaw her greater glory; the sweep of her seas, the plenty of her plains, the man hives in her billion-wired cities. Every drop of blood in me holds a heritage of patriotism. I am proud of my past. I am an American.

This was followed by a foreign-born lad, who arose and said:

I am an American. My father was an atom of dust; my mother was a straw in the wind of His Serene Majesty. One of my ancestors died in the mines of Siberia; another was crippled for life by 20 blows of the knout; another was killed defending his home during the massacres. The history of my ancestors is a trail of blood to the palace gate of the great white Czar. But then the dream came—the dream of America. In the light of liberty's torch the atom of dust became a man and the straw in the wind became a woman for the first time. "See," said my father, pointing to the flag that fluttered near, "that flag of stars and stripes is yours; it is the emblem of the promised land. It means, my son, the hope of humanity. Live for it; die for it." Under the open sky of my new country I swore to do so, and every drop of blood in me will keep that vow. I am proud of my future. I am an American.

The true spirit of America had gripped the heart of these lads as it has gripped your heart and mine. Boys of this type, grown to manhood's state, native born as well as American born, loyal to the core, devoted in soul, are standing foursquare on the western front, while over them floats the flag that has never touched the ground. Many have already fallen on the battle fields of France. Others yet will die, and in their death we witness the blood sacrifice for democracy's salvation. We do not expect Germany to understand this holy spirit of democracy which is inspiring America in all her war activities.

In the brief time allotted me I have only given an outline of the wonderful results which have been accomplished by one arm of the Government up to September, 1918. What has been done up to that time by the War Department constitutes a marvel of achievement. Such results have never been equaled in the history of man. It never could been accomplished had not partisanship been vanished, while patriotism led the way. Provincial politics would have wrecked our preparation. Any attempt to have made this a Democratic war or a Republican war would have been disastrous. Partisanship is not only petulant and provoking but at such a grave time as this it is absolutely perilous.

The present administration has stood on the solid rock of national devotion and loyalty. In the administrative work connected with the most stupendous task ever confronting any Government are associated men who are Democrats, men who are Republicans, working side by side in a unity of plan and purpose that has made the American Republic another name for magnificent achievement. Yet there are Members of this body who, clothing themselves with the paraphernalia of partisanship, are crying aloud for a change in the House of Representatives to assure a more vigorous prosecution of the war. Their cry is insincere. It is the equivalent of a severe arraignment of the administration or a calculated condemnation of the present Congress, or both.

They dare not attack the President and his administration, for they know well enough that the people of America are back of the President in this great war. They dare not openly attack the present Congress without thereby attacking themselves. Is there any Member of this House, be he Republican or Democrat, who will contend that the Sixty-fifth Congress has failed in a most vigorous prosecution of the war? If they have failed, then not simply one side of the House should be relieved of further duty, but the entire membership—Republicans and Democrats alike—deserve the most ignominious defeat possible at the hands of the people.

Just the opposite is the fact. The war Congress, as a whole, has been a loyal, hard-working, patriotic body. The most far-reaching and effective legislation has been passed, most of it with practically no opposition. Bond issues of staggering proportions and revenue bills of tremendous amounts have been enacted into law because of war necessity. Man-power bills have been authorized until nearly 25 per cent of our population has been made subject to military duty. Can another Congress, of whatever complexion, pass measures that will insure a more vigorous prosecution of the war?

Has the present Congress failed in voting sufficient money? Has the present Congress failed in voting sufficient men? Has the present Congress failed in making proper provision for these men? If not, what constitutes a more vigorous prosecution of the war? Such a question ought to be answered by those parochial politicians who seek to hoist the flag of partisanship where the flag of patriotism should wave. This is no time for men of township mind to insinuate their narrow thinking into the serious affairs of the Nation, when the country's destiny is at stake.

It would be fortunate, if it were possible, to have every Member of Congress and the political leaders of the Nation to visit the western front just as our American boys were rushing forward to meet, unflinchingly, the murderous fire of the Germans. There would be no delay in that attack in order to have a roll call to find out which were Democratic boys and which were Republican boys. As they went over the top, many of them to their death, their eyes would flash with Divine determination to fight to the last against the foes of civilization. At such an hour they could not think of partisan phrase or shibboleth, but, rather, would they be inspired by the big thoughts of world destiny. They would advance fearlessly as crusaders of civilization, warriors of liberty, defenders of freedom.

In the face of such an experience, where nothing less than national and world thought could inspire to action, I am sure that every Member of Congress and every political leader would throw aside the useless garments of partisanship and return home clothed about with a patriotism made resplendent by the glorious ideals and purposes of this mighty world war. Narrow thoughts could not then find expression. Partisan plans would be hurled aside. Baptized under that fire of world conflict, they would forget they were Democrats or Republicans in their consecrated devotion to the greatest cause that ever plunged nations into the mad vortex of war. [Applause.]

In this spirit alone can we be worthy of the splendid men who are defending the world's most sacred principles. It is this spirit of loyalty and devotion to the tremendous issues at stake that must control all our thoughts and energies. It is with this spirit of deepest consecration to our great cause that we can win the war and bring again to earth the blessings of a righteous and lasting peace. [Applause.]

EMERGENCY POWER.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the emergency power bill, H. R. 12776.

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary for the gentleman to make that motion. The rule evidently contemplates the automatic going into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Is the ruling of the Chair to the effect that tomorrow, Calendar Wednesday, will be dispensed with?

The SPEAKER. No. It takes unanimous consent or a two-thirds vote to dispense with Calendar Wednesday. Now, this is a curious question. The Chair has not had time to investigate it and does not know how far back it runs, but evidently the first man who ever drew a rule like this one did it when somebody was conducting a systematic filibuster. It may have been a Democrat or it may have been a Republican, but there would be roll calls on everything, among other things on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, and that would delay business. If I had time I would investigate to find out the reasons which prompted the drawing of that first rule. The question has been raised here three or four times, and the Chair has always ruled the same way. Evidently that was the origin of it. Of course, no condition of that kind exists here now, but still the Committee on Rules brought in this rule in the usual language, providing that immediately upon the adoption of the rule the House should resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WALSH. Then the Speaker rules that this particular rule making this bill in order should be interpreted in the same manner as a rule containing the words "and shall be a continuing order"?

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the Chair holds.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire whether, under the phraseology of this rule, if this bill is not finished in the Committee of the Whole on Saturday evening when the House adjourns, this bill will supplant the business in order on next Monday, the Unanimous-Consent Calendar, and suspension of the rules?

I am asking for the construction of the present rule with that in mind—this does not say it shall be a continuing order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks by this rule, by its verbiage, that it would cut out business on the first and third Monday. But certainly it does not on Calendar Wednesday. The Chair is not so positive about the business on Monday as he is on Wednesday, and will investigate that matter before next Monday.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should it cut out the business on Calendar Wednesday and not on suspension day, except that the rule provides that the committee shall not report any rule cutting out Calendar Wednesday? I suppose that is the basis of the Chair's opinion.

The SPEAKER. The rule says:

It shall always be in order to call up for consideration a report from the Committee on Rules, and, pending the consideration thereof, the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House adjourn; but after the result is announced he shall not entertain any other dilatory motion until the said report shall have been fully disposed of. The Committee on Rules shall not report any rule or order which shall provide that business under paragraph 7 of Rule XXIV shall be set aside by a vote of less than two-thirds of the Members present; nor shall it report any rule or order which shall operate to prevent the motion to recommit being made as provided in paragraph 4 of Rule XVI.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the Chair predicate his ruling upon the language "Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this rule the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union"?

The SPEAKER. Yes. This rule has an addendum to it, and it may be in all the rules: "After the bill shall have been perfected in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union it shall be reported to the House."

Mr. WALSH. What else could be done with it?

The SPEAKER. The committee might drop it.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand that a motion to strike out the enacting clause is not now in order in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is asking so many parliamentary questions that the Chair——

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, it is not in order in Committee of the Whole under the rule. The rule says you can not move to strike out the enacting clause because the House has ordered the Committee of the Whole to consider it in Committee of the Whole, and you can not move to strike out the enacting clause after it has been ordered to be considered by special order.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I am asking the Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the Chair will not decide that that can be done, because the decisions and the rule says that where the bill is being considered in Committee of the Whole by order of the House it is not in order to move to strike out the enacting clause. I think that is very plain.

The SPEAKER. That question is not presented here. But if this rule does not mean what the Chair construes it to mean, there is no sense in the rule at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I be permitted to say a word, if the gentleman will permit? The only purpose of the Committee on Rules in reporting the rule was to give it a privileged status. I do not think it was the thought of any member of the committee that they were giving it an exclusive status, and that by reporting the rule we were going to cut off conference reports and matters of the highest privilege. The purpose of the report was to give the bill a privileged status, and we put that language at the end, so that it would not require it to be completed in a single day. I make that statement in justice to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not hold that this rule, or any rule, would shut off conference reports. They are the very essence of legislation. There is not a Member of the House who uses the English language more precisely than does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], and the chances are ten to one that the Committee on Rules went on and reported the rule in the stereotyped way.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I fully concur in the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee with respect to the intent of this rule. I hope the Chair will not find it necessary to decide the question whether or not the rule sets aside the first and third Mondays in the month.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not going to decide that question now.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am quite sure it was not the intention of the Committee on Rules to give any greater privilege to this bill than a privileged status under the rules of the House.

Mr. WALSH. How do conference reports get any privilege if the House resolves itself automatically into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule on that when the time comes. All of these rules ought to be construed in the direction of expediting business. Speaker Reed never did lay down a proposition clearer than that or one that had more sense. He said that all rules were made for the purpose of expediting business and not retarding business, and he followed that with an iron hand.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, is it possible to get a division on the question of going into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union each day on this bill?

The SPEAKER. Not under this rule.

Mr. ROGERS. Then it seems that the rule in not permitting the House to raise that question is a rule that defeats the expediting of business of the House.

The SPEAKER. Here is the situation. The Committee on Rules of the House comes in with a rule which fixes the order of business. The House has adopted that rule by the committee.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Chair permit a suggestion, that under this phraseology it does not contain the words "and shall be a continuing order." This simple little rule, under the construction of the Chair, gives this measure a higher status than an appropriation bill, because on appropriation bills we have to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union each day.

The SPEAKER. The time to have remedied that was when this rule was up.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think that the question is beyond argument now, even after the statement of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is perfectly willing to hear argument about it. There are two things this House does in a kind of automatic way—one is agreeing to a rule and the other is ordering the previous question.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair will permit, if this is an automatic call, is it right for the Speaker even to receive a message from the Senate?

The SPEAKER. Oh, those things have to be done.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are other matters under the rules of the House that should be considered, too.

The SPEAKER. You can not stop the business of the House stock still.

Mr. STAFFORD. The decision of the Speaker, if adhered to, would stop the business of legislation, even to the extent of refusing to receive a message from the President or the Senate; it would block all legislation.

The SPEAKER. If they did not want it that way, they ought not to bring in a rule of that kind; and if they do bring in a rule of that kind Members ought to beat the rule. There is nothing sacred about a rule.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Speaker will bear with me, this language simply gives this bill a privileged character. If they wished to make it a continuing order, so it would be in the province of the Chair to hold that the House resolve itself automatically into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, why, then, they would express this that way; but this just gives it a privileged status, that is all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair serves notice on the House that he is going to rule this way every time this kind of a rule comes up; and if the House does not like it, it has its remedy.

Mr. WALSH. No opportunity is given to amend the rule when it is brought in.

The SPEAKER. The real remedy is to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Vote down the previous question on the rule.

Mr. SEARS. As the Chair has ruled that the House resolves itself automatically into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I make the point of order that the gentlemen on the other side are out of order.

The SPEAKER. Everybody has been out of order, on both sides. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12776), with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12776, with Mr. HOUSTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12776, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12776) to provide further for the national security and defense and for the more effective prosecution of the war by furnishing means for the better utilization of the existing sources of electrical and mechanical power and for the development of new sources of such power, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That whenever any act done pursuant to the provisions of this act shall constitute a taking of private property within the meaning of the Constitution just compensation shall be made therefor in an amount to be determined by the President; and if the amount so determined by the President is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by the President and shall be entitled to sue the United State to recover such further sum as, added to said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor, in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 11, lines 3 and 4, after the word "constitution," insert "and the laws of the several States."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 11, line 5, after the word "amount," insert the words "and in the manner."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to recur to section 3 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMS. There is no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 15, after the word "President," insert "subject to the limitations set forth in paragraph 13 of section 2."

Mr. ESCH. We rewrote subsection 13 yesterday by providing that these employees, clerks, and so forth, could come under civil service. This section 3 brings in another list of employees, so I wish to make the same application as to them.

Mr. SIMS. This is the same amendment that has already been adopted.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ESCH. I have another amendment to offer, and I think the chairman will admit it ought to be made. On page 10, line 19, there appears a comma after the word "time." Either there ought to be a semicolon or the word "and" ought to be inserted, and I suggest that we insert the word "and" and strike out the comma.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 19, after the word "time," strike out the comma and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That no structure affecting the navigable capacity of any navigable waters of the United States shall be constructed or installed under the provisions of this act until the plans therefor have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, or such other body as may be authorized by Congress.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 12, lines 5 and 6, after the word "War," in line 5, insert the following: "or such other body as may be authorized by Congress."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 4, after the word "until," insert "a hearing has been held and."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I submitted that amendment to the chairman of the committee, and he expressed himself as in favor of it.

Mr. SIMS. I see no objection to it.

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman is of the same opinion, I do not care to discuss it.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to be heard on that.

Mr. ROGERS. Is the gentleman opposed to the amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. I am opposed to it.

Mr. ROGERS. Then perhaps I will say a word. I believe, Mr. Chairman, it will be agreed generally by the committee that a hearing is a fundamental element in our procedure; that in criminal, in civil, and in administrative law of all kinds the person against whom a proceeding of law is moving is permitted to be heard, to state his case, and to offer such objections as he may see fit against the action which is contemplated.

Mr. ESCH. Would not the use of the word "approve" imply a hearing?

Mr. ROGERS. I think not. The section now reads "until the plans therefor have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War." It would seem to me perfectly clear that the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers might frequently reach a decision and "approve" the action of their subordinates without affording an opportunity to the interested private party to be heard.

Mr. ESCH. The language in italics inserted in the section are in view of the provisions in the general water-power bill which contemplate a commission, and under the water-power bill the commission has full jurisdiction over the subject matter and, under the practice, would have the hearing.

Mr. ROGERS. The practice is a very excellent thing, but the practice can be changed at will, of course. Does the gentleman see any objection to providing in the law that the interested person may be given a chance to be heard?

Mr. ESCH. I have only this possible objection, that a hearing may necessitate delay, and this is an emergency matter, and the Government may have to act on the instant.

Mr. ROGERS. Of course, it would be true that it would be in the hands of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War when the hearing should be held and how much notice of it should be given. The other party would be obliged to conform to the suggestions which were made by the Government officials. Under the circumstances I can not think that there would be any danger of delay which would imperil the advancement of any project.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will not prevail, because it will have a tendency to delay perhaps the most important thing that may be required to be done in connection with the development of power, and time in a case like this is of the greatest importance.

This bill has been pending now for about a week, and a great many of us have not really understood the importance of its early enactment. I have not been very enthusiastic for the bill myself, but I took the liberty this morning of spending an hour or two in going through the plans which the Council of National Defense has for the development of power and the purposes for which the power is to be used. I was amazed to find after looking the plans over that the emergency is not only here, but it is imperative that action should be taken not only on this bill but upon the work that is to follow the enactment of the law. The calculations made by the Council of National Defense for the development of power for the manufacture of equipment for the war were based on an Army the size of which was not much more than a quarter of what the Army is finally to be. We have been proceeding on the theory that we had equipment enough to meet the needs of the emergency. But as the Army grows from day to day it is found that the manufacturing plants throughout the United States needed for the production of material necessary to supply the Army in the field are inadequate and that plants must be increased in size and volume and power supply if we are to meet the expectations of success abroad. I had no idea that the thing was as important as it is until I made this investigation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As the gentleman has made this investigation, could he inform us just where it was planned to place these plants and whether they are steam or water plants?

Mr. MADDEN. They are all over the United States, and I have a typical drawing of one district, for example, taking in the Pittsburgh territory and eastern Ohio and some of West Virginia, beginning down here at Windsor and Wheeling, and moving along to Washington, Pa., and down to McKeesport and Connellsville and Duquesne, Cheswick, Pittsburgh, Lincoln, Freeport, Butler, Junction Park, Ellwood, West Pittsburgh; and Lowellville, Youngstown, Brier Hill, Warren, Alliance, Massillon, Canton, and Bolivar, Ohio.

And these are only typical towns which I have named. And the proposition is to consolidate, as far as possible, the power to supply any plant within the area of this district from any power plant that may have a surplus of power. That will necessitate the construction of the pipe lines that I had some doubt about a day or two ago, and in connection with which I asked some questions, and it is found that in the territory of which I have this plan the present possible development of power is 100,000 kilowatts, whereas the need for 1919 will be 230,000 kilowatts. It requires an addition of 130,000 kilowatts. The development of power necessary to meet the needs throughout the country will require an additional million kilowatts during the year 1919.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. And since the Army has gone to—from what we originally proposed, 1,200,000—3,500,000 men, and is going up to 5,000,000 men, it is of the utmost importance that power be developed or supplied from where it is to places where it does not exist, through transmission lines, so that we can keep the men who are working in the factories that are making war munitions employed. In some of these factories, I may say now, the men are required to lay off part of two or three days a week because of the shortage of power. And if that continues to a very considerable extent throughout the country it will embarrass the War Department in supplying the needs of the Army. Every calculation that was made with respect to the needed power in the beginning was based on the original size of the Army. The greatest objection to the attitude of the Council of National Defense or the War Department that can be made in this connection is the fact that they did not see the need of this question earlier. But perhaps they are not to blame for that. They had to investigate to find out what power existed everywhere in the United States. My investigation shows that they have done that systematically; that they have a record of all the power that exists everywhere. They have divided the country into zones. The department contemplates the concentration of power within the zones so that it can be supplied from any plant that has more to any plant that has less power than needed; that new power plants can be created, and hence the importance of not adopting the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS], because if that amendment should be adopted and hearings were necessary, in the case of navigable streams, the delay might be fatal.

Under ordinary circumstances I would favor the amendment of the gentleman, but this is not an ordinary case. And I hope that he will withdraw the amendment, because I think the urgency of the case is such as to make it imperative that no delay shall be had when power development is necessary at any particular place in the United States. For example, I found from my investigation that the tabulations that were made show there is considerable power in the city of New York that could be transferred across the river into New Jersey if this bill gives the President the authority to make the transfer. Until the law is passed he would not have the power to make the transfer, and inasmuch as it is to be transferred from one State to another, negotiations would probably have to be had between the States. But with this law in force I think the President would have the power to make the order. In the present emergency the New Jersey plants are short of power to the extent of keeping some of the great munition plants idle in New Jersey, whereas if the President had the power he could order the transfer of that power from New York, where they have a surplus, and thus keep the New Jersey plants working to their fullest extent. And so I think I have learned from the investigation that I took the trouble to make that this bill is of greater importance than any of us had any idea it was.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; surely.

Mr. ROGERS. Does the gentleman think that the hearings in the infrequent cases where they would probably be asked for would result in any material delay, so as to prejudice the war preparations of the country?

Mr. MADDEN. That is the only thing I am afraid of, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts. No matter how infrequent it might be, it might be all important to avoid delay. The delay might be fatal in the matter, no matter how infrequent it might be. If so, it ought not to be allowed. I hope that the gentleman will withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I am glad to hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] say what he has. When the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] mentioned to me privately about the proposed hearing I took the same view of it that the gentleman from Massachusetts does now—that it would not be a hearing requiring any particular length of time, and that it would not be given unless there was a demand, and where there was a demand, of course, I thought it would be by some man who had a complaint and whose property might be injured; and all the hearing, as I understand, that is contemplated by this amendment is that when the request for a hearing comes to the engineers of the War Department it would be acted on in the most expeditious manner and without any appreciable delay. Of course, if it would involve serious delay I am confident that the gentleman from Massachusetts himself would not press his amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. That is true. But the gentleman would assume, would he not, that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the hearings would be asked for and given promptly and no delay would intervene?

Mr. SIMS. That is what I understood from the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts. All the way through I have welcomed suggestions as to amendments. This is no party bill. It is not my bill. I never wrote a word of it, as I have tried to convince the House from time to time, lest some one, having a feeling against me, might try to take out his grudge against me by opposing this measure. I have not opposed amendments where I have felt no harm would be done by them, even where there is no good in them. I realize that the gentleman from Massachusetts is anxious to do all that can be done in the winning of the war. I saw no practical harm in the gentleman's amendment, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has made a very illuminating statement as to the situation, and I think what he has said ought to be taken into consideration by the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman, if it is not embarrassing to him, state to the committee whether or not he favors or opposes the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. SIMS. I do not think an informal complaint made by somebody who might be interested would result in serious and material delay. If it would in practice cause delay, of course I would oppose it. It is just a question of what kind of a hearing is to be had and the length of time it is to cover. I think nobody can controvert what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has just stated as to the main purposes of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that the brief time that might be taken in one of these hearings would appreciably delay the execution of the work. In the hearings I find the statement of one of the witnesses that they do not expect to get this work completed inside of a year or 18 months. If they expect to spend even $20,000,000 on some particular plant, as I understand they do, they certainly would not expect to get it completed in much less than that time.

But I did not rise to speak so much of that matter as upon another subject. I got some information from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] as to the location of these plants. Apparently they are to be located mostly in the East, and in a congested district. I hold in my hands a map of one of these districts, which the gentleman from Illinois has kindly furnished me. I wish the committee had seen fit to go into the matter more fully and attach a list of these maps to their report.

Mr. SIMS. I will say to the gentleman that the committee did go fully into this matter, and Lieut. Stanley in his testimony gives all details. Now, why do we not have maps with the hearings? I would have been glad to have incorporated maps with the report, but when I asked for information as to whether it would materially delay the printing of the hearings I was answered that the Printing Office could not immediately print the maps. I was trying to expedite the matter and did not think the maps were so important as to warrant the delay in the printing of the hearings for the length of time required for the production of the maps. Now, what I want gentlemen to do is to be candid and not to make captious criticisms not founded on substance.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman can make his speeches in his own time. The printing of these blue prints would not take any time. They could be run off in a few minutes by electric light. The testimony of the witness does not identify the localities so that we can tell anything about it.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] stated that they have gone all over the whole country in search of sites for power plants. It does not seem to me that they have been looking very carefully. If they had gone out to Keokuk, Iowa, they would have found 100,000 horsepower going to waste right there to-day. All it needs is putting in the turbine wheels. There is the great dam that cost over $20,000,000. There are the wheel pits, power house, transmitters, and everything except the turbine wheels to furnish 100,000 more horsepower if they wanted it. Of course, gentlemen will say that they have got their plants located in the East, and I must admit they persist in putting them there. Notwithstanding attention has been repeatedly called to the situation, new plants are still being constructed in the East.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to have three minutes more. My friends will not permit me to talk without interruption.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. I understand the Keokuk Dam is now supplying 90,000 or 100,000 horsepower, of which the city of St. Louis takes 60,000. They do have wheel pits for six or more turbines, but to utilize all of those turbines would require a larger water supply, and they could not have a continuous power using all of the wheel pits. They would have to put in supplemental steam power. I have been there, and I am familiar with the conditions.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is in error if he thinks they could have no more continuous power there.

Mr. ESCH. I admit that they could by raising the general level of the pools.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Without raising the level, much more power could be obtained; and by a very slight expense they could get the whole 100,000 horsepower additional by raising the general surface of the reservoir.

Mr. SIMS. Will not this bill permit the very thing to be done the gentleman is discussing?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; but they are not proposing to do it.

Mr. SIMS. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Because nobody here, or anywhere within the hearing of the committee, has ever mentioned it.

Mr. SIMS. We propose to do it wherever it is needed for the purpose of expediting the manufacture of war materials, whether at Keokuk or anywhere else. If my friend is waiting to have every one of these places identified in this debate, I am afraid the war will end before it is done.

Mr. SLOAN. We want the war to end.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I repeat that the great Father of Waters is sending down 100,000 horsepower there at Keokuk which is being wasted, which at very slight expense could be utilized. It would not need $100,000,000 or $20,000,000, and I do not believe it would need $1,000,000 to enable the Government to use this whole 100,000 horsepower. The trouble is that they persist in locating all of these plants in the East. If they construct any new plants or buildings they put them in the East, notwithstanding that out there is the great river which can be used to obtain iron from the North and coal from the Ohio, and down which the completed products can be shipped to the Gulf. Along this great river there are barges waiting, with plenty of transportation, and there is no occasion to congest the railways as we are doing now and clog up our ports with the products of the factories on its banks.

The port of New Orleans can be used, and that is not congested to the extent that eastern ports are. In spite of all these facts these gentlemen, who are mainly interested in the East and for some reason or other can only see through eastern spectacles, keep all these plants in the East, when they ought to be transferred to the West to a large extent, where all these natural resources are ready for them and there are ample supplies of power. That is the situation. That is what needs remedying to-day. They say they are going to do it; but I am unable to find that they are taking any steps in that direction, and that is what I am complaining about. There is plenty of power in Chicago, but little war work is being done there. Why the war work is not brought to the power is something that no one has undertaken to explain.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] is pending, and debate on that amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. STAFFORD. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes on the pro forma amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS]. I believe there has been too much delay already in the presentation of this necessary power bill to the attention of Congress.

A complete survey has been made by representatives of the Government, which shows where power conditions are normal, where there is a power shortage, and where there is an excess of power. The argument of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has no relevancy in connection with this bill. There is no shortage of power in the vicinity of Keokuk, Iowa, or within 200 miles of that place. If the gentleman had studied the report of this survey carefully he would have seen that the survey made by the officials of the Government shows that there is no shortage of water power for 200 miles around Keokuk. At Chicago there is no shortage of power, according to this survey.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is just what I am complaining about. They will not put any of these plants in the West, where there is plenty of power.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman, with his impracticable theories, would delay the winning of the war for two years or more to establish plants out there where there would be power, rather than to bring the power right to the plants. If he had any practical knowledge of the mechanics of manufacturing he would know that what is necessary is to bring power to plants already established. Canada has met this issue. She is away in advance of this country. She has developed to its maximum capacity the water power of Niagara Falls on the Canadian side. We have been laggard and backward in that particular. There are certain districts in this country where munitions are being manufactured. The remedy suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] is not to utilize these plants in the East to their maximum capacity, but to establish new plants out in the Middle West. That is all past. We are now right in the midst of winning the war. The thing to do is to bring the war to a sudden close, and it is necessary to have additional power to run these plants, wherever they are located, to their maximum capacity.

What would be the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS]? I can not agree with the gentleman who has charge of this bill that it would only provide for an informal hearing. Anyone who knows anything about investigations by the Government knows that it means that any such hearing as is prescribed by this amendment would mean delay.

Mr. SIMS. I am not advocating the amendment at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. I tried by a direct question to ascertain whether the gentleman favored the amendment or not. I could not ascertain. I did not want to embarrass him by asking how he was going to vote, because that is a matter for his own conscience; but as chairman of the committee having this bill in charge I did try to find out from him whether he favored it or not, but I got an evasive answer. I am utterly opposed to any such delay as is contemplated. The wording of the bill is ample protection. You can certainly leave it to the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War to determine whether it is necessary. They are not going to impair the use of streams for navigation, unless it is necessary to generate power to win the war.

Mr. ROGERS. Does not the gentleman think that even the Chief of Engineers may sometimes err, and that it is fair that a private individual should have a chance to present his case?

Mr. STAFFORD. Private individual to have boats navigating the stream!

I would far rather have the Chief Engineer err on the side of winning the war by creating additional power even though it might infringe on the private rights of individuals. Their rights are secured under the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. They are not secured unless they can present their case.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are secured; the next section or two gives ample guaranty to all private property. Under the gentleman's amendment we would have delay. You would allow these persons to come before the War Department and there would be delay of weeks and weeks. What is necessary is to give authority to the Secretary of War and the heads of the departments so that they can go ahead and equip these power plants wherever it is necessary so that they will have adequate power to meet war needs.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the chairman of the committee if the Niagara Falls has been taken over by the Government?

Mr. SIMS. I do not understand that Niagara Falls has been commandeered, I do not think it has.

Mr. CANNON. I presume not; but under this bill could the power on the American side be increased?

Mr. SIMS. I understand that it is possible to increase the power on the American side, and I think the means could be furnished under this bill.

Mr. CANNON. So that the power that is going to waste, which is a very large amount, could be utilized?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; and it is very badly needed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment again be reported.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That any person who shall knowingly neglect or refuse to comply with any order or requisition made by the President or by any officer, agent, or agency whom he shall have designated or created pursuant to the provisions of section 3 hereof, or who shall knowingly obstruct or attempt to obstruct the enforcement of or the compliance with any such requisition or order, or who, by means of any false statement or fraudulent representation, shall induce or attempt to induce the President or any such officer, agent, or agency to lend, advance, or provide any moneys, or to provide or install any property, or to enter into any contract, or to perform any other act authorized by the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 8, after the word "requisition," insert: "authorized by the provisions of this act and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the President may retain any property and operate any plants, transmission lines, structures, facilities, or appliances constructed or acquired under the provisions of this act for such time as he may deem necessary or advisable for the purpose of selling or otherwise disposing thereof.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 2, after the word "thereof," strike out the period and insert the following: "not exceeding one year after the war period."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word about this amendment. This question may be very troublesome. Probably it would be better if the whole clause was omitted, because it gives power after the war is over, not only to maintain power plants acquired by the Government but to operate them whether they are required or not, so as to be a sort of a permanent thing. It seems right that a reasonable time should be allowed in which to sell plants unless the Government wants to keep them, say, for its own powder plants. Their operation is possibly necessary to hold them, but I am really very much worried at keeping these plants, generally, for such time as anyone pleases and going on with their operation. It looks very much like establishing a monopoly of power throughout the United States.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will.

Mr. ESCH. Would the gentleman be satisfied in lieu of his amendment to strike out the words "or acquired," in line 24, and substitute the words "by the United States," so that it would read:

That the President may retain any property and operate any plant, transmission line, structures, facilities, or appliances constructed by the United States under the provisions of this act—

And so forth?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am thinking on my feet and I can not answer the gentleman's question right away. The United States expects, as I understand it, to have constructed through a fund provided for the period of the war these additions and structures, and they get title to enormous connections between all of these plants which would give them absolute control over the production. It is not merely the machinery in them, but the connections of one with another which makes them a tremendous, enormous, single power plant. We ought to be cautious about authorizing the Government to control the power of the country by such means, and yet I am very much worried as to how we can do it by statute without hampering the Government. My own idea is that it would be better to leave this question until we find out what conditions are after the war, and that it would be better to strike out the whole clause. But in order not to embarrass the bill my amendment limits the time for the period of one year after the war period. I do not know whether that would be sufficient or not, but Congress will be in session before the treaty of peace, and will be able to dispose of that question. I want gentlemen to realize what this means. They will construct connections between those plants and put machinery in them which may become absolutely essential to the operation of those plants and which ought to be settled for after the war unless we intend to have Government operation of power indefinitely and forever. That operation ought really to be limited therefore to a reasonable time. I will not object to two years in this particular clause, but I think it is better to say one, because one year is time enough for Congress to sit. There are six months in the war period after the treaty of peace, and it would probably be a whole year between the termination of the war and the declaration of the treaty of peace, so that there is really two years and six months, which is ample time to dispose of the matter. I therefore move, as I say, an amendment by which the power granted by this bill to continue to operate plants during peace time shall be limited to a year after the war period, which I think will be two years and six months after the termination of the war. The administration must dispose of it by that time unless Congress makes some other arrangement.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin what his suggestion was?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The gentleman from Wisconsin suggested that we strike out the words "or acquire," so this should apply only to plants or property constructed by the United States, but the United States under the bill, as I say, constructs everything, whether it gets a man to build for it by advancing funds or builds by its own agents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition. I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin why he moves to strike out the word "acquire"? Would it not be necessary, if the President or the Government acquire a plant, to have some time for sale or disposing of it as if it were constructed by the Government itself?

Mr. ESCH. My thought in that connection was this: Where the Government builds a plant or a transmission line with its own money, and therefore owns it, we should not compel the President to dispose of that property within the limitation of time prescribed in other sections of the bill, and that under the limitation prescribed by the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey the Government might still wish to continue the operation of that plant built by the Government's money, that transmission line, for years thereafter, and I have in mind the development of power, for instance, at a navigation dam where there is surplus water for power production.

Mr. SIMS. I agree with the gentleman. I wanted to know why he was not willing that the same power should exist where the President had acquired property. The Government would still own it.

Mr. ANDERSON. The term "acquire" would include a situation where the Government had a lease or right of possession and occupation.

Mr. SIMS. I know; but the whole object expressed in this bill is, as he may deem necessary or advisable he might sell or otherwise dispose of it. He must sell if he acquires as well as if he constructs.

Mr. ANDERSON. Not if it is only right of possession or lease upon the property.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman makes a fine distinction. I was discussing what is the difference in fact in having no limitation where the Government constructed it or acquired it. If the Government owns the property and gets possession of it, it needs the time to dispose of it; it ought to apply to acquired property as well as to property constructed by the Government, and I was asking the gentleman from Wisconsin what his reason was for striking out "acquire." I know he always has a reason, and a good reason, for anything that he proposes.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, under subsection (1) of section 2 we provide for the construction at any place, and so forth, of power plants and provide for coking of coal and the production of toluol, and so forth. Now, that is construction that would be by Government money, and the plant after it has been constructed would be owned by the Government, and it might be advisable that the Government should continue operation of that plant long after the war time.

Mr. SIMS. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. ESCH. I therefore did not want to put any limitation of time in a case of that kind. Now, in subsection (2) of section 2 we provide for the advancing of money, leasing of machinery, equipment, and so forth. In that case I do not think that the Government should continue operation of those plants, and not being Government owned, I did not want the Government to be compelled to relinquish.

Mr. SIMS. I agree with the gentleman exactly where the Government acquires title to the property—and we had a long discussion here as to what the word "acquire" meant—if the Government acquires and owns property, there may be reason to give time to dispose of it as well as if the Government built it.

Mr. ESCH. We have stricken out the part defining "acquire."

Mr. SIMS. I know; and we had a long discussion about that. I, of course, am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment by striking out "one" and inserting the word "five," so it will read "five years after the war period."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK to the amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Strike out the word "one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to see if we can agree to a limitation of debate. I will ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments—not the section, but the paragraph, and all amendments thereto—close in five minutes. Do other gentlemen desire to be heard?

Mr. SLOAN. I want five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I want to offer a further amendment if the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey is adopted.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman can offer a further amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I want to offer a further amendment, and I will be very frank with the gentleman. I think I have great confidence in the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I understand the gentleman from Tennessee agrees with the gentleman from Wisconsin, substantially. It seems to me that amendment ought to go in.

Mr. SIMS. That can be made afterwards.

Mr. CANNON. That cuts off discussion of it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] and amendments to that amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] and all amendments to that amendment be closed in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I object. I asked for five minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Make it 10 minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I would like two minutes in which to reply.

Mr. SIMS. Then make it 12 minutes. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey and all amendments to that amendment close in 12 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey and all amendments thereto close in 12 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] is recognized.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, in this bill the war period has been definitely defined to be six months after the conclusion of a treaty of peace as proclaimed by the President. The amendment I have offered would have the effect to direct a disposal of the Federal ownership in these plants within a period of five years and six months after the conclusion of a treaty of peace. I think that a direction of this kind conforms to the intent and purpose of the bill in a very harmonious way, as it has been explained and interpreted by the members of the committee who are in charge of it.

As I understand this bill, it is not the purpose of it to put the Federal Government into the ownership of public utilities. It certainly ought not to be its purpose to do a thing of that kind, and it is our duty to see to it that no provision in it will permit a happening of that sort.

Now, I am not going to try in the few minutes that I have at my disposal to undertake a discussion of Federal Government ownership of public utilities. That is a big question, and along that line I care only to say that I am opposed to the general idea of Government ownership of private business, but if Government ownership of public utilities should become advisable at all, it should be ownership by the States or their political subdivisions, and not by the Federal Government, except, of course, in matters of strictly interstate concern.

Now, during the hearings on this bill this question of Government ownership of public utilities came up in the committee. Mr. DEWALT, one of the members of the committee, asked the Secretary of War the following question about this identical section 8, which we are now considering. Here is the question:

Does not that look almost like permanent ownership of these various plants, and might it not be so construed, if the President so desired? There seems to be no limitation there at all as to the ownership of these various plants, except in so far as it says that he shall hold them as long as he may think it necessary.

Gentlemen, let me emphasize there is no limitation at all of the duration of this ownership, but it may continue as long as the President may will it so. Now, what did the Secretary of War say? He replied and admitted that such was the proper construction of the section, and then further said:

I would not be able to suggest the language which might be appropriate to carry out that idea. The lawyers will be here and will doubtless be able to do it. But I will say, generally, that I agree with you perfectly. This is not the place to settle the great policy of Federal ownership. What we want to do now is to get the power.

Now, before the committee also appeared Mr.——

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman read what Mr. DEWALT said right there in connection with what you read?

Mr. BLACK. I read exactly what he said.

Mr. SIMS. I mean right below, right where the gentleman finished reading.

Mr. BLACK. I will permit you to read it in my time. If Mr. DEWALT said anything else which you think is pertinent to the subject under discussion, I shall be glad to have you read it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. DEWALT said to the Secretary of War:

The immediate purpose is to get power and not get permanent ownership?

Secretary BAKER. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. It does not change the interpretation which I have made of section 8 at all. Mr. DEWALT pointed out that there was absolutely no limitation to the duration of the time of Federal ownership except the limitation of the will of the President, and the Secretary of War admitted as much.

Now, before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce also appeared Mr. Eugene Meyer, jr., director of the War Finance Corporation. He was one of the leading advisers in the preparation of this bill. Let us see how he interprets it. Mr. DEWALT also quoted the section to him and asked the following question——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time be modified and extended to 15 minutes instead of ending in 12 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I hope consent will be given to extend the time three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the time be extended three minutes and that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] shall have that time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLACK. I thank the Chairman for that courtesy. As I was proceeding to say, Mr. Eugene Meyer, jr., one of the directors of the War Finance Corporation, was one of the principal advisers in the preparation of this bill. Now, Mr. DEWALT asked him the following question:

Wouldn't that leave in the hands of the President an unlimited power to retain any of these plants, transmission lines, or structures indefinitely, and thus almost inevitably lead to public ownership of these facilities? He has the right to determine whether he will sell, how he will sell, at his own sweet will. Secretary Baker said he was not against public ownership of such utilities. Now, some people differ with him.

Now, here is Mr. Meyer's reply:

We have tried to straddle and not take sides.

Gentlemen, I submit now is no time to undertake to saddle upon the American people, either directly or indirectly, the fact of the Federal ownership of public utilities. [Applause.] It is no time for gentlemen to undertake to straddle upon questions of this kind or to try to undertake to induce Congress to straddle upon them. We should deal with all such questions in a spirit of entire frankness to the American people. It is our duty to do so, and anything short of it will not be meeting the measure of service which they have a right to expect of us in these times of serious responsibility. And yet here is a director of the War Finance Corporation and one of the principal advisers in the preparation of this bill who admits that the framers of it tried to straddle and not take sides on the question of permanent Government ownership. That question should not be in here at all, but a time limitation should be fixed, just as my amendment proposes to do. The question of the Federal Government ownership of public utilities can soon enough be taken up after the excitement and the turmoil and the distractions of war have passed away and the public mind has regained its normal processes. Now is no time for any great committee of this House or any of its legal advisers to drag in a Trojan horse which may in its final results commit us to the policy of Government ownership of these public utilities.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. There are a number of navigation dams which have been built at the expense of the United States Government that may be improved under this bill. I mean generating plants. Now, where the Government has already spent millions, and spends other millions in order to use them for war purposes, does the gentleman think the President should be limited in the time necessary to dispose of those war facilities that were put in under stress of war for a stated period of time, when nobody knows who would bid on them except some power monopoly?

Mr. BLACK. I think the amendment I have offered, to wit, five years and six months after the expiration of the war period, is ample time to enable the Government to conclude its activities in so far as they are authorized under the terms and provisions of this particular bill, and I therefore hope that my amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to indorse the principle of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]—perhaps not its specific details—because one year added to the six months post-war period might not be sufficient for the Government to adjust its relations with the private individuals with whom it has dealt or to dispose of the property that it has established.

But I desire to say in a general way that we ought at every opportunity to emphasize the fact that we are not going to use these stresses of war for the purpose of creating conditions that will give us control and ownership of public utilities and wrest from the citizens of the United States the opportunities they have had during the last 125 years, under which this great Government was built up to the proud position that it now holds.

Well might it be said of this bill that it comes here twelve times disavowed and repudiated, so far as authorship is concerned, by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It seems to be some legislative waif, left at the door of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. There are only two sources that I as a Member of this body recognize for legislation. One is from a Member of this body, and the other upon the suggestion of the President of the United States. We do not delegate constitutionally, and should not, as a matter of practice, our legislation, or any part of it, to the heads of departments, or men within the departments.

I want to say here, and say it again, as I have said it before, that this bill is of doubtful standing in this body. The President of the United States has not, in a constitutional manner, informed this body that we have a war measure here. It does not arise or originate with the President of the United States. It is disavowed by the membership of the committee having it in charge. Therefore it is used as a means for clamping upon the private property of the United States for the construction of various utilities throughout the United States. We should emphasize at every opportunity the policy that we do not propose to extend the operation, ownership, or control of these war-made activities longer than is absolutely necessary after the war has closed.

Now, our railroads are taken over by the Government, with what wisdom we are yet to discover. It is a mooted question as to the wisdom of it. We are not to take this property over, or to assume these powers, or to enter into these relationships with any expectation whatever of keeping them for any great length of time, or letting the Government be a monopolist of power or a great competitor in the control of power after the war is closed.

It is very easy now for 20 men out of 435 to sit in this Hall day after day and consider a bill that only duty prompts some of us to remain and consider. Many of us are expressing our disapproval of its features, especially in the repudiation of authorship. It is very easy for 20 of us, I say, to do that, ashamed, perhaps, of yielding the power of this Government and of seizing the property of private citizens. But I think in whatever we do we ought to emphasize the fact that whatever we do seize now is seized as strictly a war necessity, with the determination that it shall be released and surrendered to its original holding and form as soon as this war is over.

I think that should be the policy of this House; I think it should be the policy of Congress; I think it should be the policy of this great Government not to use the stress of war for the purpose of creating conditions in which only the pressure of war could prompt us to legislate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely with the considerations that have been advanced by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN]. They are the same that were adopted in the much more complicated questions of railroad management and telegraph management. They were limited in both Houses, or both Houses insisted that there should be a limitation of power. That time was put at 21 months in the railroad act—the longest period fixed. This amendment that I have offered is one year and six months after the treaty of peace. That is a year after the war period. That is really two years and six months after the war will probably have ended. It is enough.

Now, so much for that. If the Government goes into this business, the important part will not be the separate plants that the Government creates, for those might be in rivalry with other plants. But if the Government is to build transmission lines, or get transmission lines built, of which it holds the title, connecting all the power plants of a district together, and still continue to hold the title to those transmission lines, it has every plant in the whole district by the throat and can make them do what it pleases. It is a power that ought not to be put in Government control if we do not wish to have it stay there; certainly not for as much as five years and six months after the declaration of peace, and probably six years and six months after the end of the war. And therefore I agree entirely with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] in what he has said in support of his amendment, but I hope that his amendment of five years will be defeated and that mine will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 10.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question being taken, Mr. PARKER of New Jersey demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 13.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I reoffer the amendment, at page 12, line 24, to strike out the words "or acquired" and insert in lieu thereof "by the United States." I have already discussed it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

If, at the termination of the period provided by the contract relating thereto, or of such extension of the time of payment therein provided for as in furtherance of the interests of the United States, the President may deem it expedient to grant, the owner of any plant or transmission line in or upon which any machinery, appliances, or structures shall have been installed pursuant to the provisions of subdivisions 2 and 3 of section 2 hereof, shall have failed to pay to the United States the value of such installations and all rentals or other return due for the use thereof, or shall have failed to provide for the payment thereof upon terms satisfactory to him, or shall thereafter default in such payments, the President may acquire title to such power plant and may thereafter sell it or maintain and operate it for such time as he may deem necessary for the purpose of protecting the interests of the United States.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 13, line 15, after the words "the President may," strike out, in lines 15, 16, and 17, the words "acquire title to such power plant and may thereafter sell it or maintain and operate it" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "remove and sell said installations, or may bring suit in the district court of the United States to recover said value, rentals, or return and to enforce any contract or lien to secure the same; and the court may appoint a receiver with power to maintain and operate such machinery, appliances, or structures."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. SIMS]. This provision contains a meaning which I had not realized and which I think nobody in the committee realized when it was before them. It provides that when the United States has put machinery or equipment into a plant and the machinery or equipment has not been paid for, and the time has expired, long after the war, for any lease or contract, and such additional time as he please has been granted by the President, and the United States does not get its pay, then the President may go ahead, after the war, and acquire the power plant itself and operate it. Now, that is a very curious provision. We will suppose that a boiler and machinery have been put into a certain plant, and that is all the interest the United States has. The bill says that if the boiler and machinery are not paid for the United States may acquire the plant. Now, the amendment I offer is simply to provide that if these additions are not paid for the United States may remove the machinery or appliances that they have put in or else that they may go into court and sue the power plant for the amount that it may owe—for rental, and so forth—and may enforce any lien which they may have, like a mortgage on the power plants, and the court shall have the right to appoint a receiver. I think that is the remedy the gentleman wants. He certainly does not want the remedy provided in the bill, that after the war is over the United States may buy the plant.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, with all respect to the gentleman from New Jersey, this paragraph only provides that the Government may acquire where it is necessary to acquire in order to collect the debt. Of course, that, perhaps, would have to be by a foreclosure sale; but if the Government could not purchase it at a foreclosure sale, then there would be no means at all of collecting it. Besides that, you can not remove a transmission line. You could not do anything with it. They would have no use at all for it. Suppose it is a pipe line for the transmission of gas. You could not withdraw such a facility as that and sell it or otherwise dispose of it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will not the Government, when putting in those things, take a proper lien of some kind which can be enforced by a suit in court? That is all you want. If they do not take proper liens, you do not want to give them full power to go and buy the whole plant after the war.

Mr. SIMS. Suppose that the plant had to be sold to enforce the lien, would you then prevent the creditor, the United States, from buying at that sale and acquiring title to the property?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. There would be no objection to its buying its own property, but I would not have it buy the whole plant. They have the right always to protect themselves at a sale; but all this ought to be taken care of after the war, if there is any special case of that sort. It ought not provide, as this does, that wherever the United States has a machine in a plant and the machine is not paid for, it can go in after the war and buy the plant itself.

Mr. SIMS. This whole provision contemplates a contract to furnish machinery to the owner of the plant. This is only a means of enforcing payment. The gentleman ought to be willing that the Government of the United States should have the same opportunity to collect a debt that any business concern would have.

Mr. ANDERSON. How do you propose to enforce payment under this provision? Where the Government has installed certain structures which are not paid for, all it can do under this provision is to buy the entire plant, is it not?

Mr. SIMS. It says the President may acquire title to such plant, and may thereafter sell it or maintain and operate it for such time as he may deem necessary for the purpose of protecting the interests of the United States. It might not be a good time to sell it. It might be a very bad time to sell it. Why not give the President of the United States the same opportunity to protect the Government that you would give to a mortgagee to collect a debt by purchasing the property at the foreclosure sale?

Mr. ANDERSON. The situation is not at all the same.

Mr. SIMS. If the time is fixed for the payment of this debt, and it is not paid, and the Government has to collect it, this is one means of collecting it. The President can acquire it by contract, upon agreement with the owner of the power plant. If not, he can resort to legal proceedings, and purchase at the foreclosure sale.

Mr. ANDERSON. The foreclosure sale of what?

Mr. SIMS. On what the power plant owes the Government for money advanced.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is there any time limit on that? It says "such time as he may deem necessary." The five-year clause was amended to one year, was it not?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no; that amendment failed.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the five years apply here?

Mr. SIMS. This says when the Government acquires it after failure to collect the debt. The failure may be near the end of the five years and there might not be any remedy at all except to sell the power plant to some other company that wanted to consolidate power plants. This only gives the President, whoever he may be at that time, the right to acquire title to such plant, and thereafter to sell or operate it for such time as he may deem necessary to operate it for the purpose of protecting the interests of the United States; for the collection of the debt that is owed to the United States. There is nothing drastic about it at all, and although there are gentlemen who have a chill every time you mention the possibility of Government ownership of anything that some banker or some syndicate or trust might make money out of if the Government was prohibited from engaging in the same business in a competitive way, I have no fear of that at all. I am not here to advocate Government ownership or to oppose it on this bill. This is purely a war measure, and simply provides that where liabilities are incurred by contract with a private power plant the Government shall have the right to protect itself.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think this amendment ought not to prevail and for this reason: While the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey is clear and the purpose plain—and I am not prepared to say that the purpose is not good—unfortunately the paragraph which it seeks to amend conflicts with another paragraph of the bill, and if the gentleman's amendment is inserted it would still more conflict with it. It only illustrates the carelessness with which the bill was prepared; that when we turn back to page 5, the latter part of line 14, we find a provision stating what shall be done in case of the default of payment. It is quite different from the provision in this particular paragraph under discussion, which also attempts to state what shall be done upon default, and is still more different from the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey, which I think would be better than either if it could stand by itself. What ought to be done with the paragraph is to strike it out entirely, because it conflicts with the provision in the first part of the bill.

What ought to have been done to protect the title of the Government could have been put in five lines in the form of a simple provision that until the property is paid for the title should remain in the Government, with the further provision, as is made on page 5, that the President be empowered upon default to enter the premises, take possession of the property sold or leased, and operate it for the United States. With that we would have all that was needed. A little change on page 5 would fix the whole matter.

This will neither be properly adjusted by the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey, which will add to the conflict in the bill, nor will it be covered by the paragraph under discussion. The only thing that can be done now to make the bill what it ought to be is to strike out this paragraph entirely and avoid a conflict between it and section 5.

There is another provision, with reference to the title of the property, which also conflicts with the provisions of the paragraph on page 13. At the end of line 8, page 13, I find the following:

Whenever any such structures, machinery, or appliances shall have been installed and until the sale or other disposition thereof, the title thereto shall remain in the United States and shall be free and exempt from any liens, mortgages, judgments, or other encumbrances, whether created by act of the operator of such plant or by operation of law.

Just how far that goes, owing to the peculiar way in which it is worded, I can not say. It should be replaced by a simple provision that until the property is paid for and all claims on the part of the United States fully settled the title shall be in the Government.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does not the gentleman think that all of that could be just as well taken care of by the contract instead of putting it into the law? If it were done in the contract, it could be done in cases where it was proper to make such provision. When it is done in the law it becomes a part of every contract made for the installation even of the most minor character.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman's position is well taken. We could not provide for every contingency in the statute, and we should presume that the officers of the Government would take such measures and make such provisions and contracts as would protect the Government, and we would have the ordinary provision of a contract that where the property was not fully paid for the title should remain in the Government until the purchase price had been fully paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 3, before the word "If," insert: "The contract for the installation of any structure, facilities, or appliances by the United States may provide that."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I see no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, after line 18, insert "No power plant equipment, structure, machinery, or appliances shall be constructed, acquired, increased in productivity, equipped, or extended, nor shall funds be provided or advances made for this purpose, except during the actual continuance of the war and for the purpose of carrying on the war."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the suggestion I make is this: The war period will be one year and six months after the war is concluded. It is perfectly well understood that there should be no more construction of lines, and all that sort of thing, except for war purposes while the war is going on. I can not see any objection to this. I want to do that because it is said in the next clause that all power not herein specifically provided shall be limited to the war period and because the war period extends to a year and six months after the war. I think that there ought to be no more new work done after the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken; and on a division there were 14 ayes and 4 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Except as is herein otherwise provided all other authority granted to the President by the provisions of this act shall cease at the termination of the war period, but the termination of such authority shall not affect any contract executed, act done, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced under the terms of this act prior to the date thereof; and any offense committed or liability incurred prior thereto may be prosecuted in the same manner and with the same effect and shall be subject to the same penalties as if such authority had not terminated. Nor shall the termination of such authority prevent the collection of any moneys due the United States; or the sale or other disposition of any property which it shall have constructed or acquired pursuant to the provisions of this act.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 13, line 24, strike out the words "the date thereof" and insert the words "said determination."

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I wish to amend the committee amendment by making it read "such termination." We have used the word "termination," and it should not be "determination."

Mr. SIMS. I did not offer the amendment, and I think it ought to be amended.

Mr. ESCH. I move to substitute for the words "said determination" the words "such termination."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the committee amendment by striking out the words "said determination" and insert in lieu thereof the words "such termination."

Mr. SIMS. There is no objection at all.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Just a moment. Did we agree to the substitute as amended by Mr. ESCH? We agreed to the substitute that took the place of the other.

Mr. ESCH. I do not think we agreed to the amendment as amended.

Mr. SISSON. We have not agreed to the amendment as amended; we have agreed to the amendment to the amendment, but not as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment as amended by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 23, after the word "done," insert the words "or any right or obligation accruing or accrued."

Mr. ANDERSON. Has the gentleman any objection?

Mr. SIMS. None whatever.

Mr. ESCH. I think that is the language used in the Federal-control act.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That all administrative expenses incurred in the exercise of the powers herein conferred shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor; and in order to defray such expenses there is hereby appropriated the sum of $150,000, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid out upon warrants drawn on the Secretary of the Treasury by the President or by any officer, agent, or agency whom he shall have designated or created pursuant to the provisions of section 3 hereof.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

On page 14, line 16, after the word "created," insert the words "for that purpose."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: In line 11, page 14, after the word "hereby," insert "authorized to be," so that the line will read, "and in order to defray such expenses there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $150,000," and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 11, after the word "hereby," insert the words "authorized to be."

Mr. SISSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment that I addressed myself to on a former occasion in the House. There is nothing in the hearings to indicate what sort of salaries are going to be paid or what sort of salary organization they are going to have. Now, of course, it would not be contended except for the haste of this bill that this ought to carry an appropriation at all, because this is a purely legislative measure and it ought not to carry an appropriation, but the Committee on Appropriations is now in session, the Subcommittee on Appropriations, and if this bill is to be hastily passed here and passed through the Senate hastily that organization can be taken up and the number of employees and the number of salaries that the department says it wants to create, and no delay occasioned by this amendment at this time. I think Congress ought to keep constantly in its hand the fixing of salaries and the number of employees, not simply a gross lump sum, because after you get your salary once fixed and once created it is next to impossible to reduce those salaries.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. GOOD. Would not the gentleman accomplish the same thing if he would strike out, after the word "therefor," in line 10, the word "and" and all of lines 11, 12, and 13, down and including the word "hereof"?

Mr. SISSON. Well, that might do it; I had not thought of that. That might do exactly the same thing I am seeking to do by putting in the words "authorized to be."

Mr. GOOD. Of course, if it is necessary to expend more than $150,000 in the administration of the law, Congress could then appropriate that without that provision that limits it to $150,000.

Mr. SISSON. There is that difference; and I will say, Mr. Chairman, this, that if the Committee on Appropriations at any time should find $150,000 was not sufficient it would not prevent the Committee on Appropriations from authorizing a larger appropriation and adding additional employees whose aggregate salaries would exceed $150,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to say, except when I asked the chairman of the committee about what the salary roll would be made up of and what salaries would be paid he could not tell us, and frankly admitted that he had not gone into that matter in detail. The hearings did not show anything about that, and therefore I felt——

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. It is really no fault of the committee, because the hearings will disclose the fact that we asked for this information from the officials——

Mr. SISSON. And they failed to furnish it.

Mr. ESCH. And they promised to send us a detailed statement as to the administrative expenses.

Mr. SISSON. And they failed to send it.

Mr. ESCH. And when the testimony was printed I was surprised not to find that estimate.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin frankly if they had put in this bill an itemized statement of salaries they expected to pay, the number of employees they expected to have, thereby committing themselves in the hearings to a salary roll, so far as the clerks and those employed under civil service are concerned, I would not say a word, but I am utterly unwilling to turn this $150,000 loose in order that you might give one man half as salary—I do not mean to say that would be done—but Congress ought not carelessly to legislate in that way, and I think the committee were acting properly when they asked and demanded a schedule of salaries and number of employees, that is a skeleton organization which they proposed to have, but in the absence of that I do not think we ought to be called upon to do it. I think Congress should know how many employees are going to be employed, what salaries are going to be paid to those people, and I think it is wise that Congress should insist upon that, and therefore I have offered this amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] is exactly right. The committee did call for the estimates and they were not sent up until the bill was reported, and therefore could not be included in the hearings. But there was great hurry in trying to get the bill on the way to passage without delay in making up a long detailed estimate of expenses of administration, and Mr. Baruch promised to present the estimates and state what they were for. And to-day I had him called on the telephone and asked to send it up, and he did send it, and I have it here in my hand. It seems to me, inasmuch as the House of Representatives will have to pass on the appropriations if they should be made by the Committee on Appropriations, it can pass on them right now.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. You can not pass on a schedule of salaries and number of employees unless you have time to make inquiry as to what duties are to be performed by each and to know something about it. That gives absolutely no information, except that the maximum salary that he proposes will be so much and the scale of salaries will be so much. But as to what they shall perform and whether or not we are measuring properly the salary of each man it does not say anything about, and we will not know it unless he gives you a schedule showing in substance what each man shall do. We can not legislate in that way.

Mr. SIMS. What I object to, and most seriously object to, is to absolutely cripple the bill. Now, this committee has authority to appropriate. There is no question about that. I understand the gentleman does not object——

Mr. SISSON. Your committee is not an appropriating committee, and if you bring in a legislative bill as a legislative committee, you have got to handle your bill as a legislative bill and not as an appropriation bill.

Mr. SIMS. The rule fixes that. This estimate was sent up. The gentleman might not agree to it and the House might not agree to the items or the amount of it. It says:

> The above estimate is on the basis of utilizing Army engineers for practically all field and engineering work. Should this procedure prove to be impossible or inadvisable, the estimate should be raised to include an allowance covering the salaries and traveling expenses of a suitable number of expert power engineers. Such additional sum, if required, is believed to be not less than $125,000, covering 20 engineers at an average salary of $4,000 each and a total traveling allowance of $45,000.

Now, remember that this work has all to be done in a year or so, and all the Government has to do, as far as engineering is concerned, is to make surveys and estimates, provided the Government is to look after the value of the property on which any lien is taken. This is rough, in a sense, but it is an estimate of the amount:

Estimate of administrative expense per year for emergency power bill.

Administrator	$12,000
Two assistants, at $7,500	15,000
Four civilian engineers, at $5,000	20,000
Clerical help and miscellaneous supplies, Washington office	20,000
Rent of eight district offices, estimated at $1,200	9,600
Clerical help and supplies for eight district offices, at average of $4,000	32,000
Traveling expense, exclusive of Army engineers, estimated at	$7,000
Legal expense, estimated at	10,000
Allowance for expansion and other unforeseen contingencies	24,400
Total	150,000

Of course, it is an estimate and nothing but an estimate, and it is a very modest one, considering the amount of work that will have to be done. They expect to utilize the officers of the Government as much as possible. One provision of this bill is that no person employed by the Government shall receive any extra pay when serving as authorized under this bill.

Now, as I said before, I do not care who does the appropriating or what committee does it. But this bill is an emergency bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] stated that fact just as strong as it can be stated, but no stronger than it really is. Suppose we made an authorization as I originally wrote the bill. The Appropriations Committee, that is now sitting, might, if the bill is passed in the Committee of the Whole, include an appropriation for this amount or a larger amount or a less amount, just as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] said a bit ago. But I do not know. The House appropriation bill, I understand, is to come in pretty soon——

Mr. SISSON. I will state that it is not at all probable that that bill will get out of the committee until the latter part of next week.

Mr. SIMS. And then it comes in here to be acted on——

Mr. SISSON. And then it will go to the Senate.

Mr. SIMS. But the gentleman is not on the Senate committee, and consequently can make no guaranties as to what it will do. We may ball up this whole thing by providing power here and providing legislation for installing machinery, and so forth, and then failing to appropriate the money for it.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] the other day discussed this amount of $175,000,000, and he showed very clearly that our committee had the right to appropriate, and the estimates as to sections of the country where money was needed were made in detail. That is the only reason the appropriation for expenses should remain in this bill. Some of the estimates are made in excess of what gentlemen might think they ought to be, but it should not cripple this whole bill and hang it up just to give the Appropriation Committee the satisfaction of having gone through the details of administrative expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there is no pride on the part of any member of the Committee on Appropriations in seeking to have legislation take its due course. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], on the showing made, proves beyond a peradventure of question that this item has not received any consideration by his committee. I am, indeed, surprised to see the chairman of this high and important committee laboring under the delusion that his committee has jurisdiction over appropriations.

Permit me to direct his attention to what the manual says as to what is the authority of his committee in that particular. If he were acquainted with this provision, perhaps he would not be so sure in reporting an appropriation. I read respecting the authority conferred upon the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the footnote:

> It formerly reported the river and harbor appropriation bill, but in 1883, after the wording of the rule had been adopted, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was created to care for the river and harbor bill (IV, 4096). So this committee has no jurisdiction over appropriations, although the words of the rule imply that it may appropriate for commerce.

Now, we know that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has been supererogating to itself authority that properly belongs to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman read the rule?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will read the rule with pleasure. I have read the opinion of a most expert parliamentarian of the House, that of Mr. Hinds, the compiler of the precedents. That is what I read a moment ago as to the authority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Now, I read the rule:

> To commerce, Life-Saving Service, and lighthouses, other than appropriations for Life-Saving Service and lighthouses—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. Hinds construed that, in view of the precedents of the House, and furnished his construction of it; so that this committee has no jurisdiction over appropriations, although the words of the rule may imply that it may appropriate for commerce. I know the gentleman from Tennessee can construe many things, but the gentleman has been here long enough to know that the rules of the House have been construed by precedents and interpretations from time to time, and that construction does not rest with any one man to impose his individual judgment upon the House. That rule should be construed in connection with precedent upon precedent. It has long been the established acceptation of this House that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has no power to appropriate.

Does not the gentleman remember his distinguished predecessor, the distinguished leader of the minority [Mr. MANN], than whom there is no better parliamentarian in this House, who admitted that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had no power to appropriate except for the Life-Saving Service and lighthouses? That was the position of the distinguished predecessor of the gentleman. Now, the gentleman comes in here and wants to set aside all the accumulated practices of this House and assume jurisdiction held by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Surely.

Mr. SIMS. Has not the committee several times, and even recently, reported bills carrying appropriations, and the appropriations have gone through, pertaining to commerce? And did not the gentleman hear the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], who, if we should be so unfortunate as to have the Republicans carry the House in the next Congress, will be the chairman of this committee, when he made his unanswerable argument the other day in favor of the jurisdiction assumed by this committee?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am sorry to say to the gentleman that I was not present during the discussion of this bill under general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee admits that they have given no consideration whatever as to this amount of $150,000. In all these cases Congress has been very careful in trying to safeguard the interests of the Government by placing limitations upon the expenditure of these lump-sum appropriations, and the Committee on Appropriations or any other appropriating committee would make an inquiry as to how these funds would be expended, placing limitations that no amount shall be expended greater than so much for rent in the District of Columbia, or so much for clerk hire, or so much for the salaries of officers. Certainly the Committee on Appropriations does not wish to take additional work upon itself, but some committee ought to investigate this matter carefully, and upon the showing made by the chairman of the committee himself this subject has not been given careful consideration by his committee. I say the Committee of the Whole should adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]. It will not delay the enforcement of this bill a week. It will only provide for the orderly procedure by having an investigation made as to the real need of appropriating this $150,000 for administrative expenses here in the District. The Committee on Appropriations, I say, does not wish to take additional work on itself, but the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has not performed the work necessary to enable it to learn the actual needs. The gentleman from Tennessee has merely received a brief memorandum from some person connected with the administration. No opportunity has been furnished to the committee to ascertain the real needs, whether those salaries are required, and whether those rentals are required. Somebody should make that investigation. We say the Committee on Appropriations or some other committee should make it.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. Is not the lack of authority on the part of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to appropriate counteracted by the fact that the committee has procured a rule to bring in the bill in its present shape?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I am not raising a question of order; I am raising a question of propriety. Here is a committee that has not general authority to make appropriations. They have not made an investigation into it. I say that the committee that usually makes these investigations should exercise this authority, and that is the Committee on Appropriations. We are seeking to safeguard the interests of the Treasury.

Mr. JUUL. I understand that.

Mr. STAFFORD. And we should not allow $150,000 without any restrictions whatsoever to be placed at the discretion of any administrative official without an investigation made and a hearing. No such hearing has been had. I agree with the gentleman's position that this would not be subject to a point of order, because the rule has made it in order——

Mr. JUUL. Has not practically every Member present—and that means the whole House—in granting unanimous consent to bring in the bill in the shape it was brought in practically consented to the consideration of the bill in the form in which it is brought in?

Mr. STAFFORD. By no means. The gentleman's position, if carried out to a logical extreme, would mean that no amendments could be offered. But we are amending this bill from time to time. The chairman of the committee has accepted many amendments which have improved the bill. I contend that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] improves it. I contend that the committee, with less than 50 Members present here, may decide that the position of the gentleman from Mississsippi is correct. Certainly when unanimous consent is given to consider a bill that does not mean that we should not amend it or improve it so as to protect the interests of the Treasury. The amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] should be adopted.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, conditions at this time are such that the House can not afford to risk the crippling of this bill simply on the question as to whether full and detailed estimates have been made as to administrative expenses. This House several times has voted to give the President a lump sum of $100,000,000 to be expended as he saw fit, without any estimate, without details, without a word; and this money is to be turned over to the President to carry out the objects and purposes of the law. Will any gentleman here, regardless of what side he happens to sit on, do that which may prove a real hindrance to the successful prosecution of the war in order that an examination may be had before the Committee on Appropriations or any other committee, to the last meager detail, as to how much an assistant engineer can be procured for and what his salary should be?

It looks to me, gentlemen of the House, as though some gentlemen are going a long way to hold up and possibly to delay for a considerable period the time when work may actually begin under this bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who has made a personal investigation of this power shortage, pointed out this morning that which I have pointed out a dozen times, that the most material element in this thing is time; that climatic conditions are such that the season must be considered. To delay for one day the letting of contracts providing for assistance to be given in developing this additional power might cost the Government ultimately much more than $150,000. I have no criticism of the industry, foresight, and care of the Committee on Appropriations. They do their duty properly; but I appeal to every man on this floor who has one particle of patriotism in his heart, do not stand and hesitate in doing your manifest duty on a petty question of procedure. Even if the bill had been reported by the Committee on Ventilation and Accoustics, the question for us to consider is the objects and purposes of the bill and not whether this, that, or the other committee reported something beyond its normal peace-time jurisdiction. The other day a resolution was brought in here to appropriate $1,000,000 to help stamp out the epidemic of influenza. It had been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. When the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], from the Committee on Appropriations, asked unanimous consent to have that resolution passed, did any member of the Interstate Commerce Committee object and raise the question of committee jurisdiction because the bill had been referred to that committee? Whenever I get so that I can not serve my country in time of war except through some plan established by precedents that have been established in peace times, then I will feel that I am a failure. It is no time to haggle over details or questions of procedure. I think a man is a victim when he is fettered by rules of procedure, when he can not serve his country in time of war except according to the technical rules of procedure that apply in time of peace. I hope this amendment will be voted down, as it ought to be voted down.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I think the people of this country appreciate very thoroughly the shortage of fuel in Europe. The newspaper dispatches cover that phase of the war situation over there pretty thoroughly. I do not believe we recognize yet over here as we should the shortage of gasoline in Europe. Once a week we are having a reminder that the supply of gasoline may become short in this country. In Italy, France, and England gasoline is not permitted to be used by private citizens to any extent whatsoever. A man who lives in Rome may be as rich as John D. Rockefeller, yet he can not have an auto for his own personal use. A limited number of taxicabs are permitted in each city, and the only way a man can ride in an auto over there is to get one of these taxicabs, if he can file his order long enough in advance to get one. On one occasion we had to wait three hours to get a taxicab.

Mr. ESCH. Why did you not walk?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The distance was too great. The situation may become serious in the United States—very much more so than at this time—and it would seem to me as though this bill ought to carry an appropriation with it in order to guard against any possibility of delay. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, recently I had the privilege of visiting Italy, France, and Great Britain with a group of 11 Congressmen. I have already told the House something about observations made in respect to the reconstruction of disabled soldiers and sailors. I made some remarks to the soldiers at the Young Men's Christian Association auditorium, Potomac Park, upon some other phases of the war, which I desire to have printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

ADDRESS OF GEORGE M. YOUNG, MEMBER OF CONGRESS, SECOND DISTRICT, NORTH DAKOTA, TO SOLDIERS AT YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION AUDITORIUM, POTOMAC PARK, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

CONGRESSMAN BAER'S GOOD RECORD.

Mr. Chairman and men of the National Army, I count it a privilege and an honor to appear before you to-day. I am glad, also, to speak in this auditorium, where the first address, the dedicatory address, was delivered by my colleague, Congressman JOHN M. BAER, of the first district, North Dakota. Congressman BAER was to have spoken to you again to-day, and I am here to take his place. He has gone home to boost the sale of liberty bonds. When the liberty-loan campaign is completed on October 18, I hope he will remain to tell the people about his own good record. He is a splendid man, and has a record in Congress in which his worst enemy can not find a flaw. He has consistently supported war legislation without exception, and none know better than you men in uniform that he is a genuine friend of the soldiers. I am sure you join with me in the hope that he will be reelected, which is in harmony with the prevailing thought at this time that men who do their duty should be reelected. [Applause.]

The chairman informs me that there are no soldiers in this camp from North Dakota. Notwithstanding this I feel at home here, as we are now one great undivided family. Our country has never been so strong and so united as at this moment. The chairman has told you of my visit to Europe with a group of Congressmen to see how our boys were getting along and to study war problems at first hand. I shall not detain you to give incidents occurring on our trip over and back, though there was much to interest us. As this is a day meeting your time as well as mine is limited.

WHAT OUR GOVERNMENT IS DOING.

It is next to impossible to get an accurate idea of what our Government has done in France without going there. It has been a tremendous task, which has been done in a big way by big men. A railroad has been built across France, and believe me the big mogul engines marked "U. S. A." looked good to me. Immense storage capacity has been constructed at various points—at one of them the biggest cold-storage plant in the world. We have seven well-equipped ports. At one of them 100 miles of sidetracks have been constructed. Along these 152 warehouses had been built, and material for many more was on hand. All this to take care of our brave boys. In the same port long wharves had been constructed and equipped with the latest loading and unloading machinery and devices. The biggest freighters which had formerly in that port required 21 days to unload are now unloaded in 5 days.

Everything back of our lines shows foresight and thorough organization. Our medical service, both in field and hospital, is admittedly the best of any of the armies. It was my privilege to check up the medical service by personal visits all the way from the battle field back, successively, through the emergency field hospitals, the evacuation hospitals, the base hospitals, and, on this side of the water, our general hospitals. The general hospitals look after those soldiers who are so severely wounded that they can not be returned to the fighting forces. It tugged on the heartstrings to see our poor wounded boys on the battle field and in the hospitals, but we were filled with admiration for the skillful work of our surgeons and nurses and the exceptional facilities of every kind furnished by our Government for the use of the surgeons, nurses, pharmacists, and all others connected with the Surgeon General's department. Of all the activities of this wonderful department I was most impressed by the very comprehensive plans to make every disabled man self-supporting before being discharged from the hospitals. A boy who had lost his left arm and who had been working in a factory was being taught telegraphy, not only in the hospital but right in bed. It eased his mind to know he would be able to do something useful, and the time devoted to practicing with the telegraph key in bed took his mind from his troubles and hastened recovery. A boy at Walter Reed Hospital from Bismarck, in my own State, lost his left arm at Cantigny. He had been a musician and played the violin beautifully. It was clear he could never hope to make a living out of music.

The reconstruction men discovered he had artistic ability and could draw well. He is being trained for a magazine illustrator, and his instructor says he will succeed, declaring he has a skillful touch, originality, and imagination. I felt so enthused and happy over all that had been done for the health, welfare, and restoration of our wounded boys I made a special trip to the War Department to personally thank such men as Surgeon General Gorgas, Col. R. B. Miller, in charge of personnel, Col. Frank Billings, director of reconstruction, Col. Harry Mock, assistant director, Maj. A. C. Monahan, and Maj. M. W. Murray, of the education section of reconstruction. Any of you who desire to know more about this wonderful reconstruction work should write to me or speak to me about it, and I shall send you a printed copy of my address in Congress upon this subject, telling what is being done for disabled soldiers, not only in our hospitals, but also in the British reconstruction hospitals which I visited.

HAVE PLENTY OF WHITE BREAD AND SUGAR.

I wish the fathers and mothers of this country could understand how completely the needs of the boys have been anticipated and provided for. I have heard, and perhaps you have heard, more or less grumbling about eating dark bread, and I have even heard men say that they objected to eating dark bread here in order that the French might have what they were accustomed to—white bread. I want to assure you that not only the French but the English and Italians have been and are still eating a war bread darker than we were eating up to the time Mr. Hoover raised the ban on white bread. The only white bread being eaten on the entire continent of Europe at this time is eaten by our soldiers, and they have all they want of it. And another thing: Our boys are not rationed on sugar. God bless them, they have all they want of it. [Applause.] That should take the sting out of any trifling inconvenience we have been to in this country.

FRENCH CHILDREN LOVE OUR BOYS.

Another thing I would like to have our people know, and I can not emphasize it too greatly: Our boys are clean morally, are temperate, and the healthiest aggregation of men ever gotten together in the world. It is said they are giving money to the little French children and teaching them the vulgar habit of chewing gum. This is all true, but I think we should be proud that our men love these little children, and that the little children of France love and trust them. [Applause.]

FIRST GREAT DRIVE 1918.

Mr. Chairman, after Russia was put out of the war, Germany determined to mass her strength against the allies, with the hope of capturing Paris and forcing a decision before America could put an army in the field.

After greatly increasing the strength of their army by soldiers withdrawn from Russia, the first great German drive was made this year upon March 21 in the direction of Amiens along a front from Arras to Soissons. As a part of this drive a blow was struck south of Ypres. The first drive was very successful from the German point of view. The British were rolled back with apparent ease. Finally, the British and French balked the drive.

SECOND GREAT DRIVE.

Then, after about a month's preparation, the second great German drive was launched on May 27 along a line extending from Vauxaillon, almost directly north of Soissons, and Brimont, almost directly north of Rheims. This great offensive was begun by striking a terrific blow with massed forces all along this line, a distance of approximately 40 miles.

The first day they advanced 5½ miles, reaching Pont Arey on the Aisne River. The bombardment was just as violent as that which heralded the great drive of March 21, and the infantry attack was upon a more formidable scale. Dense waves of infantry followed closely in the wake of a lifting barrage, and fresh troops were pushed up with characteristic recklessness. The back areas were heavily shelled with high-velocity guns, and German airplanes were unusually venturesome.

The Germans forged ahead 7 miles the second day, capturing a portion of Soissons, menaced Rheims, and reached a point in the hills south of St. Thierry and the southern banks of the Vesle. The Germans were strongly reinforced the third day and continued the drive southward, every hour creating uneasiness in Paris and throughout France. When and where would end this last and most powerful German drive? In this emergency

Gen. Pershing volunteered to send some divisions of American soldiers in training at a certain point west of the fighting area. These were men who had not completed their training and who were not thought to be ready for actual warfare by British or French officers. The only ones who believed they were really ready were the men themselves. But the emergency was great, so these partially trained troops were hurried along the railway and upon gas trucks to join in the fight. They left the training camps Thursday night and Friday and arrived at the various points along the front between Friday night—May 31—and Sunday morning.

A large unit was loaded into railway trains on Thursday night, traveling all that night and next day without sleep, reaching a point about 5 miles from Chateau-Thierry at 10 o'clock at night, and immediately went into position at Chateau-Thierry. The machine gunners were sent to guard four bridges over the Marne. They had been there only three hours when the German shock troops made a strong attempt to cross the river. They were repulsed. But for three days our men stood there like a stone wall preventing the passage over the river. Then in the face of a withering fire from cannon and machine guns the American engineers advanced and destroyed the bridges, finally stopping the drive at this point, one of the gateways to Paris. [Applause.]

At the same time while the fight was going on at Chateau-Thierry warm fighting was in progress at other points, one of them nearer to Paris than Chateau-Thierry, where the Germans were sweeping forward like a mighty tidal wave. An American brigade reached that point on Sunday morning after having traveled all day and night without sleep. By 4 o'clock in the afternoon of the same day they had been in three fights, in one of which they drove the Germans back for 2 kilometers on a front of 4 kilometers. In this locality was fought the now famous Battle of Belleau Wood by the gallant marines. No more glorious page of American history has ever been written. [Applause.]

THIRD GREAT DRIVE.

At midnight on July 14 the Germans began what was to be, according to their expectation, the greatest drive of all. They called it the Friedensturm, storm of peace, the great peace offensive. The plans for this were more carefully laid and upon a greater scale than for any former offensive. They confidently expected to go through to Paris, and many in France held the same view. Our congressional party was at the time near Paris, and we were assured that we would not be permitted to enter, as it was claimed that preparations were being made to have all the civilian population leave the city to be ready for a siege or possible evacuation. This may not have been in actual contemplation, but it reflected the feverish condition of the public mind. The people back of the lines were very apprehensive. They believed if the Germans were to go as far as they had upon the two former drives that if they would not reach Paris they would get near enough to it to shoot it to pieces with their big guns.

The German drive of March 21 was a surprise. The drive of May 27 was almost a surprise, the notice of it being very short. The last big drive was no surprise at all. The allies had been expecting it for several days and had troops massed to meet it. It was expected that the enemy would attempt to break through toward Paris at Chateau-Thierry and points northwest, and also east of there, and that is where the fighting occurred for the most part. As the Germans were in great force, and as Foch had massed forces of almost equal numbers, the shock of battle was terrific. The Germans confidently expected to override all opposition and the charge was made all along the front with great dash in massed formation. At places the allied lines broke. The Marne was crossed at 10 places, but at none of these points did they get very far, excepting south of Jaulgonne, where they penetrated several miles. They were soon driven back here and elsewhere. Americans figured largely in these operations. The troops which had been rushed over in May to help stem the Hun advance were still there and had been liberally reinforced. The Government has not given out any figures as to the number of Americans employed in the fighting just referred to, but from what I know of the units employed there must have been more than 150,000. This was a strong force to add to the already strong forces of French and British, and was sufficient to turn the gauge of battle. The enemy was obliged to fall back and was kept on the move pretty fast for the next couple of weeks. I think it may be truthfully said that the most critical time in the war, after the first battle of the Marne, was during May 31 and June 1 and 2, and the turning point of the war was definitely settled on July 15, 16, and 17. We Americans should be very proud that our troops were present at both these periods in sufficient numbers to save the day. The belief was general with those with whom I talked in France that if our men had not been available the Germans would have gotten at least close enough to Paris to have shelled it to the limit. There seems to be a notion that our troops did not figure in these operations in a big way, that they were only participating in battalion units wedged in between the British or French. That is not true. We had several divisions along that line, and they were handled in division units. The reason the newspaper dispatches of that period did not reveal this was doubtless to keep from the Germans as long as possible the extent to which Americans were being used. And I will say this: The American newspapers contain very much more complete and thorough accounts of the war than the Paris or London papers.

BELLEAU WOOD AND CHATEAU-THIERRY.

It has been my privilege to be at practically all the places referred to but at only part of them when the fighting occurred. Where I was not an eyewitness I obtained information at first hand from such men as Col. McClusky, who commanded a brigade at Bois de Belleau. No one is waiting more anxiously than myself for an authentic and thorough history of this war. I wish it were possible to give you a running account of all the places visited. It would take too much time. Mieux was a most interesting point. This point was reached by the Germans in the first battle of the Marne. It is located about 20 miles from Paris. Here we found trench systems prepared ready for use in case the allied armies were pressed back. This confirmed the fears of the people, or at least showed that the army men were preparing for such an emergency. At this place we were furnished with metal helmets and gas masks. Chateau-Thierry was left in horrible shape by the retreating Huns. The fine homes were ransacked and all things of value "if portable" were carried away. We visited the chateau, located upon an elevation at the edge of the city. Two soldiers were guarding it, but there was little of anything left to guard. If Chateau-Thierry is a fair sample of what was done by the Germans in other occupied territory no wonder the French fight furiously.

MARKSMANSHIP SUPERB.

Vaux furnished us with the evidence of the wonderful accuracy of the American Artillery. The town was actually shot full of holes. Not a single building escaped, and each building was struck from one to three times. It was here, after the artillery preparation, that our boys advanced rapidly, taking 654 German prisoners from the basements of the buildings, which was done without the loss of a single soldier. And the remarkable thing about it was that all of the shooting was done simply by the use of a map. The map was an accurate one, but the marksmanship was not aided by observation balloons or aeroplanes. It reminds me of a story of my friend, Congressman BARKLEY, from Kentucky. He tells about an old darkey who said: "Them new long-distance 44-caterpillar guns can just nat'ly get you anywhere. All they need is your name and address." [Applause.]

HOW THEY FIGHT.

Of course the most thrilling thing of all was to see our boys actually fighting—and how they do fight! No one who has not been present to see some of the fighting and talk with the men can appreciate the eagerness of our boys to get into the battle. When they are back at the training camps they are impatient to get to the front, and when they get to the front they are not easy until they get into the thickest of the fighting. I talked with Capt. Campbell, of Grand Rapids, Mich., who stood with wounded hand and a wound in the leg and told of the trouble he had had to hold his men back. He had deployed some of his men to capture some machine guns from the flank. The remaining portion of the company evidently did not know that this had been done and he could see very plainly that they were intending to charge the machine guns from the front without any order from him. He called out that he did not want any charge, and still noticed evidence of their intention to go forward. So he rushed out in front of his men with a pointed revolver, saying, "I have not ordered a charge; I do not want a charge, and the first man who gets in line with this gun will be shot." [Applause.]

We were told, but I can not vouch for the truth of it, that the commanding officer told a certain major that his objective would be to a certain rock on an elevation and that he was to halt his battalion there. Instead of stopping there he went on a mile. The commanding officer criticized him. He said, "I told you to halt at that big rock. Why didn't you stop there?" To which the major replied, "Well, if these Germans could not stop our boys, how in thunder do you think I could?"

In the fighting in May, northwest of Chateau-Thierry, one of our boys received a bullet wound in the neck from a machine gun. The bullet went about half way through and dropped down into his stomach. He got out of the hospital in time to be back with the boys again when they began fighting in July, and the company with which he served was ordered to clean out a nest of machine guns. When the boys started forward this wounded boy turned to the others with a laugh and said, "Let me take care of those machine-gun bullets; I'll swallow them." [Applause.]

MAGNIFICENT FIGHTERS—BUT ROUGH.

The Australians have the reputation of being rough-and-ready fighters, with the accent on the rough. They call their captains Bill and Tom, and when they got to France the British officers thought they would not amount to much, because it was said they had no discipline; but when the fighting began it was discovered the only trouble was to have them stop when they reached their objectives. While we were in London an invitation was extended to us to attend a Government concert on Sunday night in one of the big theaters. There are no theatrical shows permitted on Sunday night in Great Britain, but Admiral Sims assured us we need not be scared away by the name "concert." The show was certainly a live one. I have never seen anything to equal it upon the vaudeville stage here. Talent was picked up from all the big theaters in London—grand opera singers and others—but the most interesting and exciting thing of all was some stunts put on by a company of Australian soldiers. Among other things they put on a bayonet drill. The stage was very large, and the men rushed at each other with great speed, pointing the bayonets straight at the men opposing them. It was up to the man who was being charged to strike the bayonet quickly enough and hard enough to ward it off. On one of these rushes, while the bayonet thrust was warded off, one man was struck with such terrific force he was thrown upon the stage, his head hitting the hard floor with great force. He was carried from the stage insensible. Having heard these things about the Australians and having seen this performance at London, we were able to appreciate a joke which one of the Australian boys got off. He was asked, What kind of fighters are the Americans? "Oh," said he, "they are splendid; they are great; they are magnificent fighters; but," with a twinkle he added, "they are pretty rough." [Applause.]

SAVED PARIS.

Capt. Liggett, a Civil War veteran, now an official in the Interior Department at Washington, called to see me last Thursday, because he heard that I had seen his son in France. He said, "Mr. YOUNG, I am hoping that our boys will march into Berlin." I replied, "Captain, they have done a bigger thing than that. They stopped the Germans from marching into Paris." [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am getting weary of the argument that those who ask for proper consideration of this class of legislation can not trust the President. The argument made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] in this respect is unworthy of him. The gentleman trusts the President, and he knows that everybody in this House would gladly trust the President in this or any other matter, if the President could give any attention at all to the enormous powers that we are conferring upon him in this bill. But the gentleman knows that the President will not consider a single thing that is provided for in this bill. Engineers will be called upon to pass on the plants to be acquired, and bureau chiefs will be called upon to say how many clerks will be wanted in Washington in the department, and what their salaries shall be. One of the things that this House is very frequently called upon to remedy is the unjust discrimination between the various employees in different branches of the service. That injustice creeps into the law or into its administration through these lump-sum appropriations, which give to some bureau chief the right to fix the salaries of all the persons employed, and to designate the number of persons to be employed, and too frequently he does not base his decisions upon salaries in like positions in other branches of the service. When the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance was created a young girl from my own State, who happened to be here in the telephone office working for $11 a week, was called down to the bureau and given a place at $1,100 a year. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has gone into this subject somewhat fully, and I want to say to him and to the House that when the legislative bill was before the committee one of the bureau chiefs who appeared before the committee, in explaining what the greatly increased number of clerks would do, simply said, "We can prepare these clerks for service at such and such a rate." The estimate was based upon the ability of the department to educate the new clerks. When asked what they would do, he did not know what they would do; but thought they would have work for them; and to-day we have here in Washington clerks who have been here two months on the salary roll of the Government who have not yet been assigned to do a single thing. I insist that it will do no harm to allow this bill to go through as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]. Then the committee can take up the question with regard to how many clerks will be needed, and how many engineers will be needed, and what their salaries should be.

I am a little doubtful whether we want to give some man the right to pay a bureau chief or superintendent $12,000 a year, as is suggested by the chairman. I believe that the House ought to be called upon to pass on the question of whether the two assistant engineers should have $7,500 apiece, when we have hundreds of assistant engineers just as well qualified in the river and harbor work and other branches of the service who are receiving only half of that amount or less. If we are going to legislate intelligently matters of this kind must be referred to some committee that will go into all of the facts, and after they have possession of the facts, report to the House for its consideration how much the engineers should receive, how many clerks should be employed in the bureau, and how much those clerks should be paid. Let us be fair with the clerks that are now in the service and put a stop to lump-sum appropriations for clerk hire, for then we hold the old clerk down to the salary fixed by law and allow the new clerk to receive any salary which the new bureau chief may fix.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WINGO). Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. SISSON. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is to strike out two words.

Mr. SISSON. I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know any better reason why this appropriation should be scrutinized closely than this apparently unauthorized document, unsigned by anybody, sent up here, I presume, at the request of the chairman of the committee after this question was raised.

Now, take the document that has no earmarks to show who prepared it or who was responsible for its preparation.

Mr. SIMS. It was sent by Mr. Baruch.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know, perhaps Mr. Baruch might have sent it to the gentleman, he may or not have prepared the details of it.

Here is a director at $12,000, and two assistants at $7,500 each. Why, if you do that you will disarrange the salaries of almost every bureau chief in this Government. Go into the legislative bill and you will find that there is not a single bureau chief who has got a salary anything like that. You will find as a rule that $5,000 is a big salary for most any bureau chief. In rare instances they are fixed at $6,000. If you want to put a prize in the hands of every bureau chief you will do it by fixing the salary at this enormously high rate. Then you will find that you have raised up an enormous amount of trouble in the future.

But first I want to know what character of a man you will have to administer the provisions of this bill and the sort of experience and business ability that he has, and we want to know something about these assistant engineers. Here are four civilian engineers at $5,000 each, clerical help, miscellaneous supplies, without telling you anything about the salaries, $20,000. Rent of eight district offices in Washington, $9,600; clerical help and supplies for eight district offices, $32,000. Traveling expenses exclusive of Army Engineers estimated at $7,000. Legal expense estimated, $10,000. Allowance for expansion and other unforeseen contingencies, $24,400.

Is there an appropriation committee in this House that on that mere statement without any further explanation would appropriate that sum of money?

As far as delays are concerned, I want to say to the gentleman that it will never delay the bill one minute because in bills of this kind, if this amendment shall be adopted, before the bill gets out of the Senate the Appropriation Committee can go into the details having before us the amount of money and the character of service and will try to keep up some harmony in the salaries and not disorganize the whole program.

If this is to be the policy adopted in future, you will have no sort of rule for the salaries of men to take charge of these bureaus. Let this bill pass making an authorization of $150,000 to pay for a temporary organization and if this business shall grow rapidly, as it may, $150,000 may not be enough, but when you come to the Appropriations Committee you will find the committee confronted with this status of giving enormous high salaries, and we will be embarrassed in attempting to reduce them.

My friend from South Carolina calls my attention to the fact that even a Cabinet officer's salary is only $12,000, and yet you propose to give to this bureau under this bill $12,000 right off the reel without knowing a thing on earth who he is, what the duties are that are going to be devolved upon him. So, gentlemen of the committee, the mere display of this detailed statement sent to the chairman of the committee is the highest evidence of why we ought to let this take its orderly course.

As far as patriotism is concerned, I take it that no man could be charged as being unpatriotic who refuses to take from the taxpayers of America while we are appealing to them all over the country to respond in the buying of the bonds to pay the expenses of the war. I do not think it would lie in the mouth of any man to say that he is unpatriotic when he is trying to save as much money as possible to make it kill as many Huns as possible. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I make that pro forma amendment in order to have read from the desk a letter addressed to me by the Secretary of the Treasury on an important matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, September 2[illegible], 1918.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. RAINEY: Mr. Roper has handed to me your letter of the 17th instant. You state that you have been requested by the Hon. Herbert Hoover, United States Food Administrator, to present to the Ways and Means Committee a bill for the repeal or suspension of the mixed-flour laws, acts of June 13, 1898, as amended by the act of April 12, 1902, for the duration of the war, in order to carry out the international food program recently agreed upon at the conference of food administrators of all the allied countries, which provides for the admixture of 20 per cent of other cereal flours with wheat flour, and ask whether there is any objection by this department to the suspension of the mixed-flour law and whether such action would make possible the adulteration of flour or if there is anything in the mixed-flour act which prevents the use of deleterious substances.

There has been no change in the attitude of this department as expressed in the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, addressed to you under date of August 3, 1914, in which he recommended favorable action upon H. R. 16675, Sixty-third Congress, and in a letter of the former Commissioner of Internal Revenue, addressed to you under date of May 3, 1916, favorably recommending H. R. 9409, Sixty-fourth Congress, for the repeal of the mixed-flour law.

These recommendations of repeal were based upon the fact that it is of no importance as a revenue measure, and the purpose for which it was intended—that is, prevention of adulteration of wheat flour—is adequately taken care of by the pure-food law, act of June 30, 1906. The revenues derived from this source are negligible and would not pay the cost of the administration of the act. The total collections for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, were only $5,526.13, and the collections for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918, only $6,414.02. There were but 18 qualified manufacturers, packers, and repackers engaged in the production of mixed flour at the time of the issuance of circular No. 1156, of August 26, 1918, by the Food Administration, but since the publication of this circular inquiries received by this office indicate that a large proportion of the millers of this country intend to engage in the production of flour in accordance with the food program, which would come within the classification of mixed flour and subject such manufacturers to the taxes imposed by the act and compliance with the provisions thereof, and the regulations issued by the department regarding stamping the product, keeping records, and rendering monthly returns.

Much additional labor will be required on the part of our field officers to inspect the records covering the large increase in manufacturers under the program of the Food Administration, as well as in the handling of the large number of additional returns in the bureau. This work would require an increase in our force for field work as well as for office work.

In view of the fact that the department is on record in recommending the repeal of the mixed-flour law and of the increase in administrative difficulties and expense out of proportion to the tax return that would be received from this source under the food program, and in view of the further fact that the pure-food law and regulations thereunder fully protect the public against the adulteration or misbranding of flour, I would recommend the repeal of the mixed-flour law for the duration of the war.

Sincerely, yours, W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of construction, acquisition, maintenance, and operation of plants, transmission lines, and other material and property which the President is hereby empowered by the provisions of this act to construct or acquire and of providing funds pursuant to the provisions of subdivisions 2 and 3, of section 2 hereof, there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200,000,000.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

On page 14, line 25, strike out the sum of "$200,000,000" and insert the following: "$175,000,000, to be available during the time this act is in effect."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend the committee amendment. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all of line 26 of the committee amendment on page 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment: Page 14, line 26, strike out the language "to be available during the time this act is in effect."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a question. I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if this is the amendment he suggested, I have forgotten which member of the committee suggested it, and if so, I want the gentleman from Wisconsin to take care of it.

Mr. ESCH. Yes; I did so in the committee, but I do not want to take up the gentleman's time.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is familiar with the constitutional provision that you can not make an appropriation longer than two years for war purposes. I am addressing myself to the gentleman from Wisconsin. The gentleman knows under the Constitution we can not make appropriations for longer than two years.

Mr. ESCH. That is for the support of the Army.

Mr. SISSON. I understand; in support of the Army. I know, as a matter of fact, you might be able to avoid that provision in the Constitution upon the idea that this is for the purpose of producing materials to be used by the Army, but that would not necessarily cause my opposition to cease if I thought it did not impinge upon that constitutional provision, but I do want to say that language ought to be stricken out, because I am going to offer the same amendment at the proper time after this committee amendment has been disposed of that we adopted in section 9. In line 24, just before the word "appropriated," I am going to offer at the proper time an amendment "authorized to be," and so forth.

Now, if that amendment should be adopted having in the language "to be available during the time this act is in effect," the peculiar language of the bill virtually gives them $175,000,000 appropriations which will be reported to Congress, they say, but if reported to Congress, Congress will be powerless to do anything in reference to checking up that appropriation. That $175,000,000 ought not to be turned loose to this gentleman whose salary is to be fixed later. We do not know who he is; we ought not to turn over to him, in my judgment, $175,000,000 to be used not one year, not two years, not five years, but during the life of this act, during the time this act is in existence. Now, you certainly can trust Congress and he should be called upon at the end of every year to make a detailed statement as to how he has used this money and why it has been expended.

Mr. MADDEN. This bill provides for that.

Mr. SISSON. I understand, but there is no compulsion except this, that the President may report. Listen: Everything that has been done may not meet with the approval of Congress, and then you would be helpless unless we repealed this bill, but as long as you keep your hands on the purse strings, you can say, your conduct has not been what it ought to be, or if you will do certain things in the future or curtail certain things, we will give you enough money in order to wind this thing up.

Mr. MADDEN. I am in favor of the Appropriations Committee taking jurisdiction of the expenditure of money and appropriations and making full investigation before the money is appropriated.

Mr. SISSON. That is what we want. I do not believe that the mere fact you give Congress information, if it would be information like the statement made about the salaries, it would be no information at all, and then with this language in the bill they can continue to operate irrespective of whether it meets with the approval of Congress or not.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, having offered the amendment in the committee, having taken verbally section 19 of the food-control act, and believing it is not essential to this bill, I move to strike out that line, or I leave the motion to the gentleman from Mississippi to save time.

Mr. SIMS. There is no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment?

Mr. SISSON. I do not; they accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the question is upon the amendment as amended.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the amendment as it stands now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will submit his amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I desire to offer an amendment as follows: Strike out the figures "$175,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the amendment has not been adopted finally as amended.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I understand; but I am offering an amendment to the pending amendment.

Mr. SIMS. To so much of the amendment as remains.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I accept the correction of the gentleman from Tennessee—to so much of the committee amendment as remains.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "$175,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000,000."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, in reference to this amendment, I would say that much of the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi are applicable and also the remarks of my colleague from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. We only need enough money in this bill to start this proceeding, and after it is started then the Committee on Appropriations ought to continue appropriations which are necessary to carry it on. I would have made this sum $50,000,000 instead of $100,000,000 in my motion if I thought it would be adopted, because I believe $50,000,000 is ample for that purpose. The parties who will be charged with this matter by the President will not be able to use any money for their organization for several months, and it will be six months before they will get matters in shape so that they will need to pay out any sums upon contract.

It will probably be a year before any of these contracts are finished, and even if they desire to use money for the purpose of condemning property and paying the cost as determined by the court several months will inevitably elapse before they can need the money. I do not understand, and no gentleman has given any reason, why $175,000,000 should be appropriated right off, before we know where they are going to put a dollar of it, and why the attempt should be made to take away from the Appropriations Committee, which properly has jurisdiction of these matters, the right to go over and ascertain what sums ought properly to be paid out. There has been no extended investigation by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. They evidently had not time for it and thought that the bill needed to be put through in such haste that they could not go into these items; but they ought to be gone into by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. As to the amendment which I suggested a moment ago I would offer at the proper time to make this an authorization instead of an appropriation of $175,000,000. The committee having adopted the other amendment, identical to this, in section 9, I presume it will adopt this amendment here. If you leave $175,000,000 in, it becomes a limitation upon the appropriation rather than an appropriation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would be perfectly willing to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi if I was sure the committee would do that.

Mr. SISSON. I feel sure the committee will do it, since they have adopted the other. I might ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] now if, having adopted the amendment in section 9, he will agree that we insert before the word "appropriated," in line 24, the words "authorized to be"?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman from Tennessee has no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Of course, I can not agree to that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my amendment. I think the committee will sustain the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi when it is presented.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

In line 24, before the word "appropriated," insert "authorized to be."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 23, after the word "hereby," insert the words "authorized to be."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to oppose the amendment.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, if the words are adopted, would not the words "out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" be superfluous?

Mr. SISSON. I think they would be superfluous.

Mr. ROGERS. It devolves upon the Committee on Appropriations to name the source from which they are to be taken.

Mr. SISSON. In our appropriation bill we would appropriate from any money not otherwise appropriated, and we then would carry an appropriation in the exact language of this heading. You would find this head in our bill exactly as it is here. So I do not think that would cut any figure. Now, gentlemen of the committee, I do not care to discuss this. I suppose the committee understands my reason for offering this amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want only two or three minutes.

The War Department has had a long and expensive survey made and reported in detail to the committee, and Lieut Stanley, who was authorized to make the report of the survey, shows the following amounts needed right now, in the sections and districts mentioned as follows:

Power district.	Additional horsepower required for 1918–19.	Estimated cost.
Philadelphia, Chester, and adjacent territory	120,000	$14,500,000
State of New Jersey	94,000	5,500,000
Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio (Pittsburgh, Youngstown, Akron, Canton, Wheeling, Connellsville, and adjacent territories)	440,000	35,000,000
Baltimore, Lancaster, and adjacent territories	53,000	3,942,000
Wilmington, Del., and vicinity	13,300	610,000
Pennsylvania anthracite region	53,000	8,000,000
New England States	75,000	14,625,000
Southern States	135,000	15,000,000
Miscellaneous smaller power systems scattered in Eastern and Middle West States	250,000	31,250,000
Pacific slope, west of Rocky Mountains	.....	10,000,000
Total	1,233,300	138,427,000

Not a piece of machinery can be bought or installed until this appropriation goes through.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. It certainly could not be bought or installed after this bill passes the House. It will have to wait until the bill becomes a law.

Mr. SIMS. That is true; but we will do our part now, and then it will not have to go to any other committee of the House. Any other committee would have to take up and go over these amounts. It is not a question like the other. It is not on all fours at all. There was ground for the criticism made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] as to administrative expenses; but here is an actual survey made by competent experts, and now this House proposes to say that simply on a question of jurisdiction, after the hearings have been had, after they have been held at great expense, that you will not appropriate now the amounts carried in the bill, but simply authorize it and take the chances of delay that may prove to be very dangerous. I have nothing more to say. Let those who claim they want to support the President do it in the only effective way it can be done, in the most expeditious manner, and not quibble over the jurisdiction of committees. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. GOOD. Will not the gentleman explain his estimate? What are you going to buy with $35,000,000 in the Pennsylvania anthracite coal region?

Mr. SIMS. The hearings show all of it. I am not going into quibbles over details. Let the gentleman assume the responsibility for the flimsy excuse offered, if he wants to do so.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to answer my friend.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on this amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to proceed for two minutes.

Mr. SIMS. This thing has been fully discussed. It will be practically a repetition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I resent the intimation of the gentleman from Tennessee that any gentleman upon this floor desires to tie the hands of the President or to hold up this project.

If the gentleman for a moment would consider what this particular language involves, he would understand that none of his argument has any application whatever to it. This has nothing to do with contracts. They can go right ahead making the contracts if the amendment prevails. All this pertains to is the payment of the money after the contracts have been let. In this bill we have authorized the President to go ahead ad libitum and contract for any amount he wants to.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I question the gentleman's line of argument in that respect. You can not go on with the contract until the money is available.

Mr. SIMS. You can not do it at all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no question about it. The language is express in the bill itself giving the President power to make contracts without restriction.

Mr. ESCH. In an enormous expenditure like this it would be a dangerous practice for a Government official to make a contract without an appropriation.

Mr. SIMS. It would be an illegal performance.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Repeatedly authorizations are made without any appropriations whatever, from time to time, in bill after bill. A common example is found in the bills which authorize the making of contracts for the construction of public buildings, in which no appropriation is ever inserted.

In this bill we repose unlimited confidence in the President, for we authorize him to make contracts to any amount. He could under this bill bind the Government for billions, if he so desired. But no one has any fears that he will make contracts for more than in his judgment is necessary to successfully carry on the war. While I have criticized severely the wording of the bill and the careless manner in which it is drawn, neither I nor any any other gentleman has made any objection to these vast powers being conferred upon the President, nor has anyone tried to delay the bill, but only to better it, and that it has been improved I think everyone will agree.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 14, line 24, the words "out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: Line 24, page 14, after the word "appropriated," strike out the following: "out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ESCH. Then, Mr. Chairman, a like amendment ought to be made in lines 12 and 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ESCH: Page 14, line 12, after "$150,000," strike out the following: "out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

All revenues derived from the sale of any product of any plant or property which shall have been constructed or acquired pursuant to the provisions of this act, or from the lease or operation of any such plant, property, or transmission line, shall be available for the maintenance and operation of such plant, property, or transmission line; and all revenue in excess of the expense of such maintenance and operation and all sums received upon the sale of any property constructed or acquired pursuant to the provisions of this act or in repayment of any funds expended or provided pursuant to the provisions of subdivisions 2 and 3 of section 2 hereof shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury to the credit of this appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what is intended by the words "to the credit of this appropriation"?

Mr. MADDEN. That should be stricken out.

Mr. SIMS. The appropriation has been stricken out.

Mr. MADDEN. The words "to the credit of the appropriation" should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. SIMS. I take it that there is no use in using the language of the appropriation here, in view of the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "to the credit of this appropriation," in lines 12 and 13, of page 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: On page 15, line 12, after the word "Treasury," strike out the following: "to the credit of this appropriation."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That as soon as practicable after the 1st of January in each year the President shall cause to be submitted to the Congress a detailed report of all property constructed, acquired, or installed, of all moneys loaned or advanced, and all receipts and expenditures made pursuant to the powers conferred by this act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "advanced," in line 18, "and a list of all persons employed under the authority of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 15, line 18, after the word "advanced," insert the following: "and a list of all persons employed and salaries paid under this act."

Mr. WALSH. "And a list of all persons employed under the authority of this act."

The Clerk read as follows:

And insert the following: "And a list of all persons employed under the authority of this act."

Mr. WALSH. Now, Mr. Chairman, this section is the one which requires the information to be presented to the Congress, and it would seem to me that it would be wise to follow the practice we have established in other measures of this sort, where we require reports, to require also a list of persons who are employed to carry out the provisions of the act.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman mean by that day laborers?

Mr. WALSH. No. I mean the persons employed by the President.

Mr. SIMS. In the administration of the act?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMS. I do not see any objection to the amendment, as I understand it.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Does the gentleman include all the salaries?

Mr. WALSH. I think the other phraseology of the act will possibly cover that.

Mr. SIMS. If the Appropriations Committee gets jurisdiction and fixes the salaries of officials it will not be necessary to report as to that.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman from Wisconsin yesterday offered an amendment by which most of these employees will be under civil service. Does the gentleman think it will be necessary to give a list of all these civil-service employees?

Mr. WALSH. I do not see why not. This is the report the President will make to the Congress.

Mr. BLACK. It is the usual custom to transmit a list of these employees?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know whether it is the custom, but it is the practice of Congress to ask that it be done. I know that in connection with some of the departments of the Government the reports we have asked for have not been all that could be desired in that respect.

Mr. SIMS. Asked for in a legislative bill?

Mr. WALSH. No; I mean where we had provided special powers.

Mr. SIMS. In legislation?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes; in legislation.

Mr. SIMS. I am not opposed to any amendment that does not hurt the bill.

Mr. WALSH. That is not the purpose for which I am offering it.

Mr. SIMS. I see no objection to this.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend section 10 by striking out, in line 14, after the word "that," the words "as soon as practicable after the 1st of January," and to substitute therefor the words "not later than the first Monday in December."

Mr. SIMS. I think the other reports have nearly all been required as of the 1st of January. That is the provision in the railroad-control bill. Of course, it cuts no figure, any more than that it makes it the calendar year instead of the fiscal year.

Mr. ROGERS. If the practice of adhering to the calendar year is general in legislation, I should not think it was necessary to depart from it in this case.

Mr. SIMS. There is a bill before my committee now to make the calendar year the fiscal year in all things.

Mr. ROGERS. But every department of the Government, as far as I know, is required to report to the Congress by the first Monday in December. Now, that is the time when the Congress needs the information.

Mr. SIMS. In the railroad-control bill we provide for a report by the 31st of December, as I now recall, but I may not be correct as to the exact date.

Mr. ROGERS. And furthermore the language "as soon as practicable after the 1st of January" vitiates the provision altogether. It may be three months or six months or a year.

Mr. SIMS. I know the gentleman is friendly to the purposes of the bill. There can be very little of this work completed between the time the bill passes and the 1st day of January.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS: Page 15, line 14, after the word "that," strike out "as soon as practicable after the 1st of January" and insert in lieu thereof "not later than the first Monday in December."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That this act may be cited as the "Emergency power act."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "may be cited" and insert "shall be known."

Mr. SIMS. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 15, line 20, after the word "act," strike out the words "may be cited" and insert in lieu thereof the words "shall be known."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House as amended, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order that that is superfluous. The rule provides for that.

Mr. SIMS. I had overlooked that fact. I am so accustomed to acting without a special rule that I had forgotten about this.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOUSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12776) to provide further for the national security and defense and for the more effective prosecution of the war by furnishing means for the better utilization of the existing sources of electrical and mechanical power and for the development of new sources of such power, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. SIMS. Does not the gentleman understand the bill?

Mr. WALSH. There has been several amendments adopted here that I did not understand any more than I understood several of the committee amendments which were eliminated. I withdraw the demand, however.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I move to recommit the bill with instructions.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No.

The SPEAKER. Does any gentleman in the House who is opposed to the bill desire to make a motion to recommit? If not, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey moves to recommit the bill with instructions to report the same forthwith with amendments as follows: "Strike out the words 'five years' wherever they occur in the bill and insert in lieu thereof 'one year,' viz, in section 2, clause (2), page 4, line 25, in clause 3 as amended by substitute; also in clause (12), page 9, line 14." Second amendment: "After the word 'thereof' at the end of the first paragraph of section 8, on page 13, line 2, by striking out the period and inserting the following: 'not exceeding one year after the war period.'"

Mr. SIMS. I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey) there were—ayes 8, noes 29.

Accordingly the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on H. R. 11945 and ask that it be printed under the rule.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is this a complete report?

Mr. LEVER. It is not.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 819).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 14, 17, 20, 29, and 30.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 9, 11, 12, 16, 19, 22, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 31, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language and figures stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following: "market news service on grain, hay, feeds, and seeds, $150,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15a: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15a, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language and the figures stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following: "food and fertilizer surveys of the United States, $300,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the Senate amendment insert "$1,955,608"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "graps sirup" and insert in lieu thereof "grape sirups"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the language stricken out by the Senate amendment and insert the following language after the word "thereof," in the restored language, on page 10, line 7: "which are now or heretofore have been used for such purposes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendment of the Senate numbered 28.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11945) making appropriations to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the amendments of the Senate, namely:

On amendment No. 1: This amendment strikes out the language of the proviso to the enacting clause of the bill providing that no part of the money appropriated in the bill shall be used in paying the salary or expenses of any man who on account of employment in which he is or may be engaged under the provisions of this act has been or shall hereafter be certified by the Secretary of Agriculture, or by any other official of the Department of Agriculture, for deferred classification, or by any other Federal official or authority has been or may hereafter be placed in a deferred class under act No. 12, Sixty-fifth Congress, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, or under any act amendatory thereof that has been or shall hereafter be enacted. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 2: This amendment strikes out the provision for an appropriation of $105,000 for production of beef cattle. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 3: This amendment strikes out the provision for an appropriation of $52,950 for making cottage cheese on the farm. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 4: This amendment represents an amended total. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 5: This amendment strikes out the word "seeds" and inserts in lieu thereof the words "seed wheat and beans." The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 6: This amendment strikes out the word "seeds" and inserts in lieu thereof the words "seed wheat and beans." The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 7: This amendment strikes out the entire paragraph carrying appropriations aggregating $811,300, for the prevention, control, and eradication of insect and plant diseases injurious to agriculture, and the conservation and utilization of plant products. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 8: This amendment changes the number of the paragraph by striking out "Fourth" and inserting in lieu thereof "Third." The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 9: This amendment inserts the words "including edible nuts" in the paragraph making provision for increasing food production and eliminating waste and promoting conservation of food by educational and demonstrational methods. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 10: This amendment strikes out the provision of the paragraph making an appropriation of $35,000 for general administration of extension work. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 12: This amendment strikes out language providing that no part of the appropriation carried in the preceding paragraph shall be available for any purpose unless there shall have been previously issued the proclamation authorized by section 15 of the act of August 10, 1917, entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," such proclamation being the prohibition of the use of foods, fruits, food materials, or feeds in the production of malt or vinous liquors for beverage purposes. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 13: This amendment, having been passed by the House in exactly the same language as previously passed by the Senate, was not a subject of conference.

On amendment No. 14: This amendment strikes out "Fifth" and inserts in lieu thereof "Fourth." The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 15: This amendment strikes out the language of the paragraph appropriating $480,720 for market news service on grain, hay, feeds, and seeds. The House recedes with the following amendment inserted in lieu of the matter stricken out by the Senate: "market news service on grain, hay, feeds, and seeds, $150,000."

On amendment No. 15a: This amendment strikes out the language of the paragraph appropriating $449,700 for food and fertilizer surveys of the United States. The House recedes with the following amendment inserted in lieu of the matter stricken out by the Senate: "food and fertilizer surveys of the United States, $300,000."

On amendment No. 16: This amendment corrects a grammatical error by striking out the word "and." The House recedes.

On amendment No. 17: This amendment strikes out "$229,937" for conservation of food products in transportation and storage and inserts in lieu thereof "$4,484." The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 18: This amendment represents an amended total.

On amendment No. 19: This amendment strikes out the language of the paragraph making provision for the establishment of a market news service in the District of Columbia. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 20: This amendment strikes out "Sixth" and inserts in lieu thereof "Fifth." The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 21: This amendment inserts "including graps sirup," between the word "sirups" and the figures "$5,000," in the section of the bill providing for the preparation of sweet sirups. The House recedes with an amendment striking out "graps sirup" and inserting in lieu thereof "grape sirups."

On amendment No. 22: This amendment strikes out "control of noxious rodents" and inserts in lieu thereof "destruction of prairie dogs, gophers, and ground squirrels." The House recedes.

On amendment No. 23: This amendment strikes out a proviso authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture under certain conditions to requisition the use of and take possession of any building or space in any building, and appurtenances thereof, in the District of Columbia, other than a dwelling house occupied as such or a building occupied by any other branch of the United States Government. The House recedes with the following amendment: Restore the language stricken out by the Senate and insert, between the word "thereof" and the word "in" in the restored language, the following: "which are not or heretofore have been used for such purposes."

On amendment No. 24: This amendment adds new language providing that under such rules, regulations, and bonds as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe distilled spirits or alcohol produced prior to October 3, 1917, from products the growth of the island of Porto Rico may be admitted from said island into the United States for industrial purposes in the arts and sciences. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 25: This amendment adds new language amending section 9 of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," approved August 10, 1917, so as to permit the admission to the United States for immediate slaughter of tick-infested cattle from Mexico, South and Central America, the islands of the Gulf of Mexico and Carribbean Sea, at ports above the southern cattle quarantine line, upon the same conditions as such cattle are now permitted entry at ports below that line in accordance with regulations prescribed under the authority conferred by the act of August 10, 1917. The act further provides for the deferred slaughter, under regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, of such cattle imported into Porto Rico and for the exportation of tick-infested cattle from the Virgin Islands to Porto Rico in accordance with joint regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 26: This amendment adds new language authorizing the President to extend invitation to other nations to appoint delegates or representatives to the Farmers' National Congress, to be held at Jacksonville, Fla., in connection with the Pan American International Farm and Live Stock Exposition. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 27: This amendment amends the proviso to paragraph 2, section 7, of the act approved April 5, 1918, entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense, and for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and to supervise the issuance of security, and for other purposes," by making an exception of advances secured by loans for agricultural purposes or loans based on live stock, and thereby modifies the requirement of the act, as to these loans, to the extent that the corporation named in the act may lend 100 per cent of the face value of this class of security. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 28: This amendment adds now language and constitutes what is commonly known as the Pomerene antirent profiteering bill, and among other things provides for the appointment of a rent administrator for the District of Columbia. The conferees have been unable to agree as to this amendment.

On amendment No. 29: This amendment adds new language authorizing the Secretary of the Interior under certain conditions and terms to lease to citizens of the United States and others any part of the unallotted lands within any Indian reservation within the States of Arizona, California, Montana, New Mexico, Washington, or Wyoming heretofore withdrawn from entry under the mining laws for the purpose of mining for deposits of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 30: This amendment makes it unlawful, except under certain stipulated requirements, for any person, firm, or corporation knowingly to ship, offer for shipment, or transport in commerce among the several States or for commerce with foreign countries any concentrated feeding stuffs containing certain specified ingredients. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 31: This amendment prohibits the payment to employees under this act of any greater salary or compensation than that paid to other persons employed in the Agricultural Department for similar or like services. The House recedes.

A. F. LEVER,
GORDON LEE,
E. S. CANDLER,
G. N. HAUGEN,
J. C. MCLAUGHLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I will.

Mr. ROGERS. Can the gentleman inform the House when he expects to call up the conference report?

Mr. LEVER. I am unexpectedly called home this afternoon, and I do not think it can be reached before Saturday.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Did the conferees agree to the prohibition amendment?

Mr. LEVER. The two bodies had already agreed to that so that it was not in conference.

DISPENSING WITH BUSINESS ON CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order to-morrow—Calendar Wednesday—may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to dispense with business on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Illinois do that for the purpose of calling up the measure relating to the sanitorium?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

Mr. TALBOTT, from the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers, reported (H. Rept. No. 820) that the files and papers described in the report of the Acting Public Printer in House Document No. 1034, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, dated April 10, 1918, are not needed in the transaction of the current business of such departments and bureaus and have no permanent value or historical interest.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent for leave of absence for three days, on account of a death in the family.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for leave of absence for three days. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 334. Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of October, 1918, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11231) to regulate the hours of duty of the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House, and had appointed Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. KING, and Mr. DILLINGHAM as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 334. Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of October, 1918, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, October 2, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 13034) to validate and confirm certain erroneously allowed entries in the State of Minnesota; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DENT: A bill (H. R. 13035) to amend section 4 of Chapter V of "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, and to make said amendment retroactive; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13036) transferring jurisdiction and control for the period of the war over the Southern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the Secretary of War for use for Army hospital purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13037) to amend the fiftieth article of war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII,

Mr. FRENCH introduced a bill (H. R. 13038) granting an increase of pension to Alwilda Smith, which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Petitions of Rev. Harland C. Logan and other citizens of Waukesha, Wis., in favor of wartime prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Memorial of the New York Sunday School Commission (Inc.), protesting against the zone system for second-class postage rates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ESCH: Memorial of the market committee of the National Live Stock Association, indorsing the report of the Federal Trade Commission on the meat-packing industry; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HAMILTON of New York: Resolution of a public meeting held at Houghton, N. Y., urging constitutional amendment to prohibit polygamy and polygamous cohabitation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SLOAN: Petitions of Dr. A. J. Nielson, of Beatrice, Nebr.; of Charles H. Bath and 120 others; and of Charles F. Barth and 60 others, all relative to House bill 5118, concerning chiropractic practice; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Petition signed by Miss J. Anna Norris, 509 Sixth Street SE., Minneapolis, Minn., in favor of House bill 12767, relative to child-labor regulation; to the Committee on Labor.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, October 2, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

With gratitude in our hearts and praise upon our lips, we approach Thee, our Father in heaven, for the good news and glad tidings of great joy which come to us from all along the lines, promising victory to the entente powers, looking to a peace which shall fill all pure hearts with joy and make the old world ring with gladness in a liberty and justice which shall right all wrongs and usher in Thy Kingdom with all its hopes and promises for Thy children; and everlasting praise be Thine. In His Name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EMERGENCY POWER BILL—CORRECTION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct the RECORD. In an amendment offered yesterday to the emergency power bill (H. R. 12776) by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] he referred to subsection 13, but afterwards a section was stricken out so that subsection 13 will become subsection 12. In the enrolling of the bill I ask unanimous consent that it may be enrolled in the amendment as subsection 12 instead of subsection 13 to section 2.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that in enrolling the bill passed yesterday subsection 13 may be enrolled as subsection 12. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

OFFICE OF THE JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] presented a communication from the Judge Advocate General's office, which was placed in the RECORD. This communication was of a somewhat unusual character. I have received a similar one, and with the permission of the House I shall read it and my reply thereto:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
Washington, D. C., September 30, 1918.

Maj. Gen. ENOCH H. CROWDER, United States Army,
The Judge Advocate General.

DEAR GEN. CROWDER: Under date of September 19, 1918, I have a letter from the office of the Judge Advocate General, as follows:

"This office is in receipt of your communication concerning Mr. Frank Buren, of Los Angeles, Cal.

"Replying thereto, permit me to say that the offer of the many lawyers throughout the country who have applied for service in this department is deeply appreciated. Such are to be commended for the patriotic motives by which they are inspired. However, after thorough consideration and in the light of its experience, the department has found it necessary and in the interests of the military service to inaugurate a different method of selecting officers for this branch of the service. Accordingly, it has undertaken, after a thorough investigation through its own representatives, who will get into personal and confidential touch with the best professional sources of information, to assemble, thus upon its own initiative, a list of those lawyers from the country at large and from those already in the Army who, as a result of such investigation, are deemed best qualified for the service; and from such a list all appointments to this department will hereafter be made.

"Obviously, under such a system of selection, applications for appointment to this department must be without influence or effect. Therefore, I have the honor to advise you that they can not be considered."

I learn that other Members of Congress have received letters identical with this in reply to their letters filing applications from patriotic attorneys in their several districts offering their services in the Army and applying for commissions as judge advocates, if found worthy and the War Department needs them.

I assure you, General, that I do not present applications to the Judge Advocate General's office, and I do not think that other Members of Congress do, with a view of unduly pressing them upon the attention of that office or of embarrassing the office in any way. It so happens that that branch of the War Department is the only one where attorneys' training and education have special value. Those who desire to serve their country in war naturally apply to that office. They send these applications to the Congressmen representing their several districts or the Senators representing their States because they know them personally and possibly have no personal acquaintance with anyone else at the Capital. They know that each Congressman represents a district embracing from a quarter to a half million people; that he is their representative in a very direct way, being chosen by popular vote at frequent intervals; and they think that the presentation of their application or its recommendation by their Congressman or Senator will assure it courteous and careful consideration.

The Congressman or Senator is probably better acquainted with the personal character and capability of most men in his district than anyone else. That is a necessity of his selection as Congressman. He therefore feels that in furnishing this information to the War Department, or any other department of the Government, with his personal knowledge of the applicant, he is rendering the officials who have the choice to make a real service. Generally, and in my own experience almost universally, such information is received courteously and with assurance that it will receive consideration.

For myself, I think that any American citizen who deems himself qualified should have the right to apply to the proper authority for any public place open to American citizens, including the Army when in the making. Endorsements of other American citizens usually and properly accompany such applications as to the fitness and character of the applicants. In passing upon such applications the statements of endorsers are proper subjects of consideration for the appointing authority. For those of a Congressman I would ask no greater consideration than for those of any other American citizen, taking into account his opportunity for forming an opinion. But they ought to receive some consideration, and his suggestions ought not to be thrown out because he is a Congressman. These remarks are called out by the last paragraph of the letter quoted, as follows:

"Obviously, under such a system of selection applications for appointment to this department must be without influence or effect. Therefore I have the honor to advise you that they can not be considered."

May I inquire what becomes of the application of Mr. Frank Buren, and of all the other attorneys whose applications are on file in your office, which are "without influence or effect," and which you advise me "can not be considered"? What becomes of them? Are they sent back to the applicants and their authors, who were patriotic and vigorous enough to file their applications, left out of consideration, and the places they aspired to filled by men chosen through "personal and confidential touch"? Why should the "confidential" feature enter into the matter at all?

I have great admiration, General, for the effective manner in which you have organized our armies. I believe that most Congressmen have. With your heavy load of duty, I presume that you do not see everything that emanates from your office. But one thing that you are in a position to realize, an obstacle that you have had to overcome, is the widespread dread in this country of autocratic military power. We all know that great power is necessary, but it ought always to be exercised with great care and discretion, and generally it has been so exercised. No one, even Congressmen, ought to be told that applications for commissions "must be without influence or effect," or that "they can not be considered." While it may be true, it is unnecessary and irritating.

As to Congressmen as such, they have had much to do with officers of the United States Army, and since the founding of the United States Military Academy at West Point the career of every successful soldier graduate of that institution has had its beginning in the good opinion and official action of a Congressman, except the few appointed by the President. That is true of Gen. Grant, of Gen. Sherman, of Gen. Sheridan, of Gen. Robert E. Lee, of Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson, of Gen. Pershing, of Gen. Goethals, of Gen. Liggett, of every one of Gen. Pershing's corps of commanders, and of yourself.

As Congressmen have done so well in choosing and recommending for military life, as this list, mostly of boys chosen from the farms of the country, would indicate, is it really necessary to inform their successors in Congress at the present day that their recommendation for judge advocates "must be without influence or effect" and "can not be considered"?

With great personal esteem, I am,
Very truly, yours,
H. Z. OSBORNE, M. C.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3985) for the relief of John Chick, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3985. An act for the relief of John Chick; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 334. Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of October, 1918, and for other purposes.

BUILDING FOR PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE, CITY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged report (No. 821) from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 439.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 12404, entitled "A bill authorizing the construction of a building for the Public Health Service in the city of Washington, D. C."; that there shall be not to exceed one hour of general debate. At the conclusion of such general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. After the bill shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the same shall be reported to the House with such recommendations as the committee may make, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. This rule provides the same as did the rule under which we considered the power bill, that immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. There seemed to be some objection to that, and if there is to this I shall be glad to ask unanimous consent, before I move the previous question, to change that so as to strike out the words "shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union" and insert "It shall be in order to move to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union." If that is better and it suits the House better, I shall be glad to ask that that change be made.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, while I have no objection to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois, yet for the purposes of this rule, because of the statements made before the Committee on Rules with respect to the bill, and because I think we shall give only about one hour or more to its consideration, I would not insist upon that change. I hope to see the bill passed within two hours. But, in order to avoid any such complication as was feared by some Members of the House was possible under the language of the rule under which the power bill was considered, I shall make no objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois if he makes a request for unanimous consent to modify the rule as indicated.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be changed according to the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 2 and 3, after the word "House," in line 2, strike out the words "shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union" and insert in lieu thereof the words "it shall be in order to move to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the word "House" should be stricken out and inserted in the new language.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman is right about that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment as follows: Strike out the words in line 2, after the word "resolution," "the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union" and insert the words "It shall be in order to move that the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modification?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas 20 minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12404, which authorizes the construction of a building for the Public Health Service in the city of Washington, D. C. This building is for the hygienic laboratory under the control of the Public Health Service, which is located in the southwestern part of the city near the Naval Hospital. Since the war has been upon us this service has been called upon to do a great deal more work than it ever did before. All of the toxins of every kind and character and description must be passed on by the Public Health Service before they can be sent out to be used. We have now a great many soldiers in the Army, and the typhoid serum, the tetanus serum, and others are necessary to properly take care of the Army and Navy.

So the work of this laboratory has been very much increased. This is also to provide along with this laboratory a larger animal house where they can take care of more animals necessary on which to experiment. They now have three horses, and they desire during this time especially that they may have room for 24 head. They must use, as you know, the blood of horses for making these experiments, and a horse can only be bled about once a week, so they are short of material with which to work. The Secretary of the Treasury has very strongly urged this. As I understand, there appeared before the committee Mr. Perry, the consulting engineer of the Public Health Service, describing what this building should be and what they wanted, and this bill has the indorsement of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, and I think, Mr. Speaker, in view of the work that these physicians in the Government have done in the past in the way of studying the germs of disease and the cause of these epidemics and what you may do to check them, it is one of the most important functions connected with the Government. Let me remind you, as I am sure you all know, only a few years ago and in the recollection of all of us yellow fever was the scourge of the South. Each year they dreaded the time when yellow fever might come to them and when business would be demoralized, when families would go away from their homes who were able to do so, and many, many of the residents of that section died as a result of this disease. You remember that the Government appointed a commission composed of three surgeons of the Army, and that Dr. Walter Reed, for whom the great hospital here is named, was head of that commission. Those three noble men and surgeons lost their lives in investigating this disease, but they determined the cause and as a result of that we have yellow fever under control and nobody in the South fears it now. [Applause.] We remember that there was sent to the Rocky Mountains of the West a celebrated surgeon to study mountain fever, that he had discovered the cause of that dreaded and fatal disease out there, and as a result of his investigation he lost his life by contracting the malady. He performed a noble service for humanity. This bill is only an effort to extend the facilities for doing a great work in which the Public Health Service is engaged and I think that the Congress of the United States could perform no better service to-day than to give every facility necessary that those men who are battling against diseases, endeavoring to find out the cause and put a stop to them throughout the country, that they may do their work more efficiently, if possible, than they have been able to do it in the past. There is to-day spreading throughout the United States and possibly throughout the world an epidemic of influenza in which many lives have already been sacrificed and probably many more will go the same way. It will be important if this Public Health Service can study diseases of this kind that some day our country may be free of these terrible scourges that go over it at times as an epidemic.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I will.

Mr. LAZARO. Is it not a fact, too, that it was following these investigations by these medical men and as a result of these experiments that it was possible for this country to build the Panama Canal?

Mr. FOSTER. There is no question about it. Gen. Gorgas, whom everybody honors, a great sanitary surgeon, went to the Panama Canal Zone and made it possible for us to build that canal. I dare say if we had not discovered the cause of malaria and knew to a certainty that malaria only came from the bite of the mosquito, that to-day, if we were endeavoring to dig that canal, we would still be trying, and trying to do it without any success, and many lives would have been sacrificed in that great undertaking.

I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] two minutes and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I am very heartily in favor of the adoption of this rule. Two or three days ago a gentleman called at my office and urged the passage of this measure providing for the erection of an addition to the Government laboratory. He was very earnest in his plea for immediate action. When he went out, a very brilliant physician, who at that time was also in the office, said, "That is the man who is largely entitled to the credit for stamping out bubonic plague. He was one of the men who conducted the investigation which showed that bubonic plague was brought in by rats; that the rats were often covered with fleas; that the fleas escaped from the rats when the ship landed and often attacked human beings; and that human beings developed this awful plague." He said, "That man was one of the men who followed out that thing, and they have now established a system by which the bubonic plague is practically eliminated." The gentleman who called to urge prompt action was Dr. Blue. I am willing to act on the recommendation of men like that. Now, these men say we need additional facilities, and I believe this House will take pleasure in passing the act with practical unanimity.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I concur in what the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from North Carolina have said about the importance of the bill provided for by this resolution. I would not, however, have the House or the country get the impression that this is a bill authorizing physicians or others to experiment upon the subjects mentioned. This is a bill authorizing the construction of a building to add necessary facilities to enable the health service to prepare serums, the value of which have already been demonstrated not only to the Army but to the civilian population, serums that prevent fevers and diseases and that effect cures of other diseases.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman does not mean to say that in preparing these serums that have been tested already that it shuts the door to experiment?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no.

Mr. LAZARO. Those things go hand in hand.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And I want to say that this bill provides facilities for the making of serums, the value of which have been thoroughly tested out and established and is not primarily for experiments.

Mr. LAZARO. I know; but the men who have charge of this work and who are preparing those serums are constantly experimenting and therefore the two go hand in hand.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For other serums, oh yes; but in addition to that I was about to say this will afford opportunity for developing other serums and the value of such serums in the prevention or cure of diseases.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the measure that is sought to be given a privileged status it is to provide an extension of a building now in existence.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Virtually doubling the capacity of the present laboratory for the purpose of testing out serums that are manufactured by private concerns to determine whether they are up to the required standard?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. The additional recommendation providing for accommodations for additional horses, so as to take care of 24 horses for the Public Health Service to experiment directly upon for the manufacture of salvarsan—they give it a new name now, which I was not acquainted with before—is a minor matter, so far as the appropriation in this bill is concerned. It is merely for the enlargement of a shed so as to accommodate 24 horses.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It was stated to the Committee on Rules that it had been discovered during the progress of the war that certain serums that had heretofore been a specific or have been regarded as a specific for certain diseases were not up to the standard at which the serum should test, and that the serum did not affect the cure for which it was known it was a curative if the serum itself were of the standard or grade that was essential. And it is for the purpose of not only testing that serum but of making serum that I understand this building is to be erected.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give any information as to the amount of floor space that is now occupied by the present laboratory? I believe they have some 145 employees down there. Can the gentleman inform the House as to the amount of floor space and the congested condition of that laboratory?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. As to the floor space, I am advised that it was stated that now they had only 3 horses, and that they needed 24 horses to experiment on.

Mr. STAFFORD. Twenty-four horses would merely require the enlargement of a shed, but what the department has really desired and what they have been seeking since 1913, and which has been refused by the Committee on Appropriations, has been an extension and enlargement of their present laboratory, where they are employing some 145 persons, engaged in the testing of serums of private manufacture.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That was not called as fully to the attention of the Committee on Rules as probably it was to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which committee no doubt will give the information when the bill is under consideration.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not believe that question was investigated at all by either committee. I wish somebody on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds would give the information. That is the main question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Committee on Rules does not always go into the details of all the measures that are brought before it. And it would obviously be impossible for the committee to do that. It goes into the general purposes of bills. Since the war began, and when it is disclosed that the general purpose of a bill is to add to the efficiency of the administration in the conduct of the war, the Committee on Rules has been always willing to bring in a rule for the consideration of such a measure.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that this laboratory has been used very largely in connection with experiments relative to nutritional diseases, and that is one of its very important purposes and functions. They desire to enlarge their experimentation along those lines, and it is very important they should.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is true. The rule simply makes this bill in order and, as now modified, I think there will be no question that it does not give this bill precedence over important legislation that has always been regarded under the rules of the House as privileged business.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDOW] for the purpose of reading a letter.

Mr. WALDOW. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the adoption of this rule, but I rise for a different purpose.

I have received hundreds of letters from the boys in camp and in France, but I believe this one, coming at such an opportune time from one of my constituents, deserves space in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is as follows:

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE,
September 8, 1918.

MY DEAR FRIEND CONGRESSMAN WALDOW: I am located in France at last, having arrived here about two weeks ago after a very interesting trip across the Atlantic. Everything is fine. Our quarters are clean and dry, our eats are excellent, and our officers are all fine men.

From the news you get you know that the Americans are living up to their past reputation, and I am sure we will all soon be home again with victory in tow.

I understand the fourth liberty loan campaign has started at home, and I earnestly hope that the folks at home will do their bit and back up the boys over here. We men are certainly doing "our bit" and "our best." All we ask is a solid backing at home. I wish the authorities in charge all the success in the world and hope they get a larger amount than they are setting out for. Another large oversubscription will make Kaiser Bill stop for a while in his mad work and realize that we are in it and are going to win.

Very truly, yours,
GEO. ALTES,
A. E. F.—American address, Hamburg, N. Y.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] want to use any time now?

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman may go ahead if he desires.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment the Committee on Rules has acted very wisely in reporting in a rule for the consideration of this bill in view of the fact that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has found after full investigation that the construction of this building is necessary to the proper and efficient carrying on of the work of the Public Health Bureau. I have had occasion at different times to examine into some of the various classes of work the Public Health Bureau is doing. From such observations as I have made of the work of the Public Health Bureau during the past six years I am led to believe that there is no department of the Government performing better or more efficient work.

I was much interested in the statement made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] in regard to the work performed in the eradication of the bubonic plague. I had in mind, however, that a large part of the actual work had been done by another in the Public Health Bureau than Dr. Blue. Still I presume there was and is glory enough in the great, good work that was done in eradicating this terrible plague from the Pacific coast to extend deserved honor and distinction to Dr. Blue and at the same time to the brilliant young doctor whom I had in mind was entitled to the chief credit for the results accomplished in San Francisco in eradicating the disease there and stopping its further spread throughout the country. The young doctor I have in mind spent his boyhood days and young manhood in North Dakota. Leaving our State university he took up the study of medicine at Rush Medical College, from which he later graduated. Some years ago when the bubonic plague made its appearance in San Francisco he was sent out there by the Public Health Bureau to assist in its eradication. As I now recall the matter, I am under the impression that most of the actual work of blotting out the plague from this country was carried on by him. I know that this young man is considered by medical men throughout the world as a leading authority on means and methods of eradicating the bubonic plague. The young man I refer to is Dr. William Colby Rucker, who for a number of years has been one of the most valuable and effective workers in the Public Health Bureau. Three or four years ago when a few cases of the bubonic plague were reported in New Orleans he was sent there by the Health Bureau, and soon had the plague under control. His methods of control and eradication are so thorough and effective and his genius and his fidelity to his work so marked that when his work was finished in New Orleans he was extended the highest praise and gratitude of the people of that city.

I do not think that the amount of $250,000, such as is called for in this bill, is an item that we should hesitate at this time for a moment to appropriate if it is needed, as it has been represented to be needed by the very able and very competent physicians and surgeons and scientists who are to-day at the head of the Public Health Bureau. The work they are carrying on in safeguarding the health of our soldiers as well as the health of those of our citizens in civil life is incalculable in its value.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO].

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am heartily in favor of this measure, because it helps in the preservation of health. For years and years the medical men of the world have been trying to impress upon the people this fact, that good health is the most valuable asset we possess. It is often said on the floor of this House that this war, as horrible as it is, will teach the American people many valuable lessons. And there is no doubt in my mind but that one of the most valuable lessons that will be taught in this war will be the importance of preventing disease. To-day we understand as we never understood before that it is necessary not only to preserve the health of our boys on the firing line, but it is also equally necessary to preserve the health of the people at home, who are united and working earnestly to produce the necessities for these boys on the firing line. I hope that the American people especially will never forget this lesson, and that from now on they will be willing to appropriate the money necessary, so that medical men can experiment and carry on the work that is necessary in order to prevent disease, and not wait until people are sick and then spend ten times more to be cured. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I, too, recognize the importance and the value of this bill, and I do not rise to criticize the rule. But there is one feature of it which I regret, and that is that the building is to be erected in the city of Washington.

We all, of course, appreciate how congested Washington is just now. I do not know enough about the details to form an opinion, and it may be quite essential that this proposed building should be constructed here; but I noticed that yesterday the papers said the President had written to various bureaus, asking them why they should not move from Washington to some other city.

That same suggestion has been made here in the House about those same bureaus and some others many times, and I was very glad to see at last that the Executive had taken it up, for it certainly did seem and does seem that when the city is being overcrowded so dangreously, and when there are such hardships imposed upon the new influx of people coming here, there should not be here these various bureaus which just as well and better could be located somewhere else.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In addition to what the gentleman said, I observe this morning that a change had been made in the hours of meeting in the various departments to avoid congestion on the street cars.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. I noticed one omission from the President's list, which caused me surprise. I wondered why he did not suggest that the Railroad Administration, over which Mr. McAdoo presides, should also be asked why they could not have their headquarters in some other city. When the bill to purchase the Arlington Hotel property and make an office building of it was introduced in the House we were told that that, the most magnificent office building in the city, was to house the War-Risk Insurance Bureau; but the other day my committee was informed that the top three or four floors of that magnificent building, accommodating hundreds of clerks, instead of being given to the War-Risk Insurance Bureau as was pretended, were to house the Railroad Administration

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. If I have time I will. Now, I can not see why the Railroad Administration needs to have this great office force in Washington. While, of course, the Secretary of the Treasury is nominally the Railroad Director it is impossible for any one man to really conduct the great variety of organizations which he is at the head of, and we all know that Mr. McAdoo can not be the real executive head of the railroads of this country. We know that others have to do most of the work. He does the spectacular work, he is the figurehead, and no doubt he does a great deal of good work. But he can not do all the administrative work, and I can not see any reason why this great force of the Railroad Administration offices should be here in Washington. When it was first suggested that we were to have that building it was stated that it was for the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, and if there was any intention then to put in the Railroad Administration, it was carefully suppressed before our committee.

Everyone knows that the War-Risk Bureau needs everything it can have to improve its efficiency, for I am sure we all have daily letters complaining of its incapacity. Only within a few days a letter was brought to my attention where a woman said that she had written to the War-Risk Insurance Bureau half a dozen times trying to get them to stop sending her checks which did not belong to her. She had applied for an allotment under her own name, giving her full name, and her husband, a soldier, had applied for her allotment, giving simply her initials. She had put her residence in one place, with her father-in-law, and he had put it in another, and consequently every month she got a check for the amount her husband asked for and another check for the allotment she asked for. Every month she sent back one of the checks, and asked them to stop sending her this extra check. But no; they kept sending her two checks every month. She can not stop them. I do not suppose the Government will have to pay the checks, for fortunately this woman is unusually honest and will not allow even the Government to force upon her money which does not belong to her; but if that is an illustration of the work that is being done in the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, and if handsome and sufficient housing would improve them they certainly ought to have it, and not have it taken away from them by Mr. McAdoo for his force, which could work just as well in some other city where space is not so scarce. The Administration of the Railroads, it seems to me, is one of the instrumentalities which the President might very well have included in the list of those which it was possible could be removed from Washington.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. How could we spare Mr. McAdoo?

Mr. GILLETT. Well, as I suggested, I do not think it is necessary that this large force of hundreds of clerks should be in the same city where the nominal head of the bureau is, because they could be located in New York or Chicago or any other great railway center, where it seems to me they ought to be, and he could have his personal staff here. Of course I do not know the details, but it seems to me the President might have been able to get into communication with this distinguished Cabinet officer as well as with these others, and ascertained whether it was indispensable that this magnificent suite of rooms which, as we were told, was destined for the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, was to be taken away from the War-Risk Insurance Bureau and given to the Railroad Administration.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I notice in the papers that one of the bureaus that the President recommended to be removed from Washington was the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

Mr. GILLETT. I did not know that.

Mr. DENISON. So that there might be an intention to take that entire building for the Railroad Administration, because there are already many people connected with that organization who think it is going to be a permanent thing.

Mr. GILLETT. It does not seem necessary, even if it is to be a permanent thing, that its headquarters should be in Washington.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, it was originally intended by the Secretary of the Treasury to house all the activities of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau in the Arlington Office Building.

Mr. LANGLEY. As a member of the Committee on Public Bulidings and Grounds I will say that that was the statement before our committee, and the strong reason urged by the department for the purchase of that site and the erection of that building.

Mr. GILLETT. That is what I understood.

Mr. LANGLEY. So as to furnish them with quarters.

Mr. SLOAN. Here in Washington, where we do so little railroad business. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, we would like to hear some of that conversation that is going on over there.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's point of order is well taken. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STRONG, for several days, on account of illness in his family; and

To Mr. VESTAL (at the request of Mr. SANDERS of Indiana), for five days, for the purpose of making liberty-loan speeches.

BUILDING FOR THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

On motion of Mr. BURNETT, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12404) authorizing the construction of a building for the Public Health Service in the city of Washington, D. C., with Mr. SHALLENBERGER in the chair.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The rule provides for an hour of general debate on this bill. I suppose under that rule perhaps I would have control of that time. I am desirous of yielding to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who is present, one-half of that time, if I may do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized under the rule for one hour. He may yield such time as he desires to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BURNETT. I will ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract for the construction of an additional building for laboratory purposes and research work and for enlarging and remodeling the present animal house connected with the Hygienic Laboratory, Public Health Service, Washington, D. C., at a limit of cost of $250,000.

With the following committee amendment:

After line 9, page 1, add the following:

"In carrying the foregoing authorization for additional buildings to the Hygienic Laboratory into effect the Secretary of the Treasury may enter into contracts or purchase materials in the open market, or otherwise, and employ laborers and mechanics for executing the work as in his judgment may best meet the public exigencies, within the limits of the authorization herein made."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the purposes of this bill have been so well explained by the gentlemen from the Rules Committee and the gentlemen to whom they have yielded that I am only desirous of occupying a very short time.

This bill was requested by the Treasury Department as an emergency proposition. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds so regarded it, or they would not have reported it, and the Rules Committee so regarded it, or they would not have reported the rule.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in a letter to our committee, says:

There are unprecedented demands for viruses, serums, and toxins, which are used in the prevention and cure of diseases, especially meningitis, pneumonia, tetanus, and typhoid fever. Both our own military forces and those of our allies depend largely upon establishments licensed by the Treasury Department for such supplies.

In the interest of national efficiency, it has become necessary to require the examination of a certain percentage of samples of every lot of serum put on the market by licensed establishments. In addition, studies have been begun recently relative to the standardization of arsphenamine and allied preparations, and tests are made of each lot of these important products before they are permitted to be placed on the market.

This means a very large increase in the amount of work done at the Hygienic Laboratory, and in order to furnish the necessary facilities it is absolutely necessary to provide an additional building of, approximately, the same size as that of the present Hygienic Laboratory, and to enlarge and remodel the animal house so as to give stable accommodations for 24 horses.

In order that provision may be made to take care of this important work, it is deemed absolutely necessary that an authorization as above outlined be obtained as soon as possible. Any special expedition that can be given this matter will be particularly appreciated.

In 1913 this laboratory had become considerably congested and was inadequate, and the Treasury Department then asked for an authorization, I believe, of $175,000 for the purpose of duplicating or enlarging the building that they were using. Since the war came on they need more in addition to that. They need more stable room. The statement was made before the Rules Committee the other day that their accommodations were for only 3 horses and that they need 24 horses for the purposes of these tests and that their present quarters were totally inadequate. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] asked in regard to the floor space that they already had. My recollection is that that was stated before the committee, but it does not appear in the hearings, and I state candidly to the gentleman that I do not remember the amount of floor space that they said they now have.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the one question that justifies this resolution, whether the accommodations at present are inadequate to meet the growing needs of the service.

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the hearings disclose that there are 145 employees.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As far as providing additional housing accommodations for the 24 horses are concerned, that would be a minor matter. The main appropriation is for the enlargement, to double the capacity of the present laboratory building.

Mr. BURNETT. Of course, that is the more expensive part of the authorization. I suppose there is no question about that, because the increased facilities for stable room would require a much smaller expenditure than the other. At the same time that must be sanitary, and all safeguards must be thrown around it, and if it is true that the laboratory was congested and inadequate in 1913, certainly with the increased amount of work put upon these people, it must be more inadequate now. It is not so much a question of housing 145 people, but the laboratory fixtures and appliances, and things that are used for this work must be housed also. They need an enlargement for that purpose in order to have more floor space. The gentleman has referred to the fact of removal to other cities. Certainly this work should be right here under the control of the Health Bureau, and there could not be any good reason for saying that it ought to be somewhere else. I am not going to combat the argument gentlemen have made about other bureaus or activities being removed, but so far as this one is concerned it ought to be here, and they ought to have the building right now. This bill was introduced on June 17. Representatives of the Bureau of Health felt so keen an interest in the urgent, immediate necessity for it that they came before the committee early and the committee reported the bill early. On account of the recess and other matters this is the first opportunity we have had of securing the rule and its consideration. It is a matter of immediate necessity. The authorization is for only $250,000. The Committee on Appropriations felt correctly that they had no authority to allow it unless it was first authorized by our committee.

Mr. Perry, who was before the committee, says:

The war has thrown into the laboratory the entire control of the most important of the drugs made under license of the Federal Trade Commission. This refers to arsphenamine, better known under the old name of salvarsan. This drug is used in perfectly enormous quantities by the military forces and by the civil population. It is imperative that it be controlled by the most rigid laboratory tests. It would indeed be possible to devote all of the space of the laboratory to this work without giving it undue importance. It became necessary recently to transfer one branch of this work to a laboratory connected with a teaching institution in Chicago, as there was absolutely no space for the work at the Hygienic Laboratory. Important researches on nutritional diseases which are of the utmost importance at the present time have so little space that the work is seriously cramped. Without additional facilities it will not be practicable to continue giving instructions to State, municipal, and other health officers as has been the custom in the past. Probably no other laboratory in the country doing work of similar importance is so inadequately provided in the matter of space and buildings as is the Hygienic Laboratory. One but has to visit a few of the larger research institutions to realize how seriously handicapped the Government is in this respect. The building provided should be of fireproof construction and should conform in size and architectural features with the present building.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is all I desire to say at this time, and I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] one half an hour.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, we are all interested in this bill to conserve the health of our soldiers and citizens, but I want to discuss another proposition which would also conserve the health of our citizens, because it proposes a method whereby honorably discharged soldiers, seamen, and marines may acquire homes. I have introduced H. R. 13007, entitled "A bill to provide homes for soldiers, seamen, and marines." It proposes to create a commission called the soldiers and seamen's Federal home founding commission. This commission is to be supervised by the Secretary of the Interior and directed by a board consisting of the Secretary of the Interior and four other persons to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Evidently any plan that is practicable and feasible to provide means whereby our soldiers may acquire homes must contain three essentials: First, the loans must be made on long time at the option of the borrower; second, they must be made at a low rate of interest; and, third, they must be loaned in an amount approximating from 80 to 90 per cent of the value of the home.

How many of our soldiers, seamen, and marines are not the owners of homes, and, under present conditions, with our existing institutions, have no reasonable prospect of ever owning homes can not be definitely stated. We do know, however, that the census of 1910 showed that 54.2 per cent of the people in the United States were living in rented homes; that 37.2 of our farm homes were rented; and of homes other than farm homes, 61.6 per cent were rented. These statistics show that over one-half of our people are living in rented homes. Evidently one-half of the boys in our Army and Navy are sons of parents who are not home owners. Many of the parents who own homes are not able financially to give their sons homes. Probably 65 to 70 per cent of the men who now constitute our Army and Navy are not owners of homes. More than this, unless the Federal Government adopts some policy to aid them, by far the greater part of them never will own homes.

The plan which I propose does not contemplate the purchase and the gift of a home. It merely inaugurates a credit system by which our soldiers may purchase and pay for homes. A credit system to meet this purpose must have three essentials. First, a low rate of interest; second, a long term in which to pay; and, third, loans in an amount up to at least four-fifths the value of the property. An institution of this character would make it possible for any soldier to acquire title to a home either in the country or in the towns and cities.

The soldiers' and sailors' Federal home-founding commission, to be created by my bill, will loan money at 3 per cent per annum for a period of 60 years and in an amount up to 80 per cent of the value of the homestead, and in special cases up to 90 per cent. The principal is to be paid in small annual installments of one-half of 1 per cent per annum, with the privilege of paying all or any part of the loan at any interest payment. The plan which I have proposed does not require the Government to pay any part of the purchase price for any home. It does loan its credit, with a margin of from 10 to 20 per cent, to insure against losses. In addition to this, the borrowers are each required to pay a small annual fee into a "mutual aid fund" which will be amply sufficient to meet all losses sustained by occasional depreciation of property.

The commission will be an incorporated body with a capital stock of $50,000,000. The capital is to be furnished by the Government, but will be paid only as needed. Probably not half of the capital will ever be needed. The corporation is authorized to issue and sell bonds based upon the mortgages given by borrowers. The payment of these bonds shall be guaranteed by the Government. They are to be nontaxable and will be equivalent to a United States Government bond; in peace, a 3 per cent nontaxable Government bond, without the circulation privilege, sold at a premium. To-day, in war times, a 3½ per cent liberty bond, subject to the inheritance tax, sells above par. We may therefore assume that, through the sale of bonds based upon the mortgages and guaranteed by the Federal Government, loans can be made at 3 per cent interest per annum.

WHAT OTHER COUNTRIES HAVE DONE.

In adopting a plan we should study what other nations have done to provide homes for their citizens. Denmark has provided the means whereby any able-bodied citizen between the ages of 25 and 50 may secure a loan to purchase a rural homestead, on long time, at 3 per cent interest per annum and in an amount up to 90 per cent of the value of the homestead. The plan was adopted in 1899, and up to 1911 nearly 6,000 persons had availed themselves of the benefits of the act and the State had expended nearly $7,000,000 in its administration. In 1903 Norway established the Norwegian bank for laborers' holdings and dwellings and endowed it with a capital of $2,680,000. Any person whose assets are less than $402 may avail themselves of the use of this bank to purchase a home on long time at 3½ per cent interest.

In 1900 France created an institution, endowed it with $25,000,000 capital, to enable farm laborers to purchase homes at rates of interest ranging from 2½ to 3 per cent, depending upon the number of children the laborer had.

In 1908 England passed the small-holding and allotments act, under the terms of which, in England and Wales, the State may compel any individual to sell any land which he may own in excess of 50 acres, the land purchased to be used to provide homes for farmers and laborers. The purchaser is required to pay one-fifth of the price in cash. The act is administered through county authorities, and up to 1913 the counties had borrowed, for the purpose of carrying out the act, $12,250,000. Scotland has a similar act, under which landowners may be compelled to subdivide and lease their land in small holdings on terms prescribed by the land court.

In 1881, under the guidance of Gladstone, the Parliament passed the land-law act, appropriating $25,000,000 to aid Irish tenants to purchase land. Tenants were required to advance one-fifth of the purchase price. Ten years later the State authorized the issuing of guaranteed land stock, bearing 2¾ per cent interest per annum, in order to provide funds to carry out the act. In 1903 the Irish land act was passed creating the estimates commission and placing at its disposal $500,000,000 to be used in making loans to tenants, and in addition thereto appropriated $60,000,000 as a free grant to enable tenants to make the first payment on the purchase price of the land. Loans are paid by an annuity of 3½ per cent per annum, and the purchaser is allowed 68½ years in which to pay. In the main the plan adopted by England to enable the Irish tenants to become the owners and proprietors of their own homes is financed by the State guaranteeing the bonds issued and sold to secure funds necessary to carry out the provisions of the act.

IN LINE WITH LONG-ESTABLISHED POLICY.

I feel sure that every Senator and Representative in Congress, as well as every loyal and patriotic citizen, will heartily approve the object and purpose of this bill. It is clearly in line with the long-established policy of the Nation. On the 16th of September, 1776, two months and a half after the promulgation of the Declaration of Independence—indeed before we were a government and possessed public domain—Congress passed a resolution to grant bounty land to officers and soldiers who would enlist in the Army. In 1812, when enlistments were slow, in order to encourage enlistments, Congress promised to give to those who would enlist certain bounties in money and also 160 acres in land.

Our soldiers who fought in the Mexican War were granted lands, ranging in amount from 40 to 160 acres. Soldiers of the Civil War and of the Spanish-American War were granted special privileges in obtaining lands for a home under the United States homestead law. Under these various acts of Congress millions of acres of public land have been granted. Scores of thousands of soldiers, seamen, and marines have acquired homes. No one would now criticize these acts. No one would question the wisdom of their enactment. But we have provided homes for our soldiers in an entirely different line. Twenty-seven of the States of the Union have provided homes for their disabled soldiers. Millions of dollars have been spent in the erection of these homes, and in the care and support of needy and disabled soldiers. The Federal Government established the National Home for Disabled Volunteers, and established branches thereof in 10 different States. Here in the District of Columbia we have the United States Soldiers' Home built to provide homes for disabled soldiers of the Regular Army. In the erection of these homes, and in providing for the maintenance thereof, the Federal Government expended vast sums of money. No one questions the propriety of establishing these homes. No one believes the money appropriated to erect and maintain these homes has been wasted or unwisely expended. The American people have never complained about money expended which has been used to provide for the care, comfort, well-being, and happiness of the men who have fought their battles. Such is the attitude of the American people to-day. So it will always remain. It may therefore be said that it has always been the policy of the American Government to provide homes for its soldiers. That policy has continued for 142 years. We should not abandon it now when we have more homeless people in proportion to our population than we ever had before, and when the difficulties of acquiring a home were never so great.

PUBLIC LANDS EXHAUSTED.

The available public lands suitable for general farming purposes, and desirable for homes, have been practically exhausted. The Hon. Franklin K. Lane, the Secretary of the Interior, has suggested that through extensive irrigation works, the reclamation of swamp lands, and the utilization of cut-over timberlands, homes may be provided for a large number of our soldiers. Secretary Lane deserves great credit for the work he has initiated. His proposition deserves the most careful study and consideration. In my opinion, if his plan should be adopted, it will be the means of enabling thousands of soldiers to acquire homes who otherwise never could do so. The plan does not, however, entirely meet the situation. The irrigated lands, the swamp lands, and the cut-over timberlands, are remote from the bulk of our population. They are not within easy reach of the vast majority of the men who will constitute our Army and Navy when peace shall come. It will be wholly impracticable for the vast majority of these men to leave the States and communities wherein they have been born and reared and to go to another section of the country, perhaps more than a thousand miles away, to acquire homes. We should therefore seek other means which will enable every honorably discharged soldier, seaman, or marine to secure a home at the place of his choice.

FRIENDLY ATTITUDE OF CONGRESS.

The present Congress has manifested a most friendly attitude toward our soldiers. It has shown an earnest desire to contribute in every way possible to their safety, comfort, and welfare. It raised the pay of a private soldier from $15 to $30 per month. It passed the soldiers' and sailors' civil relief act to shield them from law suits, to preserve their property rights, and to protect their families. It enacted the compensation, allotment, and war-risk insurance act, the most wise, comprehensive, and liberal act of its kind ever enacted by any government. It passed the act known as the rehabilitation measure for the especial benefit of wounded and crippled soldiers, to enable them to become self-supporting, independent, useful, and happy citizens—an act which will be far reaching in its influence, contribute to the industrial strength of the Nation, and be a blessing to a class of soldiers and seamen whose sacrifices for their country will be surpassed only by those brave men who have died for it. All these acts have met my hearty approval. I have voted for them with genuine pleasure. The same may be said of all the Members of this House, for all these bill were passed practically without opposition. The American Congress should be commended for its splendid work along all these lines. But let us remember that $30 per month is nothing compared with the service our soldier boys are rendering. If it were a question only of dollars and cents, $300 per month would not be adequate pay for them. The soldiers' and sailors' civil relief act will benefit only comparatively few. The compensation act provides a pension only for those who are wounded or injured in body or health when in line of duty, and to their widows and orphans. The rehabilitation act applies only to those who have been severely wounded. Liberal, just, and magnanimous as are all of these acts, their benefits will reach far less than a majority of our soldiers, seamen, and marines who have done so much for their country and humanity. The service-pension act for the soldiers of the Civil War did not come for nearly half a century after Lee surrendered to Grant at Appomattox. It did not come until a large majority of the veterans of that war had passed to the Great Beyond. A service-pension act will come some day for those who fought in the war with Germany, but the day of its enactment may be long deferred. There is one thing more that this Congress should do. It should provide some means whereby every honorably discharged soldier, seaman, or marine may acquire a home. The proposition is practicable. It is wise, just, and patriotic. It is easily within the reach of the Government. It can be done without any extraordinary expenditure of money, and without the imposition of any undue burdens upon the taxpayers. The patriotic people of the United States will approve it. Congress should proceed to study the question, to adopt the most feasible and practicable means and to crystallize the proposition into law.

PUBLIC POLICY.

Regardless of the question of the service these men have rendered to the Nation, it should be the policy of this Nation to encourage the owning of homes. With more than half of our people homeless, living in rented property, the Government may well take into consideration by what means and by what methods homes may be provided for our citizens. We can do that as a wise public policy to add to the strength of the Nation. If this Nation is to stand in the future, if it is to continue to do the splendid work it is doing in the world to-day, our people must be attached to it. We can not expect men who are homeless, and who are living under conditions and circumstances where they are powerless to acquire homes, to make the best citizens or the best soldiers.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is making a very interesting speech and I know has given this subject careful consideration. I wonder, however, if he has considered whether this plan which he proposes might not be administered by some of the existing departments of the Government, rather than to create another commission or board.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; I have pretty thoroughly studied that. You can take our Federal land banks. They could administer the business in so far as farm homesteads are concerned, except for this reason. The loans in that system are supposed to be self-supporting and they are limited to 50 per cent of the value of the land and improvement. If a man wants to buy a home worth $4,000 he must have $2,000 before he can secure a loan. To provide soldiers with homes we must have a system that will be within the reach of all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does not the gentleman think that the criticisms which were originally made against the bill for the creation of the farm-loan system, that it would not enable the poor man to obtain a home, are now shown to be well taken; and now would it not be better, instead of creating a new commission and adding to all the numerous ones we already have, to extend the powers of the Federal Farm Land Board so that it could work in behalf of the poor man and enable the poor man to get a home?

Mr. MORGAN. I have thought about that. We might create a department in each land bank, to be operated separately and from the other, to make loans to the soldiers. The idea is that the soldier shall be given an advantage that the civilian shall not have. This advantage is given by reason of the service that he has rendered. Another difficulty is the land banks are not permitted to loan on town and city property.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That objection was made also at the same time and seemed to me to be a valid one, that the whole purpose, really, of the Federal Farm Land Board was in the wrong direction; and I think it has been shown, at least in my own district, to work in the wrong direction, because it has forced up the value of the land, making it harder for the poor man to get a home than otherwise, and at the same time there is no provision in it whereby a man who goes out of the Army or who for any other reason has no means in advance can obtain land or a home.

Mr. MORGAN. There is something in those suggestions. I would not be particular what institution you create. In preparing a bill you have to select some plan. Among other plans suggested to my mind were some of these, and on further consideration I might adopt another plan in preference to the one I have presented. But whatever instrumentality you adopt, you must provide loans at a low rate of interest; they must be long time, running up to 60 years, at the option of the borrower, and the amount of the loan must be up to 80 or 90 per cent of the value of the land; otherwise a poor man can not use it in acquiring a home.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit further, I am in sympathy with his project entirely, but as the gentleman well knows, we have boards and commissions galore now at high salaries, and the gentleman also well knows we are having difficulty in raising money to carry on this war, and, if possible, I would like to avoid the expense of an additional commission.

Mr. MORGAN. All those things are important, and, of course, will be considered before any action would be taken.

Mr. SLOAN. Would the gentleman be willing to delay the establishment of these commissions until our victorious boys return, so that they could stand some show of being members of these commissions?

Mr. MORGAN. I certainly would be in favor of giving the soldier boys places on the commission, or giving them anything else they want.

Mr. SLOAN. Can the gentleman speak for those in charge of the appointments of members of such commissions?

Mr. MORGAN. No; I have no authority to speak for anyone. I know that every Member of Congress is in sympathy with any reasonable plan that will do anything to add to the comfort and well-being and happiness of these boys when they return and as they live out their natural lives.

A HOME THE BEST PENSION.

Mr. Chairman, a home is the best pension a soldier can possess. It affords protection to the family, gives satisfaction, security, and contentment to the soldier, makes him a better citizen, and strengthens the very fabric of our Government. The best, wisest, and most practical way that a nation can show its gratitude to its soldiers is to provide them with homes. We now have over 3,000,000 men in our Army and Navy. We are calling 2,000,000 more. Nearly 2,000,000 of these men are now in France fighting the battles of humanity. Every month a quarter of a million more are being transported to France. Our hearts have been thrilled with the splendid manner in which our troops have acquitted themselves on foreign battle fields. Every American citizen is proud of the victories they have won. We can not find words to express our admiration for them. We feel now that there is absolutely nothing we would not willingly and gladly do to aid them, to lighten their burdens, to reduce the dangers to which they are exposed, to preserve their health, to protect them from wounds, and to save them from having to make the supreme sacrifice. They have shown that they are soldiers of the highest type. They have exhibited fighting qualities of the highest character. They have manifested courage and bravery never surpassed. The people everywhere throughout the land are praising their deeds and cheering their victories. All this is eminently fitting and proper. But words alone are not sufficient. The deepest gratitude is not expressed by the lips. Real, true, genuine gratitude to our soldiers will be shown by what we do for them. However great a debt we may owe at the close of war it will not equal the debt of gratitude we owe our soldiers. We will still be able to aid them in acquiring homes.

To provide these homes is a duty we owe them. Every citizen in this way should be glad to show his appreciation of what our soldier boys have done and his gratitude to them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion let me say that the best way to demonstrate our gratitude to our brave soldiers, seamen, and marines is to contribute the means whereby they can secure homes, homes in which they and their families may reside throughout the remainder of their lives, honored, respected, and loved by all the citizens of the Nation they have preserved and under the protection of a flag they have carried to a glorious victory. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, by the permission of the House I herewith have printed a copy of H. R. 13007, which I have introduced. It is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13007) to provide homes for soldiers, seamen, and marines, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the short title of this act shall be "The soldiers' and seamen's Federal home-founding act." Its administration shall be under the general supervision, direction, and control of the Secretary of the Interior.

DEFINITIONS.

SEC. 2. That whenever the term "first mortgage" is used in this act it shall be held to include such classes of first liens on farm lands or other real estate as shall be approved by the commission and the credit instruments secured thereby.

BENEFICIARIES.

SEC. 3. That every private soldier and officer who served in the Army of the United States during the war with Germany, or during any previous war of the United States, for 90 days, and who was honorably discharged (herein called a beneficiary), and every seaman, marine, and officer who served in the Navy of the United States or in the Marine Corps in the war with Germany, or in any previous war of the United States, for 90 days, and who was honorably discharged (herein called a beneficiary), shall be entitled to all the benefits of this act, subject to the terms, conditions, limitations, and restrictions herein provided.

WIDOWS AND MINOR ORPHAN CHILDREN.

SEC. 4. That in case of the death of any person who would be entitled to the benefits of this act, his widow, if unmarried, or in case of her death or marriage, then his minor orphan children, by guardian duly appointed, and officially accredited with the commission, shall be entitled to all the benefits of this act: Provided, That the guardian shall become personally liable and bound to meet the obligations of the said minor children until they shall have reached their majority: Provided further, That the said guardian shall have a first and prior lien on any interest said minor children may have in the homestead purchased for them under this act, for any advances in money or payments made by him in behalf of said minor children to the commission under this act.

NOT TRANSFERABLE.

SEC. 5. That the privileges granted under this act shall not be transferable or assignable, and no beneficiary shall sell or assign, convey, or transfer the land purchased or mortgaged under this act except on the payment in full of the amount due the commission, and any such attempted sale, transfer, or conveyance shall be null and void.

LOANS TO BENEFICIARIES.

SEC. 6. That every beneficiary, under the terms and conditions of this act, shall be entitled to obtain a loan from the commission to enable him to purchase a farm homestead of not exceeding 160 acres of land, or a farm homestead the appraised value of which does not exceed $4,000, or a homestead in a village, town, or city (herein called an urban homestead) the appraised value of which does not exceed $4,000. No beneficiary shall receive a loan for more than $3,200, and no loan shall be made for an amount which exceeds 80 per cent of the appraised value of the homestead, including improvements thereon: Provided, That any beneficiary who shows, to the satisfaction of the commission, that he is unable financially to purchase a homestead with a loan limited to 80 per cent of the appraised value thereof, shall be entitled to a loan not to exceed in amount 90 per cent of the appraised value of the homestead, including improvements thereon. All loans not in excess of 80 per cent of the appraised value of the homestead, including improvements thereon, shall be secured by a first mortgage. The amount loaned to any beneficiary in excess of 80 per cent of the appraised value of the homestead, including improvements, shall be secured by a second mortgage on such homestead and such other security, if any, which in the judgment of the commission the beneficiary may be able to furnish and which may be approved by the commission. Loans in amount not in excess of 80 per cent of the appraised value of the homestead shall run for a period of not more than 60 years, with the privilege to the beneficiary to pay any part or all of said loan at the time of any interest payment. Loans secured by second mortgages as herein provided shall run for a period of five years, payable in such installments and on such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the commission. Every beneficiary securing a loan on first mortgage shall pay an annual charge thereon sufficient to cover an interest rate of 3 per cent per annum, and a payment on the principal annually of not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent.

RESTRICTIONS OF LOANS.

SEC. 7. That the commission shall make loans on first mortgages only upon the following terms and conditions:

First. Said loans shall be secured by duly recorded first mortgages.

Second. Every such mortgage shall contain an agreement providing on an amortization plan by means of a fixed number of annual or semi-annual installments sufficient to cover, first, an interest of 3 per cent per annum, and, second, such an amount to be applied on the principal as will extinguish the debt within a period of not less than 60 years, not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent per annum.

Third. No loan on mortgages shall be made under this act at a rate of interest exceeding 3 per cent per annum, exclusive of amortization payment on the principal.

Fourth. Such loans may be made for the following purposes and for no other.

(a) To provide for the purchase of a farm homestead or an urban homestead.

(b) To provide for the purchase of implements and machinery and live stock necessary for the proper and reasonable operation of the farm homestead.

(c) To provide buildings and other permanent improvements on the land mortgaged, subject to rules and regulations, terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the commission.

Fifth. In case of the death of the mortgagor, his heir or heirs or his legal representative or representatives may assume the mortgage and the interest of the deceased according to the law of the State in which such land is located.

Sixth. Every applicant for loan shall make application therefor on a form to be prescribed for this purpose by the commission and furnish such reasonable information as shall be required.

Seventh. Every borrower shall pay simple interest on defaulted payments at the rate which the mortgage bears, and by express covenant in his mortgage shall undertake to pay when due all taxes, liens, judgments, or assessments which may be lawfully assessed against the land mortgaged. Taxes, liens, judgments, or assessments not paid when due and paid by the mortgagee shall become a part of the mortgage debt and shall bear simple interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum. Every mortgagor shall undertake to keep insured to the satisfaction of the commission all buildings the value of which was a factor in determining the amount of the loan. Insurance shall be made payable to the commission as its interest may appear at time of loss, and at the option of the commission sums so received may be used to pay for reconstruction of the buildings destroyed.

Eighth. Any beneficiary obtaining a loan shall furnish an abstract of title and shall pay legal fees and recording charges imposed by law in the State where the land to be mortgaged is located.

THE SOLDIERS' AND SEAMEN'S FEDERAL HOME-FOUNDING COMMISSION.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Interior and four additional persons (who shall be the directors first appointed as hereinafter provided) are hereby created a body corporate and politic in deed and in law by the name, style, and title of "The Soldiers' and Seamen's Federal Home-Founding Commission" (herein called the commission), and shall have perpetual succession, unless Congress shall otherwise provide. The principal office of the commission shall be located in the District of Columbia, but there may be agencies or branch offices established in any city or cities of the United States under rules and regulations prescribed by the board of directors.

CAPITAL STOCK.

SEC. 9. That the capital stock of the commission shall be $50,000,000, all of which shall be subscribed by the United States of America, and such subscription shall be subject to call upon the vote of three-fifths of the board of directors of the commission, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, at such time or times as may be deemed advisable; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose of making payment upon such subscription when and as called. Receipts for payments by the United States of America for or on account of such stock shall be issued by the commission to the Secretary of the Treasury and shall be evidence of stock ownership.

MANAGEMENT OF THE COMMISSION.

SEC. 10. That the management of the commission shall be vested in a board of directors, consisting of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall be chairman of the board, and four other persons, to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Each director, except the Secretary of the Interior, shall devote his time entirely to the business of the commission. Not more than two of said directors shall be of one political party, and all of them shall be citizens of the United States. Before entering upon his duties, each of the four directors so appointed and each officer shall take an oath faithfully to discharge the duties of his office.

The officers of the commission shall consist of a president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer. The directors to serve as such officers shall be designated and appointed by the President at the time such directors are appointed. Of the four directors so appointed the President of the United States shall designate two to serve for two years, and two for four years, and thereafter each director so appointed shall serve for four years. Whenever a vacancy shall occur among the directors so appointed, the person appointed director to fill any such vacancy shall hold office for the unexpired term of the member whose place he is selected to fill. Any director shall be subject to removal by the President of the United States. Three members of the board of directors shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The four directors of the commission appointed as herein provided shall each receive an annual salary, payable monthly, of $7,500.

COUNTY COMMISSION.

SEC. 11. That there is hereby established in each county or parish in each State of the United States a county soldiers' and seamen's home-founding commission (hereinafter called the county commission). Every county commission shall consist of the postmaster of the county seat of each county, the county agent of the Department of Agriculture in each county, and one other person, a resident of said county, to be appointed by the commission: Provided, That in any county having no county agent the commission shall appoint another person to be a member of the county commission. The members of the county commission shall receive and transmit applications for loans, act as appraisers of lands to be mortgaged, aid generally in the administration of this act, and perform such other duties in relation thereto as shall be prescribed by the commission, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. Members of the county commission shall receive such pay for actual services rendered as shall be prescribed by the commission, but members of said county commission are hereby prohibited from demanding or receiving any fee, pay, or compensation of any kind whatsoever from any beneficiary.

CITY COMMISSION.

SEC. 12. That in any incorporated city having a population in excess of 20,000 the commission in its discretion may appoint a soldiers' and seamen's city home-founding commission (hereinafter called the city commission), consisting of three persons who are residents of the city for which they shall be appointed. Every city commission shall act for the commission within the limits of the city for which they are appointed in like manner as county commissions, and the members thereof shall receive such compensation from the commission as shall be prescribed by it, and are hereby prohibited from demanding or receiving any fee, pay, or compensation of any kind whatsover from any beneficiary.

OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

SEC. 13. That the commission, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be authorized and empowered to appoint and employ such inspectors, appraisers, attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as it may deem necessary to conduct the business of the commission. The salaries of all such employees, together with the salaries of the directors, shall be paid by the United States, and all such appointees and employees shall be public officials or employees of the United States. During the first year after the organization of the commission said appointees and employees shall be appointed without regard to the provision of the act of January 16, 1883 (vol. 22, U. S. Stats. L., p. 403), and amendments thereto, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance thereof: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the President at any time from placing said employees and appointees in the classified service.

REPORTS.

SEC. 14. That the commission shall annually make a full report of its operations to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall cause the same to be printed for the information of Congress.

MAY ISSUE BONDS.

SEC. 15. That the commission, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may issue and sell bonds for the purpose of obtaining funds with which to make the loans authorized in this act. Said bonds shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 3 per cent per annum. Said bonds shall be issued on such terms and conditions and shall be payable at such time or times as shall be prescribed by the commission, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. The total amount of bonds to be issued by the commission shall at no time exceed the total amount of first mortgages held and owned by the commission. Such bonds shall have a first and paramount floating charge on all the assets of the commission, and the commission shall not at any time mortgage or pledge any of its assets.

The United States of America hereby guarantees the payment when due of both principal and interest of any bond or bonds issued by the commission under the provisions of this act.

FORM OF BONDS.

SEC. 16. That bonds provided for in this act shall be issued in denominations of $25, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000; they shall run for a specified minimum and maximum period, subject to payment and retirement, at the option of the commission, at any time after five years from the date of their issue. They shall have interest coupons attached, payable semiannually, and shall be issued in series of not less than $1,000,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to prepare suitable bonds in such form, subject to the provisions of this act, as the Secretary of the Interior may approve, such bonds when prepared to be held in the Treasury subject to delivery upon the order of the commission. The engraved plates, dies, bed pieces, etc., executed in connection therewith shall remain in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury. Any expenses incurred in the preparation, custody, and delivery of such bonds shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. They may be exchanged into registered bonds of any amount and reexchanged into coupon bonds at the option of the holder, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commission.

That the commission shall be bound in all respects by the acts of its officers in signing and issuing bonds and by the acts of the commission in authorizing their issue.

EXEMPT FROM TAXATION.

SEC. 17. That any and all bonds issued by the commission shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or by any local taxing authority. The commission, including its franchise and the capital and reserve or surplus thereof and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or by any local taxing authority, except that any real property of the commission shall be subject to State, county, or municipal taxes to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

PAYMENTS ON INTEREST AND PRINCIPAL.

SEC. 18. That interest payments on first mortgages shall be available for the payments of coupons and the interest on bonds as they shall become due.

Amortization and other payments on the principal of first mortgages shall constitute a trust fund in the hands of the commission and shall be applied or employed as follows:

(a) To pay off bonds issued by the commission as they mature.

(b) To purchase at or below par bonds issued by the commission.

(c) To loan on first mortgages on a farm homestead or an urban homestead, as provided in this act.

(d) To purchase United States Government bonds.

PURCHASE OF BONDS BY GOVERNMENT.

SEC. 19. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon the application of the commission, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, purchase from the commission its bonds issued under this act in an amount not to exceed $25,000,000 during any one year, and shall pay for the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall have purchased any such bonds, he may hold the same until maturity or may sell the same at his discretion.

INVESTMENT IN BONDS.

SEC. 20. That bonds issued under the provisions of this act shall be a lawful investment for all fiduciary and trust funds, and may be accepted as security for all public deposits.

Any Federal reserve bank and any member bank of the Federal Reserve System may buy and sell bonds issued under this act to the same extent that it may buy and sell United States Government bonds.

EARNINGS AND RESERVE FUND.

SEC. 21. That all net earnings of the commission shall become a part of its capital unless Congress shall otherwise provide, and the commission may use any part of its capital to meet any of its financial obligations.

BEQUESTS AND GIFTS.

SEC. 22. That the commission is hereby authorized and empowered to accept and receive gifts and donations, by bequest or otherwise, to be used exclusively for the benefit of beneficiaries who are unable financially to purchase homes under the general provisions of this act, and to aid such beneficiaries in erecting and constructing improvements thereon, and in purchasing equipment and live stock reasonably necessary in conducting the business of farming. The funds received under this section shall be used only for the purpose of making loans for such periods of time, upon such terms and conditions, upon such security, and at such rate or rates of interest as shall be prescribed by the commission.

MUTUAL PROTECTIVE FUND.

SEC. 23. That every beneficiary purchasing a homestead under the provisions of this act shall pay to the commission annually until his loan shall be paid in full, a fee of $2, which shall be set aside as a separate fund, to be known and designated as the "beneficiaries' mutual aid fund," which shall be a trust fund, under the management and control of the commission, by which and through which beneficiaries may render mutual aid and assistance to each other. The fund shall be used by the commission to aid deserving beneficiaries to purchase a homestead, who are unable by reason of lack of means or credit, sickness, physical injuries, or any other justifiable cause, to purchase a homestead under the general terms and provisions of this act, and to pay the interest or amortization charge on any mortgage due from any beneficiary, who by reason of sickness, physical injuries, or some misfortune, is unable to meet such payments. The commission shall be authorized and empowered to suspend the payment of the foregoing fee, or any part thereof, at any time that said fund shall be deemed large enough to meet the purposes for which it shall be created.

DEPOSITORIES.

SEC. 24. That prior to commencing business the commission, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, shall select one or more Federal reserve banks or one or more member banks of the Federal Reserve System or one or more State banks, including trust companies and savings banks, as a depository or depositories in which the commission shall daily deposit all its funds of every kind and character, and no part or portion of such funds shall be withdrawn from such depository or depositories except on check or order duly signed by the treasurer of such commission and countersigned by the president. The commission shall require from any depository or depositories such security as may be agreed upon and as may, in the judgment of the commission, be sufficient to insure the safety thereof. Interest on such deposits shall be paid at such rate as shall be approved by the commission.

BANKS AUTHORIZED AGENCIES.

SEC. 25. That all member banks of the Federal Reserve System and all State banks, including trust companies and savings banks, and Federal reserve banks and Federal land banks are hereby authorized to act as the agents of the commission in the payment of the proceeds of any loan to beneficiaries, in collecting payments on mortgages, in selling bonds issued under the provisions of this act, and to do such other acts as shall be specifically authorized by the commission, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

PURCHASE AND SUBDIVISION OF LANDS.

SEC. 26. That the commission, from time to time, may use not to exceed 5 per cent of its capital as a revolving fund in the purchase of land to be subdivided into farm homesteads of not less than 10 nor more than 80 acres each, or in the purchase of land within, adjacent to, or near a town or city suitable for residence purposes, to be subdivided and platted into urban homesteads. The commission may sell and convey any homestead so acquired to any beneficiary and erect for him thereon a house and other improvements, suitable for residence purposes. Before erecting a building or other improvements under the foregoing provisions the beneficiary shall execute and deliver to the commission a first mortgage on the purchased premises covering the purchase price of the homestead and the cost of the buildings, and other improvements, less 20 per cent thereof, which amount shall be paid in cash by the beneficiary. When the loan is finally closed the funds used shall be charged to the general loan fund, and when paid shall be restored to or credited to the revolving fund provided in this section.

PENALTIES.

SEC. 27. That any applicant for a loan under this act who shall knowingly make any false statement in his application for such loan, and any member of a loan committee or any appraiser provided for in this act who shall willfully overvalue any land offered as security for loans under this act, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

Any person who shall falsely make, forge, or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited, or willingly aid or assist in falsely making, forging, or counterfeiting any bond, coupon, or paper in imitation of, or purporting to be in imitation of, the bonds or coupons issued by the commission; or any person who shall pass, utter, or publish, or attempt to pass, utter, or publish any false, forged, or counterfeited bond, coupon, or paper purporting to be issued by the commission, knowing the same to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited; or whoever shall falsely alter, or cause or procure to be falsely altered, or shall willingly aid or assist in falsely altering any such bond, coupon, or paper, or shall pass, utter, or publish as true any falsely altered or spurious bond, coupon, or paper issued, or purporting to have been issued, by such commission, knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both.

Other than the usual salary or fee paid to any officer, director, or employee of the commission, no officer, director, attorney, or employee of the commission shall receive, directly or indirectly, any fee, commission, gift, or other consideration for or in connection with any transaction or business of such commission. The commission shall not charge or receive any fee, commission, bonus, gift, or other consideration not herein specifically authorized. Any person violating any provision of this paragraph shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

Any person connected in any capacity with the commission, who embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, or credits thereof, or who without authority from the directors draws any order, assigns any note, bond, draft, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof, or who makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of such commission with intent in either case to defraud such commission or any other company, body politic or corporate, or any individual person, and every person who with like intent aids or abets any officer, clerk, or agent in any violation of this section, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both.

ORGANIZATION EXPENSES.

SEC. 28. That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, including the rent and equipment of necessary offices.

LIMITATION OF COURT DECISIONS.

SEC. 29. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this act, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

REPEALING CLAUSE.

SEC. 30. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect upon its passage. The right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, being, as I am, very deeply interested, as I feel other Members of the House are, in the question of the conservation of the public health of the country, I shall, of course, support very heartily the proposed bill. In my judgment there is no activity of the Federal Government that, in proportion to the number of men employed and the amount of money appropriated for its activities, has performed a more magnificent public service for the last 25 years than the Public Health Service of our country. I think that the problem of the protection of the public health of the country through the assistance and aid of the Federal Government has been one that has been sadly neglected. I believe that in view of its importance, in view not only of its humanitarian aspects but of its economic value, that we should establish a great department of health as a Cabinet position. It is estimated that possibly 1,000,000 human lives are sacrificed in the United States every year by absolutely preventable human diseases, a loss in human life that could be in a large measure saved by proper information and intelligence upon the part of the people who do not know the preventive remedies that might have availed to keep them alive. In addition to that it is estimated that the economic loss in dollars and cents on account of sickness and death caused by preventable human diseases amounts to the staggering total in this country of $3,000,000,000 a year. When we think of what has been accomplished along the line of medical research the last 25 years and when we consider the great plagues that sometimes ravage different sections of our country that have been absolutely, we might say, eliminated by medical research work carried on by the Public Health Service, I feel that all Members will agree with me in the tribute I have attempted to pay to the value of that bureau. For typhoid fever, which carried off thousands and tens of thousands of people in the country heretofore every year, a specific remedy has been found, an absolute preventive almost, and the same thing applies to smallpox, diphtheria, malaria, its attendant diseases, and the bubonic plague and other great human diseases that have so often ravaged and devastated sections of our country. So I say that in view of the great importance from a humanitarian and economic aspect the value of conserving human life and attending problems certainly, after these great war-emergency measures are passed, should receive the thoughtful and earnest attention of the Congress of the United States and that a large measure of appropriation and of coordination of the different branches of the medical service of the United States should be provided. And, in this connection, Mr. Chairman, it just occurred to me that in a very few weeks, on account of reaching the age limit, the great Surgeon General of the United States, Gen. William C. Gorgas, will be retired from his present position. I want to say that the people of my native State of Alabama took a great pride in the achievements of that great medical man. His usefulness not only reflects itself in the gratitude of the people of Alabama, but the people of the United States and of foreign countries are under everlasting obligations to that man, whose genius and skill have accomplished so much in the conservation of human life.

As was suggested a few moments ago, he made it possible by the sanitation that he perfected in the Panama Canal Zone to make that great interoceanic canal a reality, and inasmuch as it is largely conceded it was a dream of that great old Alabaman. Senator John T. Morgan, to construct that canal, in just as large measure Gen. Gorgas played a part in the fruition of that enterprise. [Applause.] I feel sure that the Government itself, that the Members of Congress and those who are familiar with his service, will regret the retirement from his present official position of Gen. William C. Gorgas, Surgeon General. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on this subject of public health.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy all of the time remaining and shall only take a moment or two. This measure, with the committee amendment which has been referred to, was unanimously reported by the committee of which I am a member. That report was made more than three months ago, and I do not fully recall all of the arguments presented to us that led to this unanimous report, but I do recall that at the time I thought it wise and necessary. I wish heartily to concur in the splendid tribute which my friend from Alabama, Mr. BANKHEAD, has paid to Gen. Gorgas, whose personal friendship I have had the honor to possess for many years. His marvelous scientific equipment and achievements, as well as his courteous and manly demeanor and kindness of heart, have endeared him to us all. I also indorse every word that my friend has said about the importance of the Public Health Service. I wish to add, however, that I am in full sympathy with the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and other gentlemen regarding the advisability of locating some of these buildings outside of the city of Washington. I would like to see some of them in Kentucky. I will say, further, that in view of the enormous expenditures that this elaborate building program involves I think there ought to be some legislative safeguards, some greater measures of protection to the Government, in the expenditure of this money than have thus far been provided, and hereafter I propose as a member of that committee to offer some suggestions in that direction and seek to have them adopted. That is all I care to say. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I have no other requests for time, and, after speaking a few minutes myself, I shall ask that the bill be read for amendment.

In addition to what my colleague from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has said about Gen. Gorgas, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there is another great Alabaman that stands perhaps second to him in rank and ability in the Surgeon General's office, and that is Gen. Noble, of Anniston, Ala., who was with Gen. Gorgas all through his wonderful career in Panama. Alabamans had hoped that when Gen. Gorgas retired Gen. Noble would be promoted to the position of Surgeon General. The press carries a report, however, that perhaps another great surgeon, who is now in France, will probably be transferred to this great work on this side, and that Gen. Noble will be assigned to the duties now being performed by that other great surgeon, Gen. Ireland.

I desire to say that those of us who know Gen. Noble believe that there can be no more efficient man assigned to either one of the duties. I know him; I know his family; I know his ancestry, and I believe that to whatever field of operation he may be assigned he will perform the work with the same efficiency that has accompanied every work that he has been assigned to by the Government since he has been in its service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, unless some other gentleman desires to make further remarks, I will ask that the bill be read for amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, including the copy of a bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract for the construction of an additional building for laboratory purposes and research work and for enlarging and remodeling the present animal house connected with the Hygienic Laboratory, Public Health Service, Washington, D. C., at a limit of cost of $250,000.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

"In carrying the foregoing authorization for additional buildings to the Hygienic Laboratory into effect, the Secretary of the Treasury may enter into contracts or purchase materials in the open market, or otherwise, and employ laborers and mechanics for executing the work as in his judgment may best meet the public exigencies, within the limits of the authorization herein made."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the committee amendment. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], who has this matter in charge, what the necessity for this amendment is? It would seem that its purpose is to make this authorization free from some requirements of existing law. What is the necessity for having the safeguards that have been put upon contracts of this character let down in this instance?

Mr. BURNETT. The amendment says:

In carrying the foregoing authorization for additional buildings to the Hygienic Laboratory into effect the Secretary of the Treasury may enter into contracts or purchase materials in the open market, or otherwise, and employ laborers and mechanics for executing the work as in his judgment may best meet the public exigencies, within the limits of the authorization herein made.

The committee thought the very emergency, the very exigency authorized that amendment. And, in the next place, in due course it would have to be constructed by the Supervising Architect's Office. I think that is the rule, unless there is something of this kind authorized. I want to state to the gentleman that the experience of the committee heretofore with the Supervising Architect's Office has been that they were not very expeditious. Their force has been depleted by the draft, and even now they have all they can well do. And this being a matter that needed immediate attention, we felt that there should be some power of this kind given to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Alabama for the explanation, but I certainly can not agree with the conclusion that the committee has reached in this instance. It might have been a good reason on the 17th of June, when this measure was reported, but the emergency was not so great but what since that time Congress took a recess and permitted the bill to rest in security upon the calendar.

Now, the other reason about the Supervising Architect's Office not being very expeditious, I will agree that when we have been engaged on a large public-building program the Supervising Architect's Office has moved carefully, and as a result sometimes slowly. We have, as I understand it now, no Supervising Architect. The duties of that office are performed by the executive officer, Mr. Wetmore, who is a most efficient administrator. I should not think, with the absence of a large public-building program during this war period, that there is any real need for taking this out of the jurisdiction of the Architect's Office.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the original bill required the Secretary to contract for the construction of this laboratory. Now, the amendment simply gives him the opportunity to build it himself if he wants to do so, to go into the open market, buy the materials, and employ labor. So the committee thought, in addition to what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] has said, that the Government ought not to be at the mercy of the contractors. We wanted to leave it so that if bids were received that were not fair and reasonable, or anything else occurred to make it advisable, the Secretary could build it himself with his own forces or by the employing of forces. That is what the amendment does. It simply gives him a wider scope, gives him the opportunity to contract for or purchase materials and employ labor and build it themselves if they want to do it.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that is an entirely different reason from that stated heretofore. If that is the true purpose, I doubt if this amendment is in exactly proper form, although it may carry out that intention.

Does the gentleman from Florida, the chairman of this committee, think that if the Secretary undertakes to construct this building with his own force and purchase materials, the Government will be able to do it within the limit of $250,000?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, the gentleman is in just as good a position to give information on that subject as I am and perhaps better. But I do say this——

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman's experience as chairman of his committee would be valuable.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think this, that the Government officials ought not to be limited to the building of it by contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more, in order that the gentleman may answer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. There may be some advantages in the Government building it. It may be that the Government can procure labor and material where a private contractor could not.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state whether or not this is the initial step in the inauguration of a new policy, whereby hereafter all public buildings may be erected by the Government itself rather than by letting them out to contract—buildings such as courthouses and post offices?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, I will state to the gentleman that the committee has never considered the establishment of a general policy in that regard. We have reported this bill that way, and I think the one following; in fact, I am very sure it has a similar provision—the bill for the proposed tubercular hospital in Kentucky. So far as I am concerned, as one member of the committee, it strikes me as being a very fair provision, a very reasonable one, and I would be in favor of adopting it as a policy and leaving it open.

Mr. WALSH. Then, that particular phase of this legislation is not wholly due to the war conditions?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. How is that?

Mr. WALSH. I say this particular phase is not wholly due to war conditions; that is, giving the Secretary the option?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The urgent need of more room and the desire to get it finished as speedily as possible, and the fact that the Government can secure materials and their delivery when private persons might not be able to do it—all those considerations together induced the committee to adopt that policy.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I hope the officials of the Government have not forgotten the experience the Government had in building the Post Office Department building, on the Avenue down here, occupied by the Postmaster General.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I think it is an ill-advised time for the Government to go into the business of erecting buildings by contracting for the labor and the materials direct. Anyone acquainted in the slightest degree with the building industry throughout the country must know that there is a dearth in the line of building and that many contractors in the past who have given exclusive attention to the construction of public buildings are altogether without work, and because of that condition this is a most opportune time for the Government to secure very reasonable bids for the construction of a building like this. We should not, in my opinion, as a business policy, authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to construct this building by the employment of labor and the purchase of materials for that purpose. He has in times past, when there has not been much competition among these contractors, awarded contracts without any complaint of excess charges; and yet to-day, with these contractors all over the country looking for business, you propose to authorize him to go into the field himself and build this building alone. It will result, as any person acquainted with business methods must know, in higher cost to the Government. It will result in delay.

One of the pressing arguments in favor of this bill is its exigency, the need of it at the present time. It was recommended by the Public Health officials as far back as 1913 and refused them then, and at this time it is brought up for consideration because of the enlarged work thrown upon the bureau by reason of war conditions. Certainly you do not wish to change the conditions now, when there are plenty of contractors ready and willing to do this work, which you did not impose when they were few. For instance, take all these temporary buildings that were erected under stress conditions down on the Mall and in Potomac Park. None of them was erected by the Government direct.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit, the different departments, the War Department particularly, have erected nearly all the buildings that they are occupying.

Mr. STAFFORD. Any person who has gone down on the Mall during the erection of the temporary structures, or in Henry Park, would have seen signs, and you will see signs there to-day, or would have just before those new buildings were completed, bearing the inscription, "Erected by So-and-so, contractor." Go down to Potomac Park and you will see—although those buildings were constructed under the immediate supervision of the Navy Department—that they were erected by private contractors. The buildings erected under the Housing Commission on the Plaza this side of the Union Station are being erected by private contractors. Not a temporary office building that has been erected since we went into war has been erected except by private contractors.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state to the gentleman that we authorized some $8,000,000 to build temporary office buildings for the War Department and the Navy Department. The war Department, I think, used about $3,000,000 of it. Those were all built by the War Department itself.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will have to take issue with the gentleman as to those buildings. Those buildings were erected by the George A. Fuller Co., of New York, which has branches all over the country. Those buildings at Henry Park and the other additional buildings have been erected by private contractors. I have seen their names posted in front of the buildings.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman may be right about that, but——

Mr. STAFFORD. There has not been a building erected by the War Department or the Navy Department by the employment of agencies direct, except through private contractors.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I shall get the information in a very few minutes. I think the gentleman is wrong about the War Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be very glad to be corrected, because with my own eyes I have seen those signs time and time again.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not doubt that, but I still think the gentleman is mistaken. I will try to get the accurate information.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, if that is the condition, that we have heretofore employed contractors, and if there are plenty of private contractors——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I have three minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. If there are plenty of private contractors looking for building contracts, why should we now adopt this new policy of authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Supervising Architect's office—because we all know the Secretary of the Treasury himself will not direct this work—to go into the field and construct these buildings by the purchase of materials and the employment of labor?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I notice in line 1, page 2, "the Secretary of the Treasury may," and so forth. Will the gentleman state what the custom is now, whether the Supervising Architect is the one who lets the contract?

Mr. STAFFORD. The Supervising Architect has full control of contracts. I am emphasizing the fact that the conditions do not demand this departure from the past policy, and the contractors throughout the country are looking for work in such great numbers that there can not be any valid reason why we should authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to employ men direct and purchase materials direct. It will result in delay. It will result in increased cost.

Mr. KNUTSON. It was claimed awhile ago that he was on the verge of nervous prostration. What is the use of putting this additional work on him?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not going to enter into the political side of it. We all know that he is a much burdened man, and very busy, and even if we did adopt this authorization we know that the Secretary of the Treasury would not supervise it but that it would be under the Supervising Architect's Office.

Mr. FOSTER. It always has been, and every Secretary of the Treasury has done that.

Mr. STAFFORD. It always has been. Of course the Supervising Architect is under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Now, there can not be any argument presented here for the making of an exception in these times when contractors are looking so generally for Government work. We will get better bids and quicker work, and the work will be much more satisfactory if the old method of contracting is followed.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I hope the gentleman in charge of this bill will withdraw the committee amendment. I do not believe it is necessary to change the existing law with regard to letting contracts for erecting buildings of this kind. I have no doubt that it is necessary to give the Public Health Service some additional facilities for carrying on the work that has been thrown upon this branch of the service. But, Mr. Chairman, if we want to read a chapter of history that smells to high heaven, reeking with extravagance, waste, and favoritism, if not with fraud itself, we have but to read the record of the construction of some of these buildings during war time under the cost-plus system. Go down here toward the Union Station, where we are building these houses, and see the men loafing. Go down here on the Mall where we have been constructing some buildings on the cost-plus plan. Some days ago I was shown the extracts from pay rolls of one of the buildings that is being constructed on a cost-plus basis. A man ties the metal laths with a little wire that projects out of the concrete. You or I or any of us could learn to do that work in 10 minutes. Those men are employed by a cost-plus contractor. I never saw men work so slowly in my life as do employees on cost-plus jobs. On Sunday they receive $19 a day for that service. Look at the pay roll and you will find that every man is there on Sunday, but on Monday scarcely anybody appears on that pay roll. Along toward the latter part of the week they are all there again, and on Sunday the gang is all here. They are all there on Sunday, and by changing the law, as is proposed by this amendment, you authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to let these contracts on a cost-plus or any other basis. The proposed plan destroys all competition. At a time when we are appealing to all the people and to the patriotism of Americans everywhere to buy bonds, it is all wrong to do this sort of thing, and to commit this great waste of money, no matter how laudable the purpose or how great the need for this building may be. I am for the building, but I am for economy in the construction of it, and you will get economy only if you authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to let these bids open to everybody, and eliminate favoritism, and create competition, so that the contractors from your district and mine can come here and bid on the construction of these buildings. Why, it is to the interest of these contractors down here to pay $20 or $25 a day for work that they ought to get done for less than $5 a day. If the contractor pays $20 a day and he has a cost-plus contract of 7 per cent, he gets $1.40 profit a day on every man so employed, but if he pays only $5 a day he gets only 35 cents profit on every man. So, under the cost-plus system of building Government buildings, costs have mounted up sky-high. The net result of adopting the cost-plus system is that we are paying no attention to economy, no attention to saving the people's money in the building of these buildings that are desired and necessary. I hope the chairman of the committee who brings out this bill with so many good things in it will agree to the elimination of a thing that is absolutely wrong, and which every Member of this House knows to be wrong. We ought not to consent to it. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I understand from the gentleman who introduced this bill that this amendment presents an alternative proposition to the Secretary of the Treasury, that he may advertise for bids as the law directs for all contracts. The amendment offered provides that if in his judgment he can get the building in quicker time and for less money, he may employ hands and build the building under the architect to be selected. The amendment does not mean that the Secretary of the Treasury would necessarily pursue that course. It simply gives him the authority to do that. Of course, it is to be hoped that if the Secretary of the Treasury does undertake to build it, he will adopt a policy whereby he will employ hands and let the architect do the supervising, rather than a 10 per cent-plus system; because I believe that not only has Congress gotten quite enough of the 10 per cent-plus system but I am inclined to believe that the country has got about enough of it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Under the wording of this bill there can not be a contract let under the 10 per cent plus or any other per cent plus system.

Mr. GOOD. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. SISSON. I believe the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] is correct about that.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Because the law provides how the contract shall be let.

Mr. GOOD. But it changes existing law.

Mr. SISSON. I have the floor and I decline to yield further, Mr. Chairman. I may be wrong in my view of this thing, and if I am I hope the chairman of the committee will correct me; but as I understand it, if the Secretary of the Treasury lets the contract under the regular law, he must let it in accordance with all the provisions of the law by advertising and so on. Now, this proviso does not give him the right to let it out to a contractor at 10 per cent plus. He can not let it out to a contractor unless he lets it under existing law. If he builds it under the proviso, he has got to build it by hiring the hands and putting a man to supervise the job, and that man will be paid a salary. It will all be done directly under him, and there will be no contract intervening between the Government and the completed building.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman given full weight to these words found in line 2, page 2?

In carrying the foregoing authorization into effect, the Secretary of the Treasury may enter into contracts or purchase materials in the open market or otherwise.

The "or otherwise" would allow him to enter into a cost-plus contract.

The word "otherwise" would allow him by direct language to enter into a cost-plus contract.

Mr. SISSON. I may be mistaken in the construction of the following language, but I will say that I think that applies to the purchase of material.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; because there is no comma—"may enter into contracts or purchase material in the open market or otherwise." That is the broadest authority that can be conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury. That language would enable him to enter into a contract on a cost-plus basis.

Mr. SISSON. I had the amendment as printed in the report. I do not think it is punctuated in the report as it is in the bill; but I believe that a fair construction would be that he may enter into a contract to purchase material in the market, or otherwise; that that applies to material and the employment of labor and mechanics. He may buy material in the open market and he may employ mechanics for the purpose of executing the work as in his judgment may best meet the public exigency.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will not the gentleman admit that that is a forced construction; that you are not giving any effect to the words "or otherwise"?

Mr. GOOD. How will he employ the labor—by the day; pay the current wage? No; he can say, "You bring your force here and I will pay that labor $10 a day and the bonus." Where is there anything in this to prevent that?

Mr. SISSON. I believe the construction my friend places upon it is rather a strained construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, if this gave the Secretary the right to buy materials and employ labor, and that was all, I see no serious objection to it. I agree with my friend from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and I also agree with my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that we ought not to permit any more of these 10 per cent cost-plus contracts. I think that has done enough to discourage the labor market of this country. I think when they let a contract, saying to a man, "We will give you 10 per cent on the cost of the job," the contractor will make the most money where he takes a 10 per cent cost-plus job by making it cost the Government as much as he can. I think it is bad, but I do not believe the language in this bill is susceptible of that construction. At any rate, if the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], who introduced the bill, and the committee say that Congress did not intend to authorize any 10 per cent cost-plus contract, I do not believe they will put a strained construction on it and do what Congress says it did not intend should be done. I think the language might be improved so as to exclude the cost-plus contract.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] is mistaken in regard to his construction of this language. I admit the language is not clear, but the words "or otherwise" can not be limited to the purchase of material in the open market alone. It would be necessary to use some qualifying words that would apply directly to the open market in order to give it that construction. The words "or otherwise" would apply to all that had preceded it under the construction that would be usually placed upon such a form of awards. That would give the Secretary of the Treasury an absolute right to make any sort of contract he saw fit regarding the erection of the building. What follows also is not by any means a qualification. It gives the Secretary of the Treasury power to employ labor in any manner and upon any terms he may desire.

I ask the attention of the committee to this fact, which is within the knowledge of every member of the committee: Very many of the contracts that have been let in Washington and those that have been let in the Government operations near Washington are almost completed. If there was any justification for doing away with the safeguards that we all admit are necessary in order to protect the Government against imposition, if there was any reason why those should not be in existence before, certainly they do not exist now.

There will be, if this contract is put up for bids, plenty of bidders. There are many men here now in Washington to get jobs; they have the laborers on hand, they could at once enter on the construction of the buildings. There is no possible reason at this time for any extraordinary means being used.

Now, gentlemen, if we do not do our part as we know now there will be enormous loss to the Government by extravagant waste. We can not relieve ourselves from responsibility by throwing upon these overcrowded departments and upon these overworked superintendents the duty of protecting the Government. It is our duty to protect the Government by proper legal safeguards contained in provisions of the bill; and in view of all this, in justice to the committee itself, we ought not to put this open invitation to the people who have this work and say, "It does not make any difference what kind of a contract you make, the Government gives you a free hand, do as you please, get rid of it in the easiest manner possible." We should say, "We expect you under these circumstances to protect the Government under the law." It should be clear to all of us that the amendment reported by the committee ought to go out of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I suppose debate is exhausted, but I would like four or five minutes myself, and I would like to see if we can not agree upon a limit to debate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like five minutes. I want to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. I want two minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment be closed in 12 minutes, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] to have five minutes and the gentleman from Alabama two minutes and I five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to have the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] proceed first.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no objection to the gentleman's request. I was merely in consultation with some of my colleagues here who think it better to strike out the amendment than to undertake to improve it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If that is all, I shall go ahead. Does the gentleman want his five minutes, anyway?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; I would like to have them in any event.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped, in the first place, that the chairman of the committee would withdraw this amendment entirely. In the event he would not, I had then prepared a brief amendment to the amendment providing that under it no contract should be let under the cost-plus system; but upon reflection I agree with my colleagues here on this side, who are unanimous upon that point, that instead of amending this amendment, which even after the amendment I had in mind would be vicious indeed, that this amendment ought to be stricken out entirely. As the amendment now stands it presents two alternatives, under either of which the discretion of the Secretary is practically unlimited. The first is with reference to the letting of the contracts, which provides that he may "enter into contracts * * * as in his judgment shall best meet the public exigencies," and so forth. There is also an alternative provision with reference to constructing a building through the direct employment of labor and the purchase of materials. Under the first alternative contracts can be let under the cost-plus plan. Under the second any price can be paid for labor and material.

Mr. Chairman, we have had scandals enough with reference to the construction of these public buildings. At the time when these buildings that are being constructed to the north of the Capitol were proposed I predicted that under the unlimited authority that was given under the bill then before the House just such conditions would arise and similar scandals develop as my colleague [Mr. GOOD] has been calling to the attention of the committee. It is inevitable if you put out this money in this way in lump sums to be expended upon any kind of contract that it will not be spent for the best interest of the public but that graft and corruption will creep in, as it has done.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would not a consequence of this authorization be that the Secretary of the Treasury could go ahead with this work and launch a project and then come back to Congress under the piecemeal provision and say that he did not have enough money, whereas if you state that your building is to be erected at a cost of $250,000, no contract can be let unless the figure is within that amount?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman's objection is well taken. I had thought that after that riot of corruption, that carnival of debauchery——

Mr. CLARK of Florida arose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. At Hog Island——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I was just going to ask the gentleman to specify. I thought he ought to be more definite.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was about to specify. It occurred at Hog Island, as the gentleman ought to know at this time. My colleague, Mr. GOOD, has given an example, and has referred the gentleman to instances that have occurred in the city of Washington. It has occurred in reference to the aeroplane construction and in many other places, because we made these lump-sum appropriations and authorized the money to be spent in any form whatever. The Hog Island scandal is something that fairly smelled to heaven with corruption and graft, but after that occurrence the House still went on with these housing bills, still authorizing cost-plus contracts, except in one of the housing bills, where I did succeed in getting an amendment placed upon it prohibiting this form of contract, and the other day the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. HUDDLESTON, succeeded in putting on another bill an amendment forbidding cost-plus contracts. How long are we to continue in this manner after all these lessons and experiences that we have had, to the disgust of the public? Are we to continue to raise money by liberty bonds and war stamps, taking the money from those who can ill afford to pay, and in some instances from those who are eking out a bare existence, and then have this money wasted in this manner? By this provision in the bill we are offering inducements and premiums upon corruption. I insist that the committee amendment ought to be rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, if there ever was "much ado about nothing," these gentlemen have given an exhibition of it this afternoon. In the first place, I want to state in my little talk—though I do not see the gentleman from Wisconsin present—that if that gentleman will investigate he will find that units D, E, and F, occupied by the War Department, were built by the construction division in the War Department and were not contracted for at all. I got that information from the War Department by telephone.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have not much time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman furnish to the committee what proportion of space those buildings occupy as compared with those which were constructed under private contract?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I can not do that.

Mr. STAFFORD. If he will, he will find that it is a very small proportion.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am not going to be led into a discussion of that kind. The gentleman challenged me to name one piece of Government work that was constructed in that way, and I have done it, and that ends it. I want to say this about this amendment: Our committee, when we brought in the original housing bill involving $60,000,000, put in it a provision that none of the work should be let by a cost-plus percentage contract, and it passed this House and is a law. The committee is absolutely opposed to that kind of contract.

This original bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall contract for the construction of this building. That means, of course, that he shall contract for it under the law; that he shall advertise for bids; that he shall accept the lowest and best bid among the contractors, but the committee thought we ought to go further than that, and that we ought to give the Secretary of the Treasury power to build it with his own organization if, in his judgment, it could be done more cheaply and for the better interests of the Government in that way. Therefore we agreed upon this amendment—

In carrying the foregoing authorization for additional buildings to the hygienic laboratory into effect, the Secretary of the Treasury may enter into contracts—

That is one thing that he may do—or purchase materials in the open market, or otherwise—

What does that mean? It means that he may purchase materials in the open market, or he may purchase them otherwise, and it can not mean anything else. It means that he may purchase them out in the open market or he may go to the manufacturer of those materials direct and buy them from him. Or he may call for bids for these materials and buy them in that way. The words "or otherwise" refer exclusively to the buying of material for this building and nothing else.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. In just a moment—and employ laborers; that is another thing he may do. He may not only make contracts, he may not only purchase materials in the open market or at private sale or otherwise, but he may employ laborers and mechanics for executing the work as in his judgment may best meet the public exigencies within the limits of the authorization herein named. Now, where is there any intimation of any percentage contract? He could not do it because if he builds it by contract he has got to build it under the terms of existing law which requires him to advertise for bids and to let it to the lowest and best bidder. If he does not build by contract, then he is given the power, if he thinks it is for the better interests of the Government, to go into the open market and buy materials, or buy without going into the open market and employ laborers and mechanics to build it under his own construction division in the Treasury Department. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the construction the gentleman places upon the words "or otherwise," as pertaining only to the words "purchase materials in the open market" and not contracts, is a correct one, does the gentleman believe that the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Supervising Architect, should be authorized to purchase materials without limit, privately without advertising for their purchase at the lowest possible bid? Why we have always restricted the heads of departments in the purchase of materials, but here you are seeking to throw open the door.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have two minutes in conclusion. The very exigency of this case, Mr. Chairman, necessitates just what was put in. That is that the Secretary of the Treasury should not be required to wait to advertise for bids but should have the privilege of going into the open market and purchasing the material immediately to meet the emergency. Statutes, as all lawyers know, are to be construed in the light of the common understanding and construction of words, and of language. No one would speak in ordinary language of "contracting in the open market," but it is a matter of common knowledge that we often speak of "purchasing materials in the open market," and hence the construction of the gentleman from Wisconsin is the most strained construction that he or anyone could put upon it. The application of the term "purchase in the open market" is to the material, because, as I said, if any man in common parlance speaks about "contracts in the open market" it simply is absurd, or "contracts otherwise." If it is a contract, it is a contract and hence, Mr. Chairman, the common, ordinary, common-sense, every-day understanding of terms precludes the strained construction that gentlemen have put on this expression, and I hope that they will not handicap this emergency, this exigency, by so construing this amendment, which purposes to expeditiously do the very thing the Committee on Rules and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds believe ought to be done and ought to be done at once. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired, and the question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 26, noes 25.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers—I withdraw the demand.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendment with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is provided for in the rule. The rule provides that the committee automatically rises and reports the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; that is true.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHALLENBERGER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12404 and had directed him to report the same with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt, and the gentleman from Iowa demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. GOOD. I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. No quorum is present, and it is an automatic call. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 107, nays 78, answered "present" 4, not voting 241, as follows:

Mr. FERRIS with Mr. FULLER of Illinois.
Mr. OLNEY with Mr. DAVIS.
Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi with Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH.
Mr. EAGAN with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, pending the announcement of the vote, may I make a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If it should appear that a decisive result has not been reached upon this amendment by reason of a quorum not being present, would this matter be the unfinished business if the House should adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been ordered on it, it would be. One hundred and eighty-eight Members are present, not a quorum.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, October 3, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation required by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance (H. Doc. No. 1314); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Civil Service Commission submitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required for the fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1315); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. FIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13037) to amend the fiftieth article of war, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 822) which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GORDON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13036) transferring jurisdiction and control for the period of the war over the Southern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the Secretary of War for use for Army hospital purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 823), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13035) to amend section 4 of Chapter V of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, and to make said amendment retroactive, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 824), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5167) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States," approved August 27, 1888, as amended March 2, 1889, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 825), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SIMS: Resolution (H. Res. 440) providing for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 63, entitled "Joint resolution to establish a reserve of the Public Health Service"; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 335) re-creating the rank of ensign in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MADDEN: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 53) for the appointment of a joint committee of Congress to investigate and report on certain questions; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 13039) for the relief of William R. McIntosh; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. GREEN of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 13040) granting an increase of pension to Hamilton W. Manner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. VARE: Resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of the Lithuanian people of Philadelphia, pledging loyalty and support to the United States in this war for justice; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, October 3, 1918.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

We are emboldened to come again to Thee, O God, because Thou hast heard the voice of our supplications and hast inclined Thine ear unto our prayers. Thou hast verified Thy promises and given us prosperity at home and success abroad. Lest we be exalted above measure, we pray that Thou wilt give us the spirit of humility and of continued sacrifice. If in Thy wisdom we must still suffer the dreadful strain, if we must suffer greater losses at home and on the battle fields of Europe, if we must be buffeted by the thorn in the flesh and be chastened for our sins and our forgetfulness of God, O God, grant that we may quickly learn our lesson and return unto the Lord, who will have mercy upon us. May we come back with grateful hearts, and penitent spirit, and sober lives; and may we be purified throughout our great country; and may the purity of our motives justify the successes of our undertakings, when Thou shalt stay the hand of the threatening scourge and crown us with blessings here and beyond the seas. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, September 30, 1918, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Hitchcock	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Benet	Johnson, S. Dak.	Myers	Smoot

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is in Delaware engaged in liberty-loan work.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is detained by illness, and that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is detained on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

"TWO THOUSAND QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a letter has been sent to me taking exception to some things I said in regard to the book Two Thousand Questions and Answers. The letter is from the Review of Reviews Co., and it is addressed to Mr. G. D. Hartley, a constitutent of mine, of Sleeper & Hartley, Worcester, Mass. The letter reads:

THE REVIEW OF REVIEWS CO.,
New York, September 20, 1918.

Mr. GEORGE D. HARTLEY,
Sleeper & Hartley (Inc.), Worcester, Mass.

DEAR SIR: This is in answer to your notation of September 18. The book referred to by Mr. LODGE in the United States Senate is not only being offered by us to our subscribers but was manufactured in this office and in the office of the Australian Review of Reviews.

Judging from Mr. LODGE'S talk, he has never seen the book because he calls it anonymous, whereas it is stated upon the title page that the book was made by the editorial staff of the Review of Reviews. We can not believe that Mr. LODGE would make a false statement, knowing that the book was published by this company, and therefore we can only judge that he was not familiar with it when he condemned it.

This book was published last April. Five thousand copies have been sold. It has been distributed throughout the United States and even in foreign countries. Mr. Creel wrote a one-page introduction after having seen the proof sheets. When the book was published, he asked us to revise it before making another edition, and pointed out references which he thought ought to be changed. Outside of Mr. Creel's criticism, no word of criticism came from anyone until the National Security League wished to make a political attack upon Mr. Creel. Then the Security League falsely represented various answers to questions and used the book as an instrument for their attack.

The book can not be fairly called pro-German. The very questions to which the National Security League take exception were passed by the British censor and the American censor when the material came to us from Australia. The National Security League knew that the book was being revised at the time they made their attack. The main purpose of revising the book was to introduce more material explaining why the United States went into the war, and in the revised edition the first 40 pages will be devoted to our part in the war.

It is intended to deliver the new edition to those who respond to the circulars recently mailed by this company. This is a true statement of the facts vouched for by the writer of this letter, who had more to do with the making of this book than anyone else in the business department of the Review of Reviews.

Yours, truly,
F. W. STONE.

Mr. President, I have not seen the book, but I have seen some of the circulars, and I have seen nowhere a statement of its author. Certainly anyone who desired to be known as the author of this book, charged as it is in my judgment with distinct pro-German propaganda, anyone who wishes that authorship announced ought to have it announced. It appears from this letter that the authorship consists of the editorial staff of the Review of Reviews. That is not a name of an author, and I argue myself unknown in saying that I do not know the names of all of the staff of the Review of Reviews. I ought to know them, no doubt. But I here say that the work was done by the editorial staff of the Review of Reviews, and I am very sorry if I misled anyone by saying that it was anonymous. They claim and deserve entire credit for the book.

Mr. President, though I have not seen the book I have seen a series of extracts from it which I printed in the RECORD. There can be no doubt about the truth of the questions they took from that book, and they were enough to prove what its character was.

Moreover, I have seen the circulars. A great many have been sent. I have one here, and on the outside of the envelope containing the circular is: "Did the Germans warn the passengers on the Lusitania?" The answer is in the book, I understand. If that is not by indirection or by implication a defense of Germany in one of the very most villainous things she has ever done—and that is saying a great deal—then I can not understand what an ordinary sentence means.

The writer of this letter says the book "can not fairly be called pro-German." That depends upon the point of view of the person describing it, I think. But they also say that the book has never been withdrawn. I was guilty of saying that I understood it had been withdrawn, and I admit that I was incautious, for I took Mr. Creel's statement on that point. He says in his letter:

> Because there was not the slightest evidence of any premeditated pro-Germanism in the matter, because the good faith and true Americanism of all the parties in the controversy were so obvious, and because the book itself had been stopped, and a new edition under way, I avoided all publicity in the matter out of my desire to work no injustice to anyone.

He had the proof sheets before him, according to Mr. Stone's statement, and he said it had been stopped, and I took his word for it. It appears that the whole of the first edition of 5,000 copies have been sold, and the revised edition apparently makes but little change, except to enlarge some references and add 40 pages on the entry of America into the war. The book is now being pressed for sale by the Review of Reviews Co., and these circulars are going everywhere. It seems to me very strange, Mr. President, that a book of that sort should have no inhibition placed upon it when the Secretary of War most wisely has excluded from the camps of soldiers library books which certainly are no more objectionable than this.

In order to do full justice to the compilers of the book they are so proud of, I desired merely to make this correction where I made a mistatement.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12776) to provide further for the national security and defense and for the more effective prosecution of the war by furnishing means for the better utilization of the existing sources of electrical and mechanical power and for the development of new sources of such power, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WADSWORTH presented a memorial of sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed Federal suffrage amendment, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD (for Mr. THOMPSON) presented a petition of sundry citizens of Cook County, Ill., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also (for Mr. THOMPSON) presented a petition of the congregation of the First Baptist Church of Atchison, Kans., praying that the order denying access to Army camps and cantonments of all camp pastors and voluntary chaplains be rescinded, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I present a resolution from the city council of Seattle, Wash., protesting against the proposed tax upon bonds of municipalities. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I also present a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Island County Farm Bureau, sent to me by R. M. Turner, county agent, secretary Farm Bureau, urging Congress to make an appropriation to protect our sheep from depredation. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 469) for the relief of the heirs of W. H. Sneed, deceased, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 577) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1590) providing for an increase of salary for the United States marshals and for the United States district attorneys for the western and eastern districts of Louisiana, reported it with amendments.

LAFAYETTE NATIONAL PARK, ME.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4957) to establish the Lafayette National Park in the State of Maine, and I submit a report (No. 576) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the bill.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator from Montana if the bill has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, Mr. President; it was ordered reported unanimously by the members of the committee who were present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is there a report on it from the department?

Mr. MYERS. The bill merely changes the name of a park from the name which the Senate a short time ago gave it in a bill which was passed. It is merely a matter of personal preference on the part of those interested in the establishment of the park.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection.

Mr. HALE. I think it will take only a short time to pass the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the tracts of land, easements, and other real estate heretofore known as the Sieur de Monts National Monument, situated on Mount Desert Island, in the county of Hancock and State of Maine, established and designated as a national monument under the act of June 8, 1906, entitled "An act for the preservation of American antiquities," by presidential proclamation of July 8, 1916, is hereby declared to be a national park and dedicated as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people under the name of the Lafayette National Park, under which name the aforesaid national park shall be entitled to receive and to use all moneys heretofore or hereafter appropriated for Sieur de Monts National Monument.

SEC. 2. That the administration, protection, and promotion of said Lafayette National Park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provision of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes," and acts additional thereto or amendatory thereof.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept in behalf of the United States such other property on said Mount Desert Island, including lands, easements, buildings, and moneys, as may be donated for the extension or improvement of said park.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I should like to say in explanation of this measure that several months ago I introduced a similar bill, to change over the Sieur de Monts Monument to a national park, to be known as the Mount Desert National Park.

In view of the fact that the land where the park is situated was originally settled by the French, and in view of our present very close relations with France, it has been deemed fitting by those interested in the new park, as a tribute to our well-beloved ally, to name the park after the great Frenchman whose memory is held in such affection by the American people.

With the exception of the change in name, there is no difference between the pending bill and the bill heretofore passed. The other bill was reported favorably by the commtitee, was passed unanimously by the Senate, and is now in the House of Representatives. It is proposed now to allow the other bill to remain unacted upon and to have the bill now under consideration substituted for it. I think there can be no objection to that course being taken.

Mr. KENYON. Let me inquire of the Senator how much of an appropriation is involved?

Mr. HALE. There is no appropriation connected with this measure.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 4969) to amend the fiftieth article of war;

A bill (S. 4970) to amend the first paragraph of section 302 of the act entitled "An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war," approved March 8, 1918; and

A bill (S. 4971) transferring jurisdiction and control for the period of the war over the southern branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the Secretary of War for use for Army hospital purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 4972) to regulate the collection and expenditure of money, other than by the Government of the United States, or by its authority, for the use and benefit of the armed forces of the United States and of its allies, and especially of France, Great Britain, Italy, Belgium, Serbia, Greece, and Montenegro, or for any auxiliary organizations of said Governments maintained and operated for the use and benefit of such armed forces (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4973) to increase the pensions of Army nurses; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 4974) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to purchase from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts a large dry dock and appurtenant lands; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

FEDERAL COMMISSION ON RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I introduce the bill which I send to the desk, and I should like to have it read. The war will be over before very long, we all hope. I find that our enemy, Germany, and all of the allies are preparing for what is to take place after the war in the way of reconstruction. There has been a resolution heretofore introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to provide for a committee on reconstruction after the war. I have had the bill which I now introduce in preparation for some time, looking to preparation for peace reconstruction after the war shall have ended. I am going to ask that the bill be referred to the Judiciary Committee. I doubt that Congress, through a committee, could do the work, even if it desired to do it, which is in contemplation by the resolution, but I really believe that this question is an executive function rather than a legislative function. Therefore, as I have stated, I am going to ask that the bill go to the Committee on the Judiciary, because there are some questions of law involved which should properly be considered by that committee. I hope the resolution to which I have referred will also be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, that we may work out something which may operate for the good of the country.

I find that England has appointed several committees, with a view of dealing with this matter in that country after the war, such as the Royal Commission, the Industrial Development Committee, the Belgian Trade Committee, the Committee on Trade Relations After the War, the Commission on Industrial Policy after the War, and a list which I hold in my hand shows the appointment of all kinds of commissions by France, also for the purpose of looking into the questions of trade and finance after the war. I have prepared this bill with that end in view, and after it shall have been read I desire that it shall be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The bill (S. 4968) to provide for the creation and establishment of a Federal commission on reconstruction, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

A bill (S. 4968) to provide for the creation and establishment of a Federal commission on reconstruction, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the Federal commission on reconstruction (hereinafter referred to as the commission), which shall be composed of five commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than three of the commissioners shall be members of the same political party. The commission shall choose a chairman from its own membership. Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. A vacancy in the commission shall not impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the functions of the commission. The commission shall cease to exist two years after the cessation of hostilities of the existing war unless otherwise provided by Congress.

SEC. 2. That each commissioner shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 a year. The commission shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive a salary at the rate of $5,000 a year, and the commission shall have authority to employ and fix the compensation of such economists, investigators, special experts, clerks, and other employees as it may from time to time find necessary for the proper performance of its duties. Until otherwise provided by law the commission may rent suitable offices for its use.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the commission to examine into the problems and conditions that are arising out of the war and that may arise out of the transition of the economic, industrial, and social life of the Nation from a state of war to a state of peace; and with a view of meeting, as far as possible, such problems and conditions before their solution is actually forced upon the Government, the commission shall report to Congress from time to time the results of such investigations with recommendations for new and additional legislation.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the commission to investigate and report as above described on any and all questions that may be referred to it by the Senate or the House of Representatives or by the President arising out of the conditions of war above described; and more particularly it shall investigate and report on the following problems:

(a) The financing, regulation, control, and development of the merchant marine.

(b) The development, financing, expansion, and direction of foreign trade.

(c) The reorganization, financing, and readjustment of industries engaged in war work by way of reconverting them to normal production.

(d) Technical education and industrial research as a means of developing and strengthening of industry.

(e) The redistribution and employment of labor in agricultural and industrial pursuits and the problems of labor growing out of demobilization.

(f) The supply, distribution, and availability of raw materials and foodstuffs.

(g) The conservation and development of national resources.

(h) Inland transportation by rail and water.

(i) Communication by telephone, telegraph, and wireless.

(j) The reorganization of Government departments, bureaus, commissions, or offices, with a view to putting the Government on an economical and efficient peace basis.

(k) The consolidation of such acts and parts of acts of Congress which relate to the same subject matter but which now appear at various places in the statutes.

SEC. 5. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this resolution.

SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect immediately upon its adoption.

EXEMPTION OF MUNICIPAL BONDS.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, as preliminary to introducing an amendment, and inasmuch as the question has been raised by a communication which has been sent to the desk by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], a question. In the matter of the exemption of bonds which shall have been issued after the proposed revenue law goes into effect, will there be an exemption of bonds which have been authorized by municipalities? Whether such bonds will be exempted is a question of the interpretation of the word "issued." If the Senator from North Carolina is not prepared now to answer the question, I shall defer the introduction of the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Committee on Finance has not discussed the section of the bill covering the matter referred to by the Senator from California, and I should not care to suggest any interpretation of the House measure until we shall have taken the matter up and discussed it.

Mr. PHELAN. Then I will defer proposing the amendment until I am advised in reference to the matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say, however, generally that I should assume that that language would mean that it applied only to bonds which were issued after the passage of the act.

Mr. PHELAN. Does the Senator mean by "issued" the sale of the bonds or the authorization of a municipality for the issuance of bonds?

Mr. SIMMONS. That would depend upon the exact language. It says "issued after the passage of the act." Of course, it would not affect any bonds issued before the passage of the act. I have not in mind the exact language of the provision referred to by the Senator, because, as I have said, we have not yet discussed it. Therefore I should not like to express a definite opinion in regard to the matter.

Mr. PHELAN. I think there is a doubt as to the interpretation of the word "issued."

THE REVENUE.

Mr. PHELAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORE submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON REORGANIZATION.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask that Senate concurrent resolution No. 22, submitted by me on the 28th ultimo, authorizing and creating a committee on reorganization, and which is now on the table, be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

A JUDICIAL DEFINITION OF "ALLEGIANCE."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, it is not in the nature of a petition, but I have just had called to my attention a short statement entitled "A judicial definition of allegiance."

It is a statement made by Federal Judge Charles F. Amidon, of the United States District Court, District of North Dakota, in his decision sentencing Rev. J. Fontana, who was convicted of violating the espionage law. This opinion is so clear, so concise a statement of what is due, not only from the citizen to his country but also what is due from the man who asks to be made a citizen, that I think it ought to be placed in the RECORD. I ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD. It is found in the Outlook of September 18, 1918.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A JUDICIAL DEFINITION OF "ALLEGIANCE."

"The Rev. J. Fontana, pastor of the German Evangelical Church, New Salem, N. Dak., was recently tried at Bismarck, in that State. He was charged with having uttered from time to time seditious language for the purpose of interfering with the military activities of the Government. The presiding judge was Charles F. Amidon, of the United States District Court, District of North Dakota. The jury returned a verdict of guilty against Mr. Fontana on August 15. United States Attorney Hildreth moved for sentence on August 19. In passing sentence Judge Amidon said, in part, what follows. (The Editors.)

"You received your final papers as a citizen in 1898. By the oath which you then took you renounced and abjured all allegiance to Germany and to the Emperor of Germany, and swore that you would bear true faith and allegiance to the United States. What did that mean? That you would set about earnestly growing an American soul and put away your German soul. That is what your oath of allegiance meant. Have you done that? I do not think you have. You have cherished everything German, prayed German, read German, sung German. Every thought of your mind and every emotion of your heart through all these years has been German. Your body has been in America, but your life has been in Germany. If you were set down in Prussia to-day you would be in harmony with your environment. It would fit you just as a flower fits the leaf and stem of the plant on which it grows. You have influenced others who have been under your ministry to do the same thing. You said you would cease to cherish your German soul. That meant that you would begin the study of American life and history; that you would open your mind and heart to all of its influences; that you would try to understand its ideals and purposes and love them; that you would try to build up inside of yourself a whole group of feelings for the United States the same as you felt toward the fatherland when you left Germany. There have been a good many Germans before me in the last month. It has been an impressive part of the trial. They have lived in this country, like yourself, 10, 20, 30, 40 years, and they had to give their evidence through an interpreter. And as I looked at them and tried as best I could to understand them, there was written all over every one of them, 'Made in Germany.' American life had not dimmed that mark in the least. It stood there as bright and fresh as the inscription upon a new coin. I do not blame you and these men alone. I blame myself. I blame my country. We urged you to come. We welcomed you; we gave you opportunity; we gave you land; we conferred upon you the diadem of American citizenship, and then we left you. We paid no attention to what you have been doing.

"And now the world war has thrown a searchlight upon our national life, and what have we discovered? We find all over these United States, in groups, little Germanies, little Italies, little Austrias, little Norways, little Russias. These foreign people have thrown a circle about themselves, and, instead of keeping the oath they took that they would try to grow American souls inside of them, they have studiously striven to exclude everything American and to cherish everything foreign. A clever gentleman wrote a romance called 'America, the Melting Pot.' It appealed to our vanity, and through all these years we have been seeing romance instead of fact. That is the awful truth. The figure of my country stands beside you to-day. It says to me: Do not blame this man alone. I am partly to blame. Punish him for his offense, but let him know that I see things in a new light; that a new era has come here. Punish him to teach him, and the like of him, and all those who have been misled by him and his like, that a change has come; that there must be an interpretation anew of the oath of allegiance. It has been in the past nothing but a formula of words. From this time on it must be translated into living characters incarnate in the life of every foreigner who has his dwelling place in our midst. If they have been cherishing foreign history, foreign ideals, foreign loyalty, it must be stopped, and they must begin at once, all over again, to cherish American thought, American history, American ideals. That means something that is to be done in your daily life. It does not mean simply that you will not take up arms against the United States. It goes deeper far than that. It means that you will live for the United States, and that you will cherish and grow American souls inside of you. It means that you will take down from the walls of your homes the picture of the Kaiser and put up the picture of Washington; that you will take down the picture of Bismarck and hang up the picture of Lincoln. It means that you will begin to sing American songs; that you will begin earnestly to study American history; that you will begin to open your lives through every avenue to the influence of American life. It means that you will begin first of all to learn English, the language of this country, so that there may be a door into your souls through which American life may enter.

"I am not so simple as to entertain the idea that racial habits and qualities can be put aside by the will in a day, in a year, in a generation; but because that is difficult is all the more reason why you should get about it and quit cherishing a foreign life. If half the effort had been put forth in these foreign communities to build up an American life in the hearts of these foreign-born citizens that has been put forth to perpetuate a foreign life, our situation would have been entirely different from what it is to-day. You have violated your oath of allegiance in this: You have cherished foreign ideals and tried to make them everlasting. That is the basic wrong of these thousands of little islands of foreigners that have been formed through our whole limits, that, instead of trying to remove the foreign life out of their souls and to build up an American life in them, they have striven studiously from year to year to stifle American life and to make foreignness perpetual. That is disloyalty. And the object, one of the big objects, of this serious proceeding in this court, and other like proceedings in other courts, is to give notice that that must be stopped.

"I have seen before my eyes another day of judgment. When we get through with this war and civil liberty is made safe once more upon this earth, there is going to be a day of judgment in these United States. Foreign-born citizens and the institutions which have cherished foreignness are going to be brought to the judgment bar of this Republic. That day of judgment looks more to me to-day like the great Day of Judgment than anything that I have thought of for many years. There is going to be a separation on that day of the sheep from the goats. Every institution that has been engaged in this business of making foreignness perpetual in the United States will have to change or cease. That is going to cut deep, but it is coming.

"I recognize the right of foreign-born citizens to hear their religion, if they can not understand it in English, spoken to them in the tongue that they can understand. If they have not yet acquired enough English to read, they are entitled to have a paper that shall speak to them the language that they can understand. I can not go further than that. And this is the capital thing that is going to be settled on that day of judgment, namely, that the right to those things is temporary, and it can not be enjoyed by anybody who is not willing to regard it as temporary and to set about earnestly making the time of that enjoyment as short as possible. That means a fundamental revision of these foreign churches. No freedom of the press will protect a perpetual foreign press in these United States. It won't protect any press or any church which, while it is trying to meet a temporary need, does not set itself earnestly about the business of making that temporary situation just as temporary as possible, and not making it, as has been true in the past, just as near perpetual as possible. Men who are not willing to do that will have to choose. If they prefer to cherish foreign ideals, they will have to go to their own. If it is necessary, we will cancel every certificate of citizenship in these United States. The Federal Government has power to deal with that subject, and it is going to deal with it. Nothing else than that surely can be possible. And the object of the sentence which I pronounce upon you to-day is not alone to punish you for the disloyalty of which you have been guilty, but to serve notice upon you, and the like of you, and all of the groups of people in this district who have been cherishing foreignness, that the end of that régime has come. It is a call to every one of you to set about earnestly the growing of an American soul inside of you.

"The court finds and adjudges that you are guilty under each count of the indictment, and as a punishment therefor it is further adjudged that you be imprisoned in the Federal penitentiary at Leavenworth for the term of three years. The sentences under the three counts of the indictment are to run concurrently and not successively."

ADDRESS BY JAMES H. POU.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, it is not my custom to ask to have matter printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but there was delivered recently in my State a speech by James H. Pou, one of the ablest lawyers of the South and one of its clearest speakers. It is an address to the workers in behalf of the fourth liberty-bond loan. The head of the liberty-loan work in North Carolina thought the speech was worthy of the widest circulation in the State, and, at the expense of that organization, 10,000 copies have been printed, to be used in the State. The speech is equally valuable upon this very great and important subject for circulation throughout the country, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The speech referred to is as follows:

SPEECH OF MR. JAMES H. POU, DELIVERED IN THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, RALEIGH, N. C., ON TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1918, BEFORE THE STATE CONVENTION OF FOURTH LIBERTY-LOAN WORKERS.

[For the sake of brevity, the speech has been reduced to questions and answers.]

"Q. What is the fourth liberty loan?—A. It is the duty imposed by our Government upon those of us who are not called for military duty. Our Government asks us to lend it $6,000,000,000, in order that its fighting machinery may be kept at the highest state of efficiency, and that the soldiers at the front and who are preparing to go to the front may suffer for nothing.

"Q. What amount of that loan is North Carolina asked to take?—A. Thirty-six million dollars, or approximately $15 each for every inhabitant.

"Q. Is that a fair share for North Carolina to take?—A. It certainly is not too much. The per capita share for each individual in the United States, if the loan were divided equally, would be $60; but North Carolina is only asked to lend $15, one-fourth the average amount.

"Q. Why is North Carolina's share only one-fourth the average amount allotted to the citizens of the Union?—A. Subscriptions to this loan are expected to be made from money already earned, or certainly to be earned within the next 10 months. It is expected that this loan will be floated from the accumulated capital of the country. Thrift and war-savings stamps are expected to be sold to the people at a per capita basis and paid for out of the money that they shall hereafter earn by industry and save by economy. The thrift stamps are apportioned per capita $20 to every man, woman, and child in the United States; and North Carolina is expected to do her part in industry and economy in buying stamps along with other States. But the Government knows that, unfortunately, the people of North Carolina have not accumulated as much capital as the average American State has accumulated. The Government assumes that the banking capital of a State or county is a fair index to the wealth accumulation of that section. It has compared our banking capital and assets with that of other communities, and it has found that this State has of such assets only about one-fourth the average amount. It therefore asks us to take not more than the average amount, as it has done the States and counties which have an excess; nor the average amount which those States and communities which possess an average amount of banking capital are expected to take; but only one-fourth of the average amount, because we appear to have of this kind of capital only one-fourth the average amount. Some States are expected to take a very large amount, probably more than $200 per capita for every inhabitant. The average for the entire country is $60. North Carolina is expected to buy only an average of $15 of these bonds for every inhabitant.

"Q. Why should North Carolina buy its share of bonds?—A. For two reasons—the patriotic duty and the investment opportunity.

"Q. Why for patriotism?—A. The war must be supported; and if it is to be brought to a speedy conclusion, it must be hurried. The longer it lasts the more it will cost in treasure and in blood. The sooner we can bring it to a victorious conclusion the less money we will have to pay in taxes, the fewer bonds we will be expected to buy, and fewer American soldiers will lose their lives. The Government asks us who remain at home, sharing none of the dangers or hardships of the war and at most suffering minor inconvenience, to do our part in equipping and supporting those who go to the front. Three million and more of the pick of the land have been called into active service, and 2,000,000 more will soon be called. Out of every 100 people, 5 will be fighting or preparing to fight. Ninety-five will remain at home, suffering no serious discomfort, pursuing their regular avocations, attending to their business, and earning more money, wages, business, manufacturing, and farming than they ever expected to earn. The 5,000,000 who are called to active service must give up their business and receive often but a small fraction of what they earned at home. They must sacrifice their business, their hope of wealth, and they must risk their lives. That is their service, their sacrifice. Ours is to remain at home, push our business, make all the money we can, and use our money in buying bonds. Our service tends to make us richer, and as a sacrifice it can not be mentioned in comparison to the sacrifice expected of those 5,000,000 who have gone or are preparing to go to the front. The person able to buy bonds and who refuses to buy in proportion to his ability has no right to call himself an American citizen or to claim that he has or is doing any part in this war. He is a slacker of the grossest kind, and morally, if not legally, a deserter. So much for the purchase of bonds as a patriotic duty.

"Q. Why are these bonds a good investment?—A. For several reasons: First, they pay 4¼ per cent interest—2⅛ per cent every six months. Only a few years ago a 4 per cent investment was looked upon as the standard of safety. North Carolina bonds bearing 4 per cent sold far above par, and United States bonds bearing 4 per cent were not obtainable in the market except at a great premium. Second, these bonds can now be bought with cheap dollars, dollars which have only a fraction of their former purchasing power. They will be repaid in gold or its equivalent, and at a time when the money will probably have three times its present purchasing value. The money in circulation now is honest money, the equivalent of value in gold, but the market in which that money must be spent, if spent now, is a famine market. Good money spent in a famine market brings but small returns. All money spent now brings but a fraction of its normal return; but money earned now and put in Government securities, either bonds or war-savings stamps, will when repaid have at least its normal purchasing value, and probably a good deal more, and until repaid will return 4¼ per cent interest per annum. The stamps earn 4 per cent, compounded quarterly and paid when the stamps mature. The safest way, and one of the few ways, in which the cheap dollars we now have may be transmuted into valuable money is by investing in Government securities. The Government does not ask people to reduce their business or lessen their production by taking money out of their business and putting it in bonds. This would be a mistake. It would do harm rather than good.

"Q. If the Government does not expect people to take their money out of business and lessen production to put in bonds, what kind of money does it expect?—A. It expects us to reduce our manner of living; to cut out all extravagances, all luxuries, all unnecessary expenditures. It expects us to live simply and economically. It expects us to practice economy in food, clothing, service, and all of those countless things which we regard as comforts, refinements, luxuries, but which are not necessary. Almost every family can revise its manner of living so as to preserve health, comfort, and its intellectual life, and yet save a great deal of money out of their normal manner of living. Live simply, and what you save in the difference between simple living and high living put in bonds. Next, there are a great many useful and proper things ordinarily which ought not to be done now. We should avoid all new construction, buildings, and things of that sort. We should avoid purchase of autos, pianos, refitting and furnishing houses, and interior decorations. Money should not be used in these things during the war. Labor should not be employed in them. Carriers should not be expected to transport them. Save the money that you intend to put into these things; put it in bonds. They will draw interest; they will increase in value; and after the war, when labor needs employment, when railroads need freight, and when prices are normal or below, you can get with the money you put in bonds two or three times as much value in buildings, furnishings, etc., as you could get if you spent your money now. Money wisely spent then will benefit the public and the spender.

"Third. All work of every character, and no matter how useful, which can without serious loss be postponed until after the war, should be postponed. One of the serious problems following the war will be to furnish employment to men who are at the front. The difficulty then will not be to find men to do the work but work for the men. Be ready with your money accumulated now, saved in bonds, and ready to be spent in useful and necessary work when you can get the work done for less and when men will be glad to have the jobs. Another class of money that ought to be put in the bonds is the money which people are tempted to invest in wildcat securities. Peddlers go over the land offering neatly printed certificates of stock in oil wells, gold mines, patents, inventions, town lots in distant cities, etc. Avoid all these investments and tell your neighbors to avoid them as they would a pestilence. I have never known any stock or bond sold in this method to result other than in loss to the purchaser. Good stocks are not sold in this way. The fact that it is necessary to employ an agent to go over the country peddling stocks on big commission, frequently 50 per cent, is proof that the stock in such companies is no good. If an agent offers you such stock ask him if he has a license from the insurance commissioner of this State. If his company is organized outside of North Carolina and the agent has no license, he has violated the law and is subject to arrest, and his company is, in all probability, an arrant fraud. If his company be a North Carolina corporation, ask him to allow you time to consult your banker or some friend who has experience. Nine times out of ten the agent will object and seek to hurry you into a purchase. His conduct will be evidence—and almost proof—of the fraudulent character of the stock he is selling. The law in this State requires a person who is selling the stock of a nonresident corporation to take out a license from the insurance commissioner of this State before offering stocks and bonds for sale.

"Unfortunately, however, there is no requirement upon persons peddling stocks of companies organized in this State. I have this year refused to assist in the incorporation of three different companies. It seemed to me these companies were preparing to offer stock of very doubtful or no value to the people of this State, and I was not willing for it to be said that these companies were incorporated in my office. I hope the next general assembly will enact a law forbidding the peddling of the stocks of North Carolina corporations, unless the agent peddling them has taken out a license, and unless the stocks have been examined as to legality and solvency by some department of our State government.

"Q. What will be the financial situation in this country after the war?—A. Probably the first condition will be two or three years of unprecedented activity in business and apparent prosperity. Prices are likely to mount higher even than during the war. Prices of commodities fixed by the Government will have been removed, and the law of supply and demand, supplemented by speculation, will have its effect. We are apt to have a short period of furious prosperity, boom times. These booms will be followed quickly by a long period of readjustment, liquidation, and declining prices in values and in wages. The man who enters this period of liquidation heavily in debt will be in great danger. He must pay the interest and the principal of debt contracted in cheap dollars with dollars constantly rising in value. The weight of debt will continue to increase despite moderate payments of principal and interest. He will find the balance of his debt, after making payments, harder to pay than the entire principal was when he made the debt. The man who enters this period of liquidation heavily in debt deserves your sympathy. But the man who enters that period out of debt, owning his home if he lives in town, or his farm if he lives in the country, and who has invested a fair amount in liberty bonds, is safe. No debt presses on this man, and while the value measured in dollars of his home and farm will decrease, he has the home and farm and uses them in the same way as he used them when prices were high. He will get the same enjoyment out of his home or farm, whether the price be five or ten thousand dollars. His farm will be as large in acreage, his home will have the same number of rooms, and for all purposes he will use them just as he did when their values represented twice as much. At the high value the dollars represented were cheap dollars. At the low value the dollars represented by the value were high-price dollars; but the thing he owns, home or farm, is the same and his manner of living need not be changed. If he be the owner of liberty bonds, he will find them constantly increasing in value, for they will go above par, as all American bonds have in the past; and the money that they will pay in interest and in principal will be valuable money, for it will not be spent in a famine market. It will be spent in a market where values are normal and possibly below normal, and the returns for those dollars when thus expended will probably be three times what they would be if they were spent now. Happy will be the man in the postwar period who owes no debt, who owns his house or farm, and who has an amount of liberty bonds. His bonds will be safe and they will be subject to no tax.

"Q. After the war how will our taxes be?—A. Inevitably taxes must be higher than before the war. We will probably never go back to the standard of taxation which prevailed in 1913. The United States will at the end of the war owe a huge debt. Every dollar of this debt must be paid from the proceeds of taxation, except the loans which we will have made and shall make to our allies. Deducting the sum of all loans we make to the allies, the bonds that the United States will owe at the end of the war will be so huge that unless you consider the wealth and earning power of the American people the amounts would seem fabulous. But there is not the least doubt of the ability or of the intention of the United States to pay every dollar of these bonds, interest as it shall fall due every six months, and the principal on or before maturity. Every citizen must pay a proportionate part of this indebtedness. He may not pay it in direct tax, but in some way every person must pay his or her share of the cost of this war. A citizen can arrange now so that he will receive of this money as well as pay his part. If you do not buy bonds you may rest assured you will have to help pay them. You can arrange now to be a recipient of money as well as a payer. You can choose whether you will be one of those persons who after the war does the paying and receives nothing or one of those persons who pays his part and receives back the money which he shall put in these investments. This applies to national taxation. That will begin high but will diminish as the bonds are paid, and it may in time approach the tax standards of 1913. But State, county, and municipal taxes must, it appears to me, constantly increase in the future. The Government has practically abolished the manufacture of intoxicating liquors, and in two years the constitutional amendment will have forever removed these things as a subject of taxation, both State and National. I think this is wise. I believe that every dollar collected in the form of taxes from liquor has cost the body politic $5 in efficiency. But the abolition of the whisky traffic will require the Government to adopt some other form of taxation. The Government has temporarily taken over the operation of railroads and other public-service corporations. Many believe that the Government will acquire the ownership of these properties. If so, it is not likely that the Government will allow the State or any department thereof to levy a tax upon them. The Government will need the revenue itself. There is no precedent for taxation by State or any subdivision thereof of Government property. The precedents are the other way. If these properties be withdrawn from the power of State and local taxation a huge deficit will result and taxes must be increased or other subjects of taxation found. Local taxation, especially in cities, is already a grievous burden. How it can be increased is a problem which already cries out for solution. When States, counties, towns, school districts, road districts, etc., lose the tax on whisky and on public-service corporations, and when they hunt for other subjects of taxation to make good the loss, fortunate will be the man who has a considerable investment in liberty bonds. The United States Government promises not to tax these bonds nor to tax their income unless the taxpayer holds more than $30,000 of them. It absolutely forbids States, counties, and subdivisions thereof to levy any tax whatever either upon bonds or interest. In the days that follow the war, when debts press hard and taxes are high, the person who has invested $30,000 in Government bonds will find the bonds rising in value steadily, and he will receive $1,275—one-half every six months—in interest. And no tax collector, whether he be National, State, county, municipal, road, school, or any other, can touch either the $30,000 principal or the annual $1,275 return. Already the absolute tax-exempt feature of the 3½ per cent liberty bonds has caused them to go above par, and the probability of exempting the income on $30,000 of liberty bonds has caused them to rise on the markets. Soon as peace comes the rise in these bonds, in my opinion, will become steady and constant, if not rapid. This is the one security of all in the world which is absolutely safe, principal and interest, and which, up to the amount of $30,000, will be absolutely exempt from all tax, State and local as well as National.

"Q. If the bonds are as good as you say, why must we canvass the State to induce the people to buy? In short, what objections do people raise to the purchase of these bonds?—A. There are several objections. I will mention them seriatim: First, people say they are likely to go below par; that the other three issues, as soon as they were sold, fell below par, and that these would likewise fall. I think this is true. I think the probabilities are that soon after this loan is floated the bonds will drop slightly below par. This is due to the fact that many enthusiastic, patriotic people will subscribe more than they ought to buy. They will sell some of these bonds at a loss, although they have implicit faith in their value. These people will find that they can not take as much out of their business as their enthusiasm prompted them to take. The fact that they fall below par is not an evidence of weakness, but an inevitable result of floating securities by appealing to patriotism and enthusiasm.

"Q. Then, if the bonds are going below par, why is it not proper for a person to buy at 99 or 98 instead of buying at par?—A. The person that does that does not help the Government in floating the loan. He can not buy until after every one of the $6,000,000,000 of bonds has been taken by some one. He is not doing a patriotic act, but rather the contrary. He is shirking his duty and is depending on his more patriotic neighbor to take more than the neighbor ought to take, hoping that when his neighbor feels the burden he will sell his bonds. This man who did not buy when the loan was floated may make a few points commission. The man who does not buy when the loan is floated and who buys afterwards slightly below par has the patriotism of a note shaver or a pawnbroker. He is not a patriot but a skin-flint. He is a slacker of the commonest kind, a moral deserter, a man whose selfishness is overcoming his patriotism. Such a man deserves, and I believe will acquire, the contempt of all who know him. He will be a byword in his community hereafter and a marked man if he should ever ask the suffrages or consideration of his citizens. He will stand but little better than the man who fakes disease to keep out of the Army, or who deserts the Army and lives in the swamp rather than risk his precious hide.

"Another objection is raised by some men in active business. They say that if they buy bonds their capital will be absorbed and they can not do business. This is a mistake. The bonds are capital, and they can be used almost at their face value. They are the best collateral in the world, good for loans in any bank. It is probable that the circulation privilege will be extended directly to these bonds, as it is now indirectly. They are practically money drawing interest as distinguished from money idle. They are good for any kind of security. They will be accepted as security on any note or bond. Many business men, especially men in the tobacco business and farmers, who do not use their money the entire year but only during what is called the busy or crop season, will find in these bonds an ideal investment. They need the money 6 months in the year. If they keep their capital in money it is used 6 months in the year and is idle the balance. If they put their money in bonds it earns interest 12 months in the year. They can take the bonds to a bank and borrow for 6 months. They will pay 3 per cent on the money borrowed and used for 6 months and they will get 4½ per cent for the money on the bonds. Money invested in these bonds can be used almost as well as the money itself. The purchase of these bonds is one instance where a person can 'eat his cake and have it, too.' The patriotic citizen can do his duty by the Government and not lose one single cent, but, on the contrary, actually make by the operation. The possession of no collateral in the world rates a man higher in the bank or business world than the possession of United States bonds. It is proof of the man's character, patriotism, and intelligence. A man who owns these bonds will stand distinctly higher in the community and in the business world than the man who does not. The sections of the country which have learned to invest in bonds are now the richest. It is a business transaction which we in North Carolina have neglected too long. It is a business transaction that will transform our habits and will make us richer. The sooner we adopt it the better. Now is the time to increase our patriotism and our prosperity.

"Again, people say these bonds are for the banks, corporations, and rich men. This is unfortunate, if true. They ought to be for the people generally, and especially for old people, widows, guardians, trust estates, and all such institutions as lodges, churches, and societies which have money to invest. They are especially good for those persons who are not engaged in active business and who wish to be assured a certain income, safe from the casualties of business and free from taxation. They are particularly good for farmers and workingmen who wish to accumulate capital, but who do not care to run the risk of loss and who do not want to have litigation over any of their property, with the consequent annoyance and expense. These bonds are the solution of their problems. No tax, no risk of loss, no litigation, no trouble. The Government will permit them to be registered at Washington, so that if a bond be burned or stolen the owner loses nothing. The thief gets nothing except a term in the penitentiary. They are a gilt-edge investment, suited to the needs of a large number of the people, and offered to them on easy terms of payment. If we be wise, we will not let this opportunity pass. We will all be bondholders, and in the period after the war we will not speak bitterly of our neighbors who were wise enough to buy bonds and when we see them enjoying the prosperity they have earned call them 'bloated bondholders.' We will be bondholders ourselves.

"Again, some farmers say, 'We will not buy, because the Government is threatening to fix the price of cotton.' This is no reason. The Government may fix the price of cotton at 30 cents a pound and seed at $1 to $1.05 a bushel, so that an acre of land which shall produce a bale of cotton will return to its owner $180 a year. Twenty years ago we were selling this same bale for $25 and the seed for 12½ cents a bushel. This same bale would bring in the fall of 1898, cotton and seed combined, less than $30. If the Government should fix this price at $180, it would not seem to be a hardship. Fixing the price of cotton will stabilize the price. Everybody will get the same. The man who has to sell during the height of the season will get the same as the man who holds. It is probable that the average farmer will get as much for his cotton under price fixing as he would in the open market. Last year my records show that some cotton sold in September brought only 19 cents and some sold later in the year brought 35 cents or more. The average farmer last year probably did not get 25 cents for his cotton. Few obtained above 30 cents; a great many sold under 20 cents. The fluctuations in a war market are very great, and while I have a good deal of cotton to sell and the present price is delightful, I would not consider it either a hardship or an unreasonable thing for the Government to fix the price at around 30 cents. And I believe the average farmer would get about as much if that price were fixed as if he were left to sell in a market controlled by war conditions and subject to violent fluctuations. Besides this, if the price of cotton be fixed by the Government, mills would be able to sell their goods much cheaper than if the price were not fixed. On the first of February last year cotton dropped 12½ cents a pound—5 cents in one day. During this year it has reached 38 cents a pound, and many predicted the possibilities of 50 cents. A mill taking a contract for cloth and having to buy its cotton in the open market must fix the price for cloth in the light of these violent fluctuations. It must buy the cotton on the open market and carry it till it is needed, or it must buy futures, or it must fix the price at which it sells the goods high enough to protect it from all possible rise. But if the mill knew it could buy cotton at 30 cents, it could calculate and sell profitably at a much smaller margin than at present. Speaking, therefore, as a farmer with cotton to sell and who would much rather ordinarily sell in an open free market, I am convinced that no great hardship will result if the Government shall fix the price of cotton at not under 30 cents a pound. It may be that actual good would be done, not only to the people generally who use cotton and who manufacture cotton but to the men who make the cotton. But whether it be a good thing or not, we ought to remember that the price of sugar and the price of wheat have been fixed for more than a year. Had these prices not been fixed, it is probable that sugar would have been almost unobtainable—25 cents or 30 cents a pound at least. Flour would have been probably $30 a barrel.

"These articles would have been subject to the most violent speculation. They would have been hoarded by selfish people and doled out for blood money. The price would have borne no relation to supply and demand. Many would have suffered while a few would grow rich. We have reasonable prices for these articles of food, because the Government fixed prices, and apparently those who grew or manufactured these articles have suffered no great hardship. A reasonable profit has been left him by the Government. The Government fixed the price of cotton seed last year at $1 to $1.05 a bushel, and the price of the products manufactured therefrom—the meal, hull, and linters. I have heard no great complaint, and people have been able to buy hulls and meal for their stock at prices which have borne a fair relation to the price of cotton seed. The Government furnished a large quantity of nitrate of soda to farmers at cost plus the freight when it needed every pound for munitions. If the Government should decide to fix the price of cotton, we may be sure it will fix it at a price that will leave a profit, and we may also be sure that the Government has taken action only after careful consideration and with a view to doing justice to all sections. The farmers of the South should remember that their product has not been taxed as it was during the Civil War, and its price has not been fixed until long after the prices of sugar and wheat had been fixed. We ought to be just and patriotic enough to consent that the Government shall treat us as it has treated other sections, and we ought not to grumble or forget that we have enjoyed the benefits of price fixing long before we were called upon to suffer any of the inconveniences.

"Q. The Government is offering two kinds of securities, bonds and war-savings stamps. Which is the better?—A. There is no conflict between the bonds and stamps, and the campaign for their sale can be carried on simultaneously. In fact they are the complements of each other. The bonds are intended to furnish a vehicle of investment for money already earned or in sight. The stamps are the vehicle of investment for money which has not already been earned or is in sight, but which must hereafter be earned by industry and saved by economy. I have described the character of money which the Government thinks ought to be put in bonds. The money which ought to be put in stamps is the money which is earned for work, and which will be spent unnecessarily unless the person who earns it has a place to put every single 25-cent piece which he can avoid spending. The rationale of the war-savings stamps is this: The Government asks every person in North Carolina and elsewhere to save during the year 1918 out of his or her earnings $16.75; to lend this money to the Government, and the Government will on January 1, 1923, pay for every $16.75 $20 in good money. This money can then be spent or it can be put in bonds. It will then be accumulated capital. The person who has saved it during the period of cheap money will have the privilege of using it in any way he sees fit, or if he wishes it to become a permanent investment he can buy bonds.

"Q. What will be the effect of the success or comparative failure of this loan?—A. In the first place, the loan will not be a failure. The American people will take it all—every dollar. The only question is whether North Carolina will secure its share, or whether it will let other sections take their share and a part of ours. But the loan will have its effect on the war in comparison as it is taken enthusiastically or grudgingly. If it be taken grudgingly, barely put over, enemy countries will believe the American people are getting tired and they will soon call for a peace by negotiation. They will be encouraged to fight on, hoping that the end may come before they are defeated. If the loan be barely a success, its effect will be to encourage the enemy and to lengthen the war and to cause a greater mortality of American soldiers, as well as increased cost to the American people. On the other hand, if the loan be enthusiastically and willingly taken our enemies will see that the Americans at home are as earnest as our soldiers at the front. They will see that we have just begun, and that we are ready to go to any length.

success her doom; and Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey may one or all decide to quit. If this loan be a huge success, it will reduce the cost of the war greatly, and it will save the lives of

"If the loan be a great success, Germany will read in that thousands of American soldiers. If we wish peace to come quickly, if we wish to stop taxation, if we wish to stop war taxes, if we wish trade to again become free and normal, if we wish to save the lives of our soldiers, if we wish war inconveniences to pass away, if we wish to make our future safe and to get a part of the best investment the world ever saw, we will not fail to take our part, small as our allotment is, and thus do our part.

"Q. How shall we conduct the loan campaign in view of the elections to be held in November—A. I see no embarrassment from this source, but rather a source of strength. Neither party should endeavor to make political capital out of this loan; and I do not believe either party will. I see nothing in this war to change one's political opinions; both parties are loyally supporting the war. As a Democrat, I expect to so continue. Were I a Republican, I would not change my politics because of anything which has developed during this war. Apparently the war is having no effect upon the political status of the country. In New York there were vacancies this spring in four congressional districts—all held by Democrats. The Republicans expected to make gains and probably carry one of the districts. When the election came the Democrats carried all four districts by increased majorities. Last week in Maine there were likewise four districts voting for Congressmen—all held by Republicans. The Democrats were confident of making gains and of electing at least one Congressman, Mr. McGillicuddy. But when the votes were counted it was seen that the Republicans had elected all four Congressmen by increased majorities. Apparently no State is changing its political status because of the war. Republican States and Republicans in Congress are supporting the Government just as valiantly as Democrats. Soon after the war began and conscription was proposed, the Democratic chairman of the Military Committee of the House found he could not conscientiously support the bill, whereupon the President sent for a Republican from California, Mr. KAHN. He took charge of the bill, conducted it through the House, and as large a proportion of the Republicans voted for conscription as did Democrats. Recently when the proposition to reduce the age for military service from 21 to 18 came up a number of Democrats prominent in Congress opposed the bill, but again Mr. KAHN and a number of other Republicans took charge and put the bill through. It is true that when the subject of tariff arises Republicans have a roll call, to go on record and show in the future that they favored raising a larger proportion of revenue from tariff than by direct taxation. But they offer no factious opposition and cause no delay. They assist in perfecting the legislation and merely make a record to preserve their party traditions before the final passage of the bill. You will find the great Republican States of Indiana, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts, with hardly an important chairmanship in the House of Representatives, supporting the war just as steadily as our own State, which possesses two important chairmanships in the Senate, four of the most important in the House, and other chairmanships of high rank. This is the more remarkable because in the House of Representatives there are practically as many Republicans as there are Democrats. The Independents, Socialists, Progressives, and so forth, hold the balance of power—neither Democrats nor Republicans have a majority. It would be highly unpatriotic if Republicans were to endeavor to magnify and capitalize those mistakes which inevitably must be made when a peaceful country enters the greatest of all wars.

"Mistakes were necessary; we have made them. All countries make mistakes in war. Our allies have made mistakes. They have made grievous blunders; and we with 50 years of profound peace, except a little trouble with Spain—which was like a police raid—could not avoid mistakes. We have made no such mistakes from a military standpoint as the great war machine of Germany made when it attacked Belgium. Had the supermen of Germany not made the colossal mistake of attacking Belgium they would probably have won the war within six months. The man or party, therefore, that would magnify the mistakes which were inevitable is doing an unpatriotic act, and is giving aid and encouragement to the enemy. I do not believe Republicans of North Carolina will do this. They certainly have not so far. We Democrats should not, in our work endeavoring to float the liberty loan, claim all or an undue proportion of patriotism. Such a claim would be false in fact and unpatriotic in purpose. We are doing our part; the Republicans are likewise doing theirs. If anyone doubt what the Republican States are doing, let him study Pennsylvania. Let him see what this great State has done in the way of furnishing the materials of war and soldiers. Let him see what it has done in buying bonds, as well as doing everything else from the manufacture of the hughest cannon to generating gases with which to pay our debt to Germany. After seeing what this State has done and is doing, let us remember that this State has not voted for a Democratic President since 1856. She has about one-fifteenth of the population of the Union; but her National Guard was in such fine condition that when the war broke out it was sent almost bodily over, and until the middle of August Pennsylvania seemed from the reports in the Official Bulletin to be furnishing much more than 15 per cent of the casualties. The price was fixed last year on all wheat grown and sugar refined in Pennsylvania. But that has not chilled the people's patriotism. The people of America, especially the Democrats, should take off their hats to Pennsylvania as a recognition of what the Keystone Commonwealth has done in supporting the administration. There should be no class in this drive; and I would like to see in every county and district and State the candidates of the respective parties speak for the loan from the same platform. I would like to see our candidates for the Senate, Messrs. SIMMONS and Morehead, speak from the same platform, and urge the people of North Carolina, irrespective of party, to take the modest proportion assigned to us. In every congressional district I would like to see the candidates likewise in friendly rivalry work for the loan. In our county I would like to see Messrs. Beddingfield and Hester, candidates for the Senate, as well as candidates for all other offices, from the same stand, announce their subscriptions to the loan and to call upon the people to take their part.

"Q. Will every county get credit for the bonds it takes?—A. Yes. Records are kept and the amount of bonds taken by each county is made a perpetual memorial; and the Government keeps a list of the individual purchasers of the bonds. Not only will every county get credit for what it buys and this will be published, but the number of people in that county who buy will be kept and published. This has already been done. I hold in my hand the printed record showing what the counties in this State did in the former loans. Some counties did splendidly; some failed almost entirely. The loan itself would have been a failure in North Carolina had it not been that the banks and corporations took all the people did not take. The people were asleep, and the success of the former loans was solely due to the fact that the banks and corporations took their share, and all the share that the people did not take. You will be surprised how few people in some counties participated in this work, and how many shirked their duty. Here is the list. I am willing to read what some counties did; but I don't want to be unpleasant and I would rather not call the names of the counties. Here is a county where only one person in 500 population subscribed for anything. Here is another where instead of taking their part, which would have been $7.50, the people of the county bought to the amount of only 13 cents per capita. If the people wish to know how any county acted, they have only to write to Mr. J. G. Brown, Raleigh, N. C., and the record of that county will be shown. Not only will these records be kept but the name of every person who subscribes and the amount of the subscription will be kept at Washington. Probably after the war a list of all who shall have subscribed in any manner to bonds or war-savings stamps will be printed in book form. It will be a perpetual roll of honor. Those whose names are in that book for a proper amount will have the respect and consideration due them. Those who do not so appear will have missed an opportunity to serve the Government easily and profitably; and their failure in this respect will be made a perpetual memorial, of which their children and grandchildren will be ashamed."

FOURTH LIBERTY LOAN.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a telegram from one of the great industrial cities of the United States, indicating the alacrity and the liberality with which the fourth liberty loan has been subscribed by the workers of that city. I think it of such interest that it might properly be read from the desk. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

GREAT FALLS, MONT., September 28, 1918.

Hon. T. J. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

In answer to the Huns and autocracy, the citizenship of this city marched in orderly procession to the Rainbow Hotel to-day at 11 o'clock, and within exactly 30 minutes subscribed for $1,280,000 fourth liberty-loan bonds. This does not include subscription of A. C. M. Co. or Montana Power Co. Every single employee on pay roll of B. & M. smelter here, numbering over 1,900, subscribed for at least one bond, the total subscriptions from that source alone being over $190,000.

JOHN E. DAWSON.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 12776. An act to provide further for the national security and defense and for the more effective prosecution of the war by furnishing means for the better utilization of the existing sources of electrical and mechanical power and for the development of new sources of such power, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

EXCLUSION OF ANARCHISTS.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12402) to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Georgia if the matter which he proposes will require any great length of time?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think it will take any time at all. The bill is of such a character that I do not think anyone is opposed to it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I want to make a motion, of which I gave notice the other day.

Mr. HARDWICK. The consideration of this bill will not interfere with that at all. The Senator will have ample opportunity to make his motion.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Georgia?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12402) to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has heretofore been read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, on Tuesday I gave notice that I would move to reconsider the action which the Senate took upon House joint resolution No. 200, known as the woman suffrage amendment to the Constitution. I now make that motion; but I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry, if I may, as to whether or not the action upon such a motion will be determined by a majority vote?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the rule plainly provides that a majority is all that is needed to reconsider.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, Mr. President, I ask that the motion which I have just made may be voted upon. I presume there will be no objection to it. There has been some suggestion that the notice which I gave the other day rather foreclosed any action of the kind, but I am sure it was understood that the notice which was in contemplation of being given to Senators was in connection with the vote upon the passage of the resolution itself. There is no intention to bring the resolution itself to the further attention of the Senate at this time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, did I understand there was a ruling by the Chair that a majority vote could reconsider the vote on the suffrage amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator did.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, Mr. President, may I ask, is that based on an express rule of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is based on the rule of the Senate. A motion to reconsider is a mere subsidiary motion, which does not go to the main question at all, and there is a plain rule of the Senate reading as follows:

When a question has been decided by the Senate, any Senator voting with the prevailing side may, on the same day or on either of the next two days of actual session thereafter, move a reconsideration—

Omitting the next clause—

Every motion to reconsider shall be decided by a majority vote, and may be laid on the table without affecting the question in reference to which the same is made.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, before the Senator from New Mexico proceeds further, I should like to say a few words on the question of the motion to reconsider. If the Senator from New Mexico desires to keep the floor, I will wait until he is through.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am perfectly willing to yield, and will be glad to hear the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I have no criticism whatever of the Chair's ruling, because the ruling of the Chair seems to be absolutely within the terms of the express rule of the Senate, but what I desire to say at this time is that I think it is an unfortunate rule and an unfortunate condition. The purpose of legislative rules is to dispose of the business of the legislative body. The object of a motion to reconsider is manifestly to give an opportunity, where there is a change in the mind of the legislative body, to allow a resolution or bill that has been disposed of to be reconsidered because the attitude of the body itself has changed. It seems to me that the rules of the Senate were evidently written without having in mind a measure the adoption or rejection of which requires a two-thirds vote. The woman suffrage joint resolution might have been defeated by 10 or 12 votes and yet command a majority in the Senate Chamber, and if a mere majority vote can reconsider the action of the body, a resolution of this nature might be kept before the Senate interminably, there being no final conclusion to it.

The possibility of a motion to reconsider in this case arose not from a real change of the conclusion of this body, but because the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] reversed his vote after the decision had been reached. I am not critical; I do not say this in the way of criticism of the Senator from New Mexico, because that is a common procedure; it is a procedure that has often been resorted to in legislative bodies; but I point it out as showing that, if we proceed along lines of this kind, any question that requires a two-thirds vote and yet has a majority behind it can never be finally disposed of by the legislative body.

We seem to be in the unfortunate condition that we have reached that point in the consideration of this matter. I think it is most unfortunate. If it were an ordinary question, it might not be of serious moment, but there are men in this Chamber on one side who feel that the woman-suffrage amendment is vital to certain people who are in favor of it, and there are men on the other side of the question who feel that the passage of the resolution will violate the very fundamental principles of government, and that the very life of the States which they represent may be at stake if the resolution ultimately becomes a law.

The joint resolution has been pending before the Senate for a year. It has been brought to the front more than once for the consideration of this body. It has interfered, and seriously interfered, with the consideration of the great war bills that are necessary to the successful prosecution of the war. I do not mean that it has merely interfered with them by reason of the fact that it has occupied a certain amount of time before the Senate, because I do not claim that it has occupied an undue length of time, considering the magnitude and importance of the questions involved; but I say that, with this resolution pending before the Senate, it took Senators away from the important business of the session; it withdrew their attention from the great war bills that are necessary to carry on this Government.

Men feeling as I do about this matter feel that it is just as serious a problem that confronts them to have the individuality and the sovereignty of their States attacked as it is to face the Hun on the battlefields of Europe. It was a question that necessarily had to be fought out. No man can criticize the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] as to his earnestness or his diligence in trying to bring this measure to a successful conclusion. He reached the battle line more than once; and when he found that he was not strong enough to succeed he withdrew. He has fairly tested his strength in this legislative body; and although we may be unable to prevent the consideration of this measure again, I want to say to the Senator from New Mexico and to those whom he leads in this fight that I am thoroughly convinced in my mind, and I believe the country is, that the men who oppose this joint resolution oppose it from patriotic motives, from a high sense of moral duty to the constituency they represent. Although the Senator may say that we are mistaken in our position, he can not deny the earnestness of the position we take or that we take it from a high sense of patriotic duty to our constituencies.

With that in view, I think it is most unfortunate that the Senator should again threaten the legislation of this session by bringing this disturbing question before us, when there is no indication whatever that a single man in the body who voted against the joint resolution will now or hereafter change his mind on the subject.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama is quite right in assuming that we recognize the earnestness and sincerity of those who have opposed the passage of this joint resolution, but upon the question of procedure I do not believe there can be merit in the position suggested by the Senator. The Chair has ruled that a majority has the right to reconsider the vote. It is a rule adopted by the Senate clearly and in explicit language. While there seems to be no precedent of the Senate itself on the question, there are a number of precedents, as I understand, in the House of Representatives. Moreover, upon the right and justice of the matter, is it not wise that a majority of the Senate should be able to control the procedure of the Senate?

It is true that the Constitution requires that before an amendment to the Constitution may be submitted there shall be a two-thirds vote in favor of it; but do we want to assert that the majority of the Senate shall not have a right to control the procedure of the Senate? Under the ruling of the Chair it seems to me that the motion to reconsider ought to be carried, but I will state now that it is not the intention to bring the original joint resolution to a vote without ample notice to all Senators.

The suggestion has been made that on Tuesday I stated that no vote would be taken upon the motion to reconsider. That language—not just as stated, however—was used by me, but in connection with other language that I think clearly indicated that there would be no vote upon the joint resolution without ample notice. If this motion required a two-thirds vote for its adoption, I would not ask the Senate to act upon it now, but I think it is generally assumed that a majority can always be assembled to support the motion to reconsider. It is because no advantage can be taken of anyone that I ask that the motion to reconsider may be carried, so that the original joint resolution as it came from the House may go to the calendar, to be taken up at some future time, should it appear that there is an opportunity to pass it, and after giving ample notice to all the Senators.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I can not deny the correctness of the ruling of the Chair, as it seems to be based upon very clear English as expressed in Rule XIII of the Senate. It may be a violent assumption on my part, but nevertheless I am inclined to assume that the authors of this rule when it was written did not have in mind a measure of this sort, which, under the Constitution of the United States, requires a two-thirds majority.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to ask a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for a question; yes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to ask the Senator to consider of what avail a contrary decision of the Chair would be. We all know that a mere majority may control the decisions of the Chair; and if the Chair should render a decision which did not meet the views of the majority, the views of the majority would prevail. So in any event, regardless of the construction of the Senator from New York, realizing that the plain language of the rule states that a majority is all that is necessary upon a question of mere construction and of doubtful construction, where the Chair has decided in favor of the plain language of the rule it seems to me a contrary decision would not operate practically to prevent the majority of the Senate from controlling the procedure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hopes there are some Senators who will not imagine that the Chair is ruling because he is afraid of the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from New York was about to observe that the interruption of the Senator from New Mexico seemed to be based upon grounds of expediency in which the Chair had an interest. I am not approaching the subject from that standpoint.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No, Mr. President; I simply suggested that as an additional thought; that is all. I did not mean to reflect upon the ruling of the Chair, either now or at any other time. I merely suggested that thought to the consideration of the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My purpose was to discuss the merits of this rule and to expose, if I could, its inconsistencies. I may be utterly mistaken, but it has always been my experience, in what experience I have had in legislative bodies, that a motion to reconsider, to be successful, must command a number of votes equal to those necessary for the passage of the measure itself.

I can not agree with the definition given by the Chair, to the effect that a motion to reconsider is merely a subsidiary motion, and therefore, I assume, he means comparatively unimportant. As I look upon it, a motion to reconsider involves upon the part of the legislative body a complete retracing of its steps in so far as the passage or defeat of the measure is concerned. It is offered, as I understand, to give an opportunity to the legislative body to correct grievous errors, or to change its mind and give expression thereto.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York hold that, if reconsidered, the joint resolution immediately is adopted?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all; but it gives an opportunity for the passage of the measure thereafter, consequent upon the correction of some grievous error, or a change of mind and conviction on the part of the body having it under consideration.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is it not true that if the motion to reconsider should prevail, the whole matter would be left just where it was when the committee reported it, and the previous action of the Senate would go for nothing?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would. It would be a complete retracing of steps in that respect. If I understand the effect of a successful motion to reconsider, the whole question is opened up anew. The measure may be subject to amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is not that the result of the adoption of a motion to reconsider any measure? When a measure is reconsidered, the whole subject is open for consideration and discussion, just the same as it will be in this case.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

Mr. ROBINSON. A reconsideration of this joint resolution will not be different from a reconsideration of any other resolution or bill that the Senate may have passed or defeated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, the adoption of a motion to reconsider in the case of any measure leaves that measure open to treatment de novo, as it were; but in the event that a measure requires for its passage a two-thirds vote it should not be reopened for consideration after it is once defeated, except by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator if that has not been the rule of this body for a long time?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not say to the Senator from Mississippi how long this rule has been in existence. I do not deny the existence of the rule as printed in the book of rules of the Senate, but I do contend that it is inconsistent with approved parliamentary practice and procedure. I have always believed that a two-thirds vote, when required for the passage of a measure, involves a two-thirds vote for the reconsideration of the failure of the passage of that measure.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator admits that it is the rule now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I admit that it is the rule now.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What the Senator is proceeding to do is to point out a defect in the rules?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; in part.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not had time to examine these questions at all, but I was impressed with what seemed to me to be the absurdity of allowing a mere majority vote of the Senate to remedy the defect in a situation which required a two-thirds vote when it was not possible to secure two-thirds. I wanted to ask the Senator from New York whether in his investigation he has come across any case or any precedent where there has been a motion to reconsider a vote which has been lost, when the carrying of that vote required a two-thirds vote of the Senate? Has any motion ever been made to reconsider a question which required a two-thirds vote for its passage when that vote had been had and lost?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I know of no such incident. It may be that some have occurred, but I know of no such incident. I am inclined to believe that it has been the thought in the minds of most people that such incidents would have aspects of inconsistency, approaching even absurdity, and therefore that they are not often attempted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to make this suggestion to the Senator, if I can do so without interrupting the continuity of his argument: If action requiring a two-thirds vote of the Senate, when that two-thirds is lacking, can be reconsidered by a mere majority of the Senate, then where the question is, say, upon the suspension of a rule, which requires a two-thirds majority, if they fail to produce the two-thirds majority a Member can change his vote and move to reconsider that action by a majority; and then, if they fail again, another Member can change his vote and move to reconsider by a majority, and so on right around a vicious circle, and no judgment ever can be come to upon the question before the Senate. It can be done over and over again.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, that thought has been in my mind and the Senator from Connecticut has expressed it so much better than I could that I shall not endeavor to enlarge upon it. I do think there is an aspect of inconsistency in this situation, and it was to call attention to that which, in my judgment, was inconsistent that I asked the floor.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question regarding the parliamentary status for information. I understand a motion to reconsider was made and the Chair ruled that it was in order under an express rule of the Senate. Has there been any appeal from that ruling?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There has not been.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I think it not improper to say that, in my judgment, there is no question whatever about the ruling of the Chair, and that all of the precedents sustain the decision which the Chair has made. The limited research I have had an opportunity of making convinces me that there is absolutely no authority to the contrary; and in support of the ruling of the Chair I cite volume 2 of Hinds' Parliamentary Precedents, section 1656, and volume 5, sections 5617 and 5618.

Of course the opponents of any proposition do not favor any step which is calculated to promote that proposition; and I am not surprised that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] should oppose the motion to reconsider, because their attitude upon this subject is just as well defined as that of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. Under the parliamentary precedents, however, the motion to reconsider is a means by which a measure which has been lost may be again voted upon; and it is respectfully suggested that, considering the importance of this measure and the narrowness by which it was defeated and the changes that come in the minds of Senators and in the constituency of this body, it is a proper proceeding to give an opportunity to do what we so narrowly failed to do. Every proceeding that may be taken in connection with a constitutional amendment, as has been suggested to me by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], may be accomplished by a majority vote except the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish only a moment, in order to observe that, as has been stated by the Senator from Arkansas, who is a skilled parliamentarian, all proceedings with reference to a constitutional amendment, except the mere vote on the joint resolution, require but a bare majority.

Assume, now, that when this joint resolution is pending here there should be proposed to it an amendment of the most vital character, running to the very roots of the joint resolution. That amendment could be, and would be, carried by a majority vote. Moreover, if there should be a tie, under the Constitution the Vice President would have the authority to break that tie. We all recall, though I was not here at the time, that upon the proposed constitutional amendment looking toward the election of United States Senators by the people three ties occurred within one-half hour on an amendment proposed to that joint resolution; and the beloved and lamented Vice President, Mr. Sherman, cast, and properly cast, the deciding vote on those three ties within that half hour, notwithstanding arguments were made against his right to cast that vote. But the question is parliamentarily settled in my mind that a mere majority may adopt or reject any amendment to the joint resolution; that the Vice President has the right to cast a vote in the event of a tie on an amendment; and the only proceeding where a two-thirds majority of the Senate is required is on the passage of the joint resolution itself.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course there can be no question about the rule of the Senate. I do not agree with my friend the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] that that is merely a technical prohibition. I have not had time to look at the textbooks with regard to it; I know the House precedents are in favor of the majority rule, but on general principles it seems to me it is clear that it can be carried by a majority. I think the term used by the Chair, "subsidiary motion," was correct. Every motion is subsidiary to the decisive motion which decides the fate of the bill or amendment. There is no question that a majority can postpone to a day certain, postpone indefinitely, lay upon the table, amend, substitute. They can do all those things.

There is, to my mind, no question upon the matter of the law, as I understand it, that the majority can also reconsider. I see no escape from it as a logical position on the general principles of parliamentary law.

Does anyone question that if a motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table prevailed by a majority it would go to the table? If you can kill it by a majority, you can pass it by a majority. Of course, it leaves the whole subject open. It does not by any means go back; it does not retrace all our steps, because that would carry it back to its introduction and its reference. It undoes the vote by which it was defeated, and leaves it in precisely the same position it was before it was defeated, just as if the motion were reversed on an ordinary bill. The bill had been lost. The motion to reconsider the vote brings the bill again before the Senate and then the bill passes. It is the opportunity given by the motion to reconsider to change the action of the Senate on the one single decisive vote.

Although I have not had time to search the textbooks, it is very clear in my own mind that the whole philosophy of the situation demands that a majority should take this action. I see no particular object in doing it, but the merits of the question have nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the position taken by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], it seems to me, meets with an answer in the statement that no matter how many times a motion to reconsider is made by a majority vote when it comes to the passage of the measure and fails of the two-thirds by not getting a two-thirds majority there is no harm done in the matter. The rights of the parties are not changed; the resolution is not passed. Consequently it seems to me it is a wise rule as to the procedure of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I was only going to say that a two-thirds vote is required by the Constitution.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. It must be passed by the Houses and it must be a record vote. If, for instance, the House chose to amend it, it could amend it, and the Senate could accept the amendment by a majority, and put the measure in a new form, but there must be a two-thirds vote on the final passage.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That was the position raised by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] the other day, that the amendment had to be passed by a two-thirds vote, but if the Senate chose to amend the joint resolution the amendment can be passed by a majority vote, and the two-thirds vote is only necessary upon the final passage of the constitutional amendment.

But, Mr. President, all this is a question of policy as to the procedure of the Senate. Those arguments were very proper to be made in determining what kind of a rule should be made, but I can not see how it can be the subject of question here when the very rule which we adopted, and thought was a wise rule to adopt, provides that every motion to reconsider shall be decided by a majority vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Nobody is disputing it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; let us vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is all I insist on.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I recorded my vote against this proposed amendment at the time it was before the Senate, but did not occupy the floor to discuss it. I am intensely against it. I believe that the debate upon the subject weakened rather than strengthened the amendment. I regret exceedingly that a motion to reconsider is to be made, because I think the agitation of this question and the time consumed with it both in the Senate, in the House, and in the States should not take place when we are in the discharge of a much higher duty, our duty to prepare for the struggle in which we are engaged to defeat the enemy of this country and the enemy of government by the people throughout the world. But, Mr. President, at this time it is hardly worth while to enter into discussion. The decision of the Chair so clearly follows the rule, the rule so clearly controlled the decision of the Chair, that however illogical the rule might be, that was a question for consideration when the rule was adopted.

I can see no possible way by which the Chair could hold a rule expressly declaring that a motion to reconsider may be passed by a majority vote meant it could only be passed by a two-thirds vote. Language could not have been made clearer than that of this rule.

Mr. President, I am earnestly against putting the burden proposed by this resolution upon the good women of this country. I have no doubt that the majority of the best women of my State are themselves strongly opposed to it. I ask to have read a telegram that I received from New Jersey. I ask it while I am on my feet because if the request is not granted I shall read it myself. I send it to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SUMMIT, N. J., October 2, 1918.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

In the name of New Jersey Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, I congratulate you and commend your courage and steadfast adherence to conviction. The war will be over without sacrificing the ideals and principles of the Constitution, to the lasting glory of the men who have held honor above politics.

Mrs. CARROLL P. BASSETT, President.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire thus publicly to acknowledge the receipt of that telegram and to thank the sender.

I hold in my hand an editorial which appeared on yesterday in the New York Journal of Commerce. I regard it as an excellent discussion of this subject. It is a presentation of the real spirit of the Constitution with reference to the right of the people of each State to control suffrage in their respective States. I ask that it be read from the Secretary's desk, and with that I shall take up no further time, but I shall hope when this subject comes up at a future day to present much more elaborately my objections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IS SUFFRAGE A WAR QUESTION?

The main point in President Wilson's appeal to the Senate to join with the House in proposing to the States the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting equal suffrage to women was that it is "vitally essential to the success of the great war of humanity in which we are engaged." He seemed to assume that there could be no two opinions about that. There certainly are two opinions among American women themselves, and those opposed to it are no less loyal and no less devoted to the cause of winning the war than the others. It is not complimentary to them, it is not just to them to assume otherwise. They are not the ones who ever imply that they would be more devoted if they had the vote or that any of them will be less so if it is not granted to all. The suffrage question has been thrust in at this time for the purpose of using this argument, which, if valid, would not be creditable to American women. They are making sacrifices and giving loyal support to the cause at stake in every way they can without distinction of party on this question or any other, and that is the thing that ought to be recognized and heartily credited to them.

Reference to what other nations or governments are doing about it is not pertinent. This Nation is a democratic union of States independent in their local affairs and united in the direction of affairs that concern the Union as a whole as a Nation in relation with other nations of the world. Popular opinion is supposed to control public action, and the closer it comes to the things to be done the more effective it will be in the support of governmental conduct and the stronger will be the force of the Nation as a nation. It is a fundamental principle that those things which closely concern the people in their daily life and their local rights and interests shall be under their control in the several States. Woman suffrage has been adopted in some States and may be in others, ultimately in all of them, when they are ready for it; certainly when a majority of their people desire it. That is likely to be whenever a majority of the women desire it in their own States, for they can make their influence felt. They might even be consulted in advance by a vote on the question, as has been done in certain cases. What is objectionable is that one State should impose it upon another, or any number of States should impose it upon all others against the will of their own people. That is distinctly inconsistent with democratic doctrine, especially as it is applied in this Union of States.

We do not believe that the agitation which has been worked up and carried into Congress is helping in the war, but rather the contrary. Congress can not grant the right of suffrage. It can only propose to the States an amendment to the Federal Constitution, which three-fourths of them—while all are free to adopt it for themselves—might impose upon the rest, however much any of these might object. In no case would this extend the right to vote beyond the present limit before this war is over, unless it is to last for years instead of months, which we do not believe. The proposed amendment would have to be ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States or by conventions in three-fourths of them, whichever method Congress might propose. This would keep up the agitation in the States where woman suffrage is not already in effect long after Congress had got rid of the subject by sending it to them. That would not help in the support of the war or tend to bring the people closer together in that support, but rather divert their attention from that task, if not weaken their support of the administration that had insisted upon having it thrust upon them.

People have a right to regard equal suffrage for men and women in these States as a sacred cause, but it is one that has arisen after its Government has been in operation in States and the union of States more than a century. It is not an emergency case springing up in time of war, but it needs to be calmly considered on its merits and with reference to its practical effect in time of peace. As there is no chance of getting it into effect before the war is over, it is far better to wait until that time before it is agitated as a national matter. It is in reality a State matter, and when that time comes it ought still to be considered as such and treated as such, each State deciding the matter for itself. It is to be feared that the President will weaken his present support instead of strengthening it by insisting upon action by Congress now. As he says, it is not a party question, but it is a question upon which there is a wide division of sentiment.

Mr. LODGE. In this connection I ask to have the little extract from a newspaper which I send to the desk read. It records an interesting and melancholy fact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

JERSEY SUFFRAGISTS LOSE—DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION REJECTS PROPOSED PLANK IN STATE PLATFORM.

TRENTON, N. J., October 1.

An attempt to insert a plank indorsing woman suffrage in the platform of the Democratic Party of New Jersey failed to-day after a stormy session of the State convention called to adopt a declaration of principles for the coming campaign. The plank was opposed by James R. Nugent, former State chairman, who offered a substitute leaving the suffrage question to the voters of municipalities to determine.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator be kind enough to inform us what action has been taken by the Republican State convention in New Jersey?

Mr. LODGE. They adopted a suffrage plank.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate failed to pass House joint resolution No. 200.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Bankhead	Henderson	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Benet	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Smoot
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Sutherland
Calder	Kellogg	Nugent	Thomas
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Overman	Townsend
Culberson	Kenyon	Owen	Trammell
Cummins	Kirby	Page	Underwood
Curtis	Knox	Penrose	Vardaman
Dillingham	La Follette	Phelan	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Lenroot	Poindexter	Walsh
Gerry	Lodge	Robinson	Warren
Gore	McKellar	Saulsbury	Wilfley
Gronna	McLean	Shafroth	Williams
Guion	McNary	Sheppard
Hale	Martin, Ky.	Shields

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote on the rejection of House joint resolution 200, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 200) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution failed to receive the two-thirds vote necessary for its passage.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY—BUSINESS OF THE SENATE.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Monday next.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, does not the Senator from Virginia think he had better withhold that motion until we see whether or not some of the important matters that are to come up are disposed of to-day?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is a very general desire among Senators to know whether or not the sessions will be continued, in order that they may make arrangements accordingly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should myself like to know that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not think there are any important matters which will not be disposed of to-day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. My doubt as to whether or not they would be so disposed of was the reason for asking the question.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Federal Trade Commission in its report to the President——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Chair has not yet put the question on my motion.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought that it had been declared carried.

Mr. KENYON. There was no opportunity to vote against the motion, and some of us desire to vote against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa state that certain Senators desire to vote against the motion of the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; to vote against the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not yet put the question on the motion.

Mr. GORE. I was trying to get the attention of the Chair as soon as the announcement was made, but I do not think the question was put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico was put.

Mr. GORE. The question on the motion relative to the joint resolution was put, but I referred to the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] to adjourn over until Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair can entertain that motion; but what does the Senate propose to do with the joint resolution the vote with reference to which has been reconsidered?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask that the joint resolution may go to the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be taken.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I merely want to ask the Senator from Virginia to withhold his motion until we may get some statement of the Senator's view as to the future disposition of the Senate as to the transaction of business at this session.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. My motion is that when the Senate adjourns to-day it stand adjourned until Monday next at 12 o'clock meridian. Has that motion been carried?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion has not yet been put. Several Senators have asked the Senator from Virginia to withhold the motion.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that a great many Senators want to leave town at an early date, and they would like to know what they are to expect in the way of future attendance. So if the Senator from Virginia can make any statement along that line personally I should appreciate it very much.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, while it is not exactly in order, I am very willing to express my personal opinion as to the probable conduct of the business in the Senate.

I am advised by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the other House that the big Army deficiency bill, which is now under consideration, he thinks will be reported to the House on Monday a week; that is, the 14th of this month. He thinks that two days will be sufficient in which to pass it in that body. That will be the 16th of October, when that bill will be over here. It will have to go to committee. It has, however, been so thoroughly, exhaustively, and ably considered in the other House by the committee there that I do not think it will need remain long in the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. Neither do I think it will remain long before the Senate.

I am inclined to the opinion that the Army deficiency bill, which carries from $7,000,000,000 to $9,000,000,000, will pass the Senate before the 20th of October. After that bill shall have been passed the revenue bill is the only other matter of vital necessity of which I know that need occupy for any considerable length of time the attention of the Senate. I am advised by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], that he can not see his way clear to hold out any assurance that the Senate Finance Committee can dispose of that bill before the election. So my opinion is that when the Army deficiency bill shall have been passed, which will be about the 20th of this month, the Senate might wisely and safely take an adjournment to such time as will enable the Finance Committee of the Senate to complete the revenue bill—perhaps for 30 days, though I have not figured on the exact time—but there should be, and in my opinion it is the wish of the Senate, an adjournment; not a recess; that there should be an adjournment after we shall have passed the Army deficiency appropriation bill, which, as I have said, can be done by the 20th of October. Then there ought to be an adjournment for something like 30 days. That, in my opinion, is the wise course for the Senate to take, and I believe, after conference with many Senators, it is the concensus of opinion that it ought to be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to ask if between now and October 14 we are to take adjournment for three days at a time, or what is to be the program in the meantime?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think we ought to have adjournments for three days at a time unless there is something that requires consideration, and, if any Senator has a matter which he wants the Senate to act upon and he will ask the Senate to sit, I have no doubt the Senate will sit and take up such matters as are presented.

Mr. President, with that explanation, which is simply my personal opinion, I ask the Chair to put my motion, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian of Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Montana that I intend to occupy the floor for only a very few moments.

Mr. President, the Federal Trade Commission, in a report to the President on July 3, 1918, charged that five of the largest packing concerns doing business in this country are working conjointly to violate the laws of the United States. I recognize that it has been very popular in the past to criticize the packers, and I am not going in any way, shape, or form at this time to excuse them for any violation of the law, if the law has been violated in the past by them; but I feel, Mr. President, that the recent investigation of the Federal Trade Commission was ex parte; it was closed without permitting the packers interested in the hearing to meet any of the charges or afford them an opportunity to explain any of the correspondence and other data taken from their files.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SMOOT. In a few minutes I will yield to the Senator. I am quite sure, Mr. President, that if the facts were known, instead of criticizing the action of the packers for the last year those engaged in the industry would be commended. Some of the most severe criticisms found in the report have been based upon actions of the packers which they were compelled under the orders of the Food Administration to carry out.

In connection with the report of the Federal Trade Commission, Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] the other day introduced and had placed in the RECORD a petition signed by the secretary of the National Live Stock Association and by different members of what is known as the "market committee" of that association. I am quite sure that, if that association knew the facts in the case, they never would have written such a petition to Congress. There has been a complete statement and summary of the report of the Federal Trade Commission of July 3, 1918, on the meat-packing industry prepared by certain representatives of the industry which deals with the very questions which have been so bitterly criticized; and I think that if any Senator will read the statement he will admit that not only is the report of the Trade Commission sensational, but that the conclusions in many respects are absolutely false.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KENDRICK. I ask the Senator if he does not know that the packers were given an opportunity to appear before the Federal Trade Commission on the understanding that they would waive immunity from prosecution and that they declined?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not know that; and the Senator does not know it.

Mr. KENDRICK. I do know it; and that is not all. I know also that 28 years ago——

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well, we are talking now of the year 1918; I am not talking of something that happened 28 years ago.

Mr. KENDRICK. Of course, if the Senator does not want to look at the facts, that is a different thing altogether.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not looking at the facts of 28 years ago; I am confining my remarks to the report of the Federal Trade Commission recently published.

Mr. KENDRICK. Very well; the Senator from Utah confined his remarks the other day to the memorial I introduced, but he overlooked the fact, when he said that that memorial, which represented an expression of the other side of the case, ought not to go into the RECORD, that 10 days or so before that he had introduced into the same RECORD the protest of the chamber of commerce, which occupied two or three times as much space, showing the other side of the question; and, along with that publication, he introduced into the RECORD two long newspaper editorials.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken again. The Senator from Utah did not introduce anything of the kind.

Mr. KENDRICK. Did not the Senator, I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing, introduce that matter into the RECORD?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator need not ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing. He need only ask me; and I say I did not do anything of the kind.

Mr. KENDRICK. The RECORD will show.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly, the RECORD will show. It will show that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] introduced it; and I wish to say that the Senator from Illinois introduced it in connection with a speech he was delivering.

Mr. KENDRICK. I will ask the Senator another question: Did the Senator from Utah oppose the printing of that matter in the RECORD?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, no one is opposed to the printing of anything in the RECORD when it is a part of the speech of a Senator. The opposition to printing in the RECORD, I will say to the Senator, is directed to the practice, during the consideration of morning business, of presenting matter for printing in the RECORD. I will ask the Senator from Arizona, the chairman of the committee, if that is not the case?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There is ordinarily no objection to a Senator printing matter in the RECORD in connection with a speech he is making. The objection lies to the printing of matter of various kinds in the RECORD during the morning hour.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming now that so far as I am concerned he can fill the RECORD every day with petitions; he can put into the RECORD now photographs of cattle, of pigs, of men, of shingle mills, of cows, and everything else that he chooses. In the past I have tried to protect the RECORD against all kinds of extraneous matter. My belief is that nothing should go into the RECORD unless it is said upon the floor or in connection with a Senator's speech.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that I was anxious at that time to have something to say upon this subject and to include the memorial as a part of my remarks, but was interrupted and prevented from doing so. I call his attention to another fact in connection with it, and that is that during my year and a half or more of service in the Senate I have not burdened, I think, to as great an extent as two pages, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with anything that I have introduced.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah did not know the contents of that petition. The Senator from Wyoming knows that similar protests have been made by the Senator from Arizona when he has been in the Chamber during the morning hour, no matter what the petition contained. The Senator from Arizona has asked the Senator from Utah, in his absence, to object on behalf of the Committee on Printing to the insertion of matter in the RECORD during the morning hour. I have no feeling about it toward the Senator from Wyoming.

I had no information in regard to what the petition he presented contained, and I say to the Senator now that just as soon as the morning business was over he could have taken the floor, could have said what he wanted to say, and could have put the petition in the RECORD, as other Senators do, under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I ask permission to interrupt the Senator just once more in order to reply, and then I shall be through.

In a recent issue of one of our daily papers I noticed a severe arraignment of my action in putting this petition into the RECORD, and a statement that "now a number of the citizens of my State would have the pleasure of reading their names in the RECORD," and suggesting that "it would not make any difference to them how much the RECORD was unnecessarily burdened." I call the attention of the Senate at this time to the fact that in that memorial there were only four or five names, and the only name of any citizen of my State was that of a former Member of this body, Hon. Joseph M. Carey, of Wyoming.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not see what the Senator is driving at. I want to say to the Senator that if he takes any notice of newspaper criticisms, he will not be able to do anything else while in public life. On the other hand, I will say to the Senator that I was criticized for objecting to the petition going into the RECORD.

Mr. KENDRICK. The Senator from Utah was not criticized in the article to which I refer, but he was lauded for his efforts to protect the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. That may have been in one paper. I am speaking of the other papers that have criticized me for trying to prevent petitions going into the RECORD; but that is all past, Mr. President.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does not the rule—which has been more honored in the breach than in the observance—provide that only memorials from the legislatures of the respective States shall be printed in the RECORD in the morning hour, and that it takes unanimous consent to put in any other kind of petition?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Utah have called that rule to the attention of this body not once, not 100 times, but—I was going to say almost a thousand times—but it made no difference in the case referred to. That is the rule; and the Senator from Wyoming, after the rule was called to his attention, moved, notwithstanding the objection that was made, that the petition should be printed in the RECORD, and the Senate voted that it should be done. Since that time the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Utah have not worried themselves as to what is going in the RECORD.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I have a recollection of something being put into the RECORD the other day by the Senator from Utah which occupied two or three pages of the RECORD. What was that?

Mr. SMOOT. I will state what that was, Mr. President; Mr. John M. Browning, of Ogden, the inventor of most of the improvements on pistols and guns that have been invented in this country——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, how many of them have been manufactured?

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator refer to Browning guns? I mean to say that there never was an improvement of which he has not been the inventor on a Remington or most of the other guns.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What good does it do to invent the gun if you do not get the gun?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator I want to state that I was intending to read that article into the RECORD in connection with my speech, but at the request of the Senator from Minnesota it was read from the desk; and I want to say that there is not a man in the United States who has done a greater service to his Government or to our allies than John M. Browning. I think a resolution of Congress ought to be passed extending to him the thanks of Congress for his wonderful inventions.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Did he not interfere with the production of the Lewis gun?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not think he has interfered with the production of any gun.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I know; but the War Department took up the Browning gun and turned down the Lewis gun.

Mr. SMOOT. Because of the fact that the Browning gun was the better gun.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But we have not very many guns. The result is that we have not any guns at all in any large quantity.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not the fault of Mr. Browning.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But the Senator says he has done a service to the country. He interfered with the production of machine guns needed in this war.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well, Mr. President, that is lugging into this discussion another question that is entirely out of place, and Mr. Browning had nothing to do with it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I asked the question because I hope the Senator is not going to give up his efforts to protect the RECORD; and I wondered at the time, if the Senator was trying to protect the RECORD, why he really violated what he himself was trying to do.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Iowa need not express any such thought as that. The Senator had a perfect right, in connection with the remarks he made, to read that article, and I would not object, as I told the Senator from Wyoming, if after the morning hour he had taken the floor and read the petition and said whatever he wanted to. No Senator would have objected to that proceeding, because that is not a violation of the rules of this body.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what is the regular order.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not intend to occupy the floor for two minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not intend to interrupt the Senator with regard to the matter of the RECORD—what has been inserted in it or what not—but when the Senator was first interrupted he had made, with a great deal of emphasis, what I consider to be a very grave charge, which is that the report of the Federal Trade Commission upon the packers was in some respects absolutely false. That, of course, impugns the integrity or the ability, or both, of the commission. I should like to ask the Senator whether he makes that charge with a knowledge of the facts, or merely upon the report of the packers in answer to the report of the commission?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I make that statement upon a report prepared by the representatives of the meat-packing industry. They are perfectly willing to stand by that report, and when the attention of the Federal Trade Commission is called to it I think they will admit the fact.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. This is a very important matter, and I should like to ask the Senator from Utah, in all seriousness, if he states to this body that he has in his possession either letters or documents from the packers denying the truth of that report and saying that it is not correct?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I intend to put this report into the RECORD just exactly as it is presented to me, and I ask the Senator then to read the report.

Mr. GRONNA. I make this inquiry in all seriousness, because I think it is a matter that concerns the entire country. I will say for the benefit of the Senator from Utah, as a Member of the Agricultural Committee, having taken considerable pains to ascertain the truth, and having an open mind on the question, that at no time have the packers denied the correctness of the report, so far as the committee knows.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have nothing further to say than this: I have the report here, and as a part of my remarks I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and I ask the Senator from North Dakota to read it, as well as the other Members of the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what report he refers to? Is it the report of a committee?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a general statement or summary of the report of the Federal Trade Commission of July 13, 1918, made to the President, on the meat-packing industry.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not the report of the committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce on the report of the Trade Commission?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not that. It is a report prepared by the representatives of the meat-packing industry of this country. I want it to go into the RECORD, and I want every Senator to read it, and to see the explanations on some of the criticisms that are made against the packers for carrying out the instructions that were given to them by the Food Administration.

Mr. FLETCHER. Has it not already been printed in the RECORD? Is the Senator certain as to that?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that it has never been printed in the RECORD; and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

GENERAL STATEMENT ON SUMMARY OF THE REPORT OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION OF JULY 3, 1918, ON THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

"The Federal Trade Commission, in a report to the President, July 3, 1918, asserts that five of the largest packing concerns doing business in this country are in combination in restraint of trade and are working collusively to—

"Manipulate live-stock markets.

"Restrict interstate and international supplies of foods.

"Defraud both the producers of food and consumers.

"Crush effective competition.

"Secure special privileges from railroads, stockyards companies, and municipalities, and profiteer.

"The investigation of the Trade Commission was an ex parte proceeding, and was closed without permitting the packers interested a hearing on any of the charges or affording them an opportunity to explain any of the correspondence and other data taken from their files, which, unexplained, has led the commission into making many charges unsupported by the facts, and doubtless is responsible for the constructions that have been placed upon the letters and other data at variance with their true purport and meaning; consequently the report abounds in inaccuracies, contradictions, and misconceptions.

"It is not the purpose to enter into a criticism of the commission or to question the sincerity of its motives, but we shall undertake, briefly, to show that the commission has erred, through lack of full information, and has misjudged and misconstrued much of the material collected by it.

"EARLY HISTORY OF INDUSTRY.

"The report undertakes to establish its charges by setting forth in chronological order some of the early history of the packers, while the industry was in a formative period, beginning with a report made in 1890—28 years ago—by a committee in the United States Senate; following this with a reference to the so-called 'Veeder pool' and the formation by three of the large packers of the National Packing Co.

"The report seems to treat all these matters of ancient history as if they were new discoveries, and attempts to invest them with a living significance, although they admit in their report that the so-called 'Veeder pool' was terminated early in 1902—16 years ago—that the National Packing Co. was dissolved in 1912, and the report expressly says, on page 26:

"NO DRESSED-MEAT POOL.

"'There is apparently no "dressed-meat" pool at the present time such as existed in the nineties, for the reason that it would be as useless as a fifth wheel on a wagon.'

"The National Packing Co. was voluntarily dissolved. Although its history was involved indirectly in legal proceedings, no court ever held that it in any manner violated any law of this country. Yet, notwithstanding this, the commission has undertaken to give a greater significance to it than did the courts of the country, after hearing all the facts connected with its history and the purpose of its formation.

"There has been evolution in the ideas of the business world, as there have been in the political policies of the people.

"The enormous economic difficulties of a quarter century ago, with imperfect and inadequate transportation systems and means of communication, violent political upheavals, and the like, produced conditions that could not be avoided, and this fact is not peculiar to any particular line of business, but is more or less evident in the history of every great industrial enterprise of this country. And it is one of the paradoxes of the age that even in very recent times there has been established many large concerns, seemingly with the sanction of the Government, whose organization was along lines similar to that of the National Packing Co. But be that as it may, it can be positively asserted, without fear of proof to the contrary, that there are not in effect any agreements or understandings among the packers such as are charged by the commission. The old pools and other matters hereinbefore referred to belong to a dead past, and each concern is conducting its business independently and without regard to the policies of any other rival, be it great or small.

"The commission then states that there exists at this time a conspiracy in restraint of trade, but offers no affirmative proof of its existence.

"No witness has testified that there exists an agreement or contract between the five packers to effect or accomplish any of the illegal purposes charged by the commission, nor has any witness testified to any facts from which an inference can be drawn that any such agreements now exist.

"By a broad stretch of the imagination and misinterpretation of the significance of certain quoted documents and letters set forth in the report the commission attempts to establish its erroneous findings.

"Charges of commission: The principal matters offered as proof of the existence of an illegal combination at this time are as follows:

"First. The alleged uniformity from year to year in the percentage of cattle, hogs, sheep, and calves purchased by each of the five packers during the last five years.

"Second. An agreement to form an international meat pool, to regulate and divide the shipments of meat from South America to the United States and certain foreign countries, particularly England.

"Third. Alleged agreements relating to other lines than the purchase of live stock and the sale of meats, namely, cheese and lard compound.

"Fourth. The maintenance by the five packers of certain joint funds raised for the purpose of protecting the interests of the general industry in matters affecting their common interest.

"The foregoing constitute the principal circumstances advanced by the commission in support of its contention.

"Survey of development of industry: Before making specific answer to the several alleged grounds of complaint above stated an answer may be found to much that has been said in the report of the commission by a brief survey of the history of the packing industry.

"It must be constantly kept in mind that the industry is dealing in perishable products. When the industry first began there were scarcely any of the modern means, methods, and equipments for the economical handling of perishable products on a national scale, such as modern refrigerator cars, cold-storage plants, refrigerator ships, etc., and the distribution of fresh meats was principally confined to the large centers of population contiguous to where the animals were slaughtered; hence fresh meats could not be transported very great distances, as at the present time, so that the conditions required the exportation of live stock to Europe and the shipment of live stock to the large centers of population for purposes of slaughter.

"It must be further remembered that in the early stages every great industry in this country underwent evolutionary transformations in order to effect economies in the production, manufacture, and distribution of products essential to the economic welfare of this Nation, and which now constitute the basic commercial power and strength so essential to the sustenance of this great Nation and its allies in their struggle to maintain the ideals of modern civilization, the liberties of the free peoples of the world, and the emancipation of those yet lingering under the yoke of despotism and autocracies, so that the early efforts of the packing industry to effect economical methods in handling a perishable product and to place same on a stable basis was not an action peculiar to that industry, but one common at that time to every great commercial enterprise in this country.

"Stock yards established: It became a necessity to establish markets for the proper receipt and handling of all live stock, wherein the producers thereof would be assured of a constant market of sufficient capacity and financial strength to absorb all live stock shipped to it, no matter at what season of the year or the quantity flowing into it at any time. This made it necessary to establish stockyards of sufficient capacity to handle the receipts of each market, the location being governed by the proximity of the live-stock raising sections of the country. The producers of the live stock were unable and did not provide such facilities for caring for their product from the time of the arrival at the market until sold. and the railroad companies did not provide such facilities, so that it devolved upon the packers, at enormous cost, to establish and maintain the stockyards. In order to maintain a market at each of these points and to assure the producers of a sale of their products, it became necessary for the packers to see that all live stock arriving at the various markets found a ready sale. The packers did not acquire the stockyards and establish new ones at new centers in order to secure any peculiar or mysterious advantage over the industry, but it had to be done in order to secure proper facilities for accommodating the business and furnish fair treatment to the shippers. The stockyard companies have no financial interest whatever in the live stock. In the first place, all live stock is consigned to a commission firm who acts as agent of the owner of the stock, who have their salesmen, being expert judges of the different kinds of live stock, and who are also posted on market conditions, who sell their stock to the different packers.

"After slaughtering the animals it was necessary that a market be found for the sale of the meat, which had to be disposed of quickly, and very often at a loss, due to the fact that each of the packers would ship indiscriminately into all the consuming markets that could be reached large quantities of fresh meats, and often more than could be consumed before it spoiled, thereby entailing large financial losses and the depression of prices that threatened the industry and materially affecting the values of live stock. In this manner some markets would be glutted and others would be short of fresh-meat supplies. This condition no doubt gave rise to the efforts of many engaged in the packing industry to effect economics to prevent the waste of food and financial losses incidental thereto by the unscientific methods employed in marketing their products, which doubtless accounted for their efforts to regulate the quantities of fresh meats to be shipped to the several markets. The same conditions were encountered and, to some extent, exist to-day in other fields of commerce, notably those affecting the producers of fruits and vegetables from California to Florida. Such producers maintain associations and exchanges to direct the distribution of their products in order to prevent glutting of markets and providing insufficient supplies to other markets. Such was the purpose of the so-called Veeder pool, which popular sentiment seems to sanction when effected by producers of raw material, but condemns in the manufacturers and dealers of the products.

"Cold storage: In order that the packers might preserve the surplus meats shipped to the various consuming markets which could not be promptly sold, cold-storage plants had to be established. This also devolved upon the packers.

"Refrigerator cars: Another step in extending the market for live stock and also supplying the public in more remote regions with fresh meats daily came from the development and improvement of refrigerator cars. Such cars for handling fresh meats require special construction and equipment, as the load is suspended from the roof of the car and not loaded upon the floor. In this respect refrigerator cars constructed for carrying fruits, vegetables, and other perishable products differ from the meat cars and are not adapted for transporting meat. The railroads would not furnish same, so this also devolved upon the packers.

"Icing stations. An additional requirement, made necessary to insure the delivery of fresh meats in remote regions in these cars, was facilities for reicing same in transit. This required the construction of icing stations, where plants had to be established for that purpose. This also devolved upon the packers; for, unless reicing is properly and promptly done when necessary, meat in transit will spoil, causing a waste of food and a loss to the packers.

"Refrigerator ships. A further development of the industry came with the creation of refrigerator ships, which revolutionized the trade with foreign countries. Formerly live stock were transported to such countries and there slaughtered. The development of the refrigerator ship enabled the packers to establish plants in South America and to transport fresh frozen meats to foreign countries more economically than under the methods formerly prevailing.

"It is a fact that the packer did not become interested in the development of packing houses in South America and other foreign countries until there was a decrease in the production of live stock in this country, which together with a fast increasing population threatened a shortage that either the American packer had to provide for by shipping products from other countries, or we would have been in the position of buying products that we were short of not only from foreign countries but from foreign companies as well, and until the war broke out in Europe in 1914, regular imports of beef and mutton were being received into this country from South America consisting principally of a quality, the shortage of which existed here through the breaking up of the large ranges of the country.

"The European war changed the situation not only in South America and Australia but in this country as well. In the former it can be readily seen that as practically all the refrigerated ships handling these products were operating under the British flag it was a simple matter for that Government to commandeer them, leaving the only outlet for the product to Great Britain and her allies. This situation became very acute as the war continued and the herds in these various warring countries were rapidly depleted, and that situation so continued until our participation in the war, throwing all of our resources of meat-food products to the support of our armies and those of our allies.

"In this connection it can not be disputed that were it not for the magnitude of the meat-packing industry, both in this country, South America, and Australia, organized largely by the American packers, the feeding of our armies and those of our allies would not have been possible to anything like the extent that it is, as only by the concentration of large numbers of live stock, the slaughtering, packing, and curing of these products, both frozen, cured, and in cans, was it possible to relieve the tense food situation in Europe, and at the same time take care of the increasing demand brought about by mobilization of our forces at the different camps in this country and those abroad. It will be shown later how vital it was to our country and our allies in the present world struggle—the foresight and enterprise of the packers in establishing these plants; and it will be further shown how gravely the commission erred in its misconception of the facts surrounding the handling of that business.

"Branch houses: Finally, the packers established branch houses in various sections of the country where they had established business, and also operated what is known as car routes, through which agencies supplies of fresh meats and other perishable food products were made available to the population in the most remote sections of our country, which caused an enormous increase in the demand for such supplies and furnished a steady market for many products of the farm, which had theretofore been very limited and confined to certain short seasons of the year.

"The branch houses are an essential part of the packing-house business. They are provided with the necessary equipment to handle the business and store surplus supplies, and are operated by a staff of skilled and competent men who have a thorough knowledge of the business, and upon whose energy and ability the financial success of the company must depend.

"Branch houses necessary to maintain markets: It will be shown later how essential it is to a steady market to maintain these branch houses, as they are the prime distributing agencies through which the public must depend for a steady supply of the products handled by them; and likewise they are the agencies which are in touch with local conditions and demands in various sections of the country and furnish much of the information as to daily requirements of such supplies; otherwise, there would be no method of knowing what quantity of supplies each section of the country requires. The demand of the various sections constantly changes, and a thousand different forces enter into and influence it, such as changing seasons, local supplies of fresh vegetables and other foods, industrial prosperity or adversity, and numerous other causes.

"Alleged market manipulation: The Federal Trade Commission undertakes to shroud the packing business in an air of mystery, and in most general terms charges that, on account of the magnitude of the business, the packers unfairly and illegally manipulated the live-stock markets, and were enabled to do so because the receipts of live stock at the principal markets are divided among the packers on a percentage basis.

"We contend that such a statement and conclusion are without foundation.

"Prices fixed by supply and demand: The price of live stock is fixed by the natural law of supply and demand. Information is received daily of the requirements of every section of our country and foreign countries, and the supply of material arriving on the market absolutely fixes its price.

"It may be of interest to state that the largest factor in fixing values, outside of the foreign demand, is the daily demand arising in that section of the country north of the city of Washington and east of Pittsburgh, Pa. In that section is congested large industrial populations of the United States, with its millions of toiling humanity, whose daily food supplies must be produced in other sections and transported to them. In that region is found the largest distribution of packing-house products, with scarcely any local supplies produced in that vicinity, so that each morning each branch-house manager of each concern, doing business independently, and without any knowledge of what his competitor is doing, notifies his general office in Chicago of his requirements to satisfy his trade. The live-stock buying department of each of the packers knows in this way what their requirements will be for that day and goes into the market and purchases them. If there is not a sufficient run of material to supply the requirements of all the buyers, naturally it influences the price, so in this manner it frequently occurs that even on days of largest receipts highest prices are bid, and on other days of light receipts lower prices will prevail. It can be positively asserted that in no other great industry in this country are the values of raw products more perfectly controlled by the law of supply and demand than in the packing industry.

"The establishment of stockyards by the packers, together with plants capable of utilizing maximum numbers, by reason of their fixed outlet by branch houses located in all parts of the country, and organized distribution by local freight to a great many thousand medium and small size cities, has made it possible for the live-stock producer to ship any quantity or quality at any time to any one of these markets and always find a demand for same, as by the establishment of large manufacturing plants the utilization of all by-products is possible, whereas on a limited scale it would not be profitable to work up some of the by-products. It is a recognized fact that the development of the packing industry, through the utilization of many by-products, has caused, as much as anything else, the advancement in value of live stock.

"Ownership of stockyards do not affect prices: It can be positively stated that the ownership of stockyards, terminal facilities, etc., have no relations to controlling the quality, quantity, or kind of live stock shipped to any market or the price that is paid for same. Any person interested in buying live stock has free access to the yards and can bid on any consignment found therein.

"Small packer purchases: There are numerous small packers in the market with their buyers every day, as well as speculators, who purchase live stock for further feeding and fattening; and it may be of interest here to state that on the Chicago market alone the small packers slaughtered, in the year 1910, 1,302,200 hogs, which represented 23.31 per cent of the total receipts of that market. This number has increased each year until in the year 1915 they slaughtered 2,657,400 head, or an increase of 104.07 per cent over 1910; and in the year 1916 they slaughtered 3,334,639 head, which represents an increase of 156.07 per cent over the year 1910, which shows that, notwithstanding the charges of the commission that the five packers control and dominate the market and destroy competition, these smaller packers, which have no connection with any of the five, have been able to increase their business through these years so that they slaughtered 41.05 per cent of the total slaughter at the Chicago market, as against 28.28 per cent in 1910, which represents an increase of 2,032,439 head for the year 1916 over the year 1910. During the same period at the Chicago market the five packers, in the year 1910, slaughtered 3,301,100 head of hogs.

"In 1911 the receipts at the market increased 25.63 per cent, but the slaughter of the five large packers only increased 22.12 per cent.

"In 1915 the total receipts increased 50.42 per cent, yet the five large packers' increase in slaughter was only 29.27 per cent.

"In 1916 the receipts increased 52.12 per cent over 1910, yet the percentage of increase in slaughter by the five packers was only 44.98 per cent.

"In other words, the five large packers slaughtered 1,485,800 more hogs at the Chicago plants in 1916 than they slaughtered in 1910, and the small packers, during the same year, slaughtered 2,032,439 hogs more than they slaughtered in 1910.

"Commission's table of percentages: The commission attaches extraordinary significance to a table prepared by it undertaking to show that the percentages of live-stock receipts bought by the various packers remain practically the same. This circumstance, taken in connection with certain letters and memoranda referring to the percentage purchased by each of the packers, is accepted as conclusive evidence that the packers have organized a conspiracy to divide the live-stock receipts in definite proportions, and that such agreement gives them the power to dominate the live-stock markets; to fix and control the prices of live stock and prices of meats.

"Packers keep statements of sales: The fact that each packer keeps track of the number of live stock purchased on the markets and by whom, and that data covering this information may be found in their archives, is neither proof nor circumstantial evidence of the charges made by the commission, nor is it a matter peculiar to the packing industry, nor is it a matter of secrecy. The daily receipts of live stock at all the markets of this country, and prices paid therefor, are published broadcast in the newspapers throughout the country. They are also compiled by the Agricultural Department of the Government, and many other agencies.

"Daily receipts and sales published: The papers and journals devoted to the live-stock industry publish daily the receipts and the sales, as well as the names of purchasers and the quantities taken on all the markets, and prices paid, and in the end compiles a 'Year Book of Figures' showing, among other things, the receipts at all the markets of the world and prices paid each week of the year, also the number of live stock slaughtered by each of the packers; in fact, all the facts and figures covering every point of information connected with the live-stock industry is made public and is available to every citizen of this country. There is no secret or mystery about it; and the fact that the packers keep track of all this information in their own records is not evidence of sinister motives or dark designs, but it is a natural and essential matter, vital to the success of every enterprise.

"No secret meetings: Such data is not kept solely by the large packers. We venture the assertion that in the records kept by every successful packer, large or small, in the office of every local buyer, or speculator, every commission merchant and, in fact, everyone trading or having to do with the business on any or all of the markets of this country, similar data and information will be found. The small packer knows as fully what each of the large packers buy, and the prices paid, as the large packers know themselves, for all this information is a matter of public knowledge, and is daily available to any interested person through numerous sources. So that it is not a fact that the large packers gather in secret places to exchange information or to regulate their respective activities. They could not keep their activities in the market secret if they chose; the business of purchasing on the market is open and under the full observation of every interest represented. Each of the packers, large and small, have their respective buyers on the market, each expert in his particular field; likewise the same is true of local buyers and speculators, etc. So that one will find at the yards the sections for hogs, sheep, calves, and cattle, in separate divisions, and buyers expert in each division representing every person and concern trading on the market. Each one knows what his individual requirements will be for that day, gained from a knowledge of the demand of the consumers dealing with his establishment, so that the small packer as well as the large one knows just how many steers, cows, calves, sheep, or hogs he is going to need from the supplies on the market that day, and each buyer receives his instructions from his own people, the number of head of each class he requires, and the buyers go into the market and undertake to fill the needs of their concerns, without regard to any other interest on the market and in spite of any other interest. So that, in practice, it is found that on some days certain classes of live stock will be in greater demand than at other times, due to shortage in the markets of the world of that particular product.

"Large packers support market: The volume purchased by each interest, large or small, is fixed by the requirements of their respective trade demands, with this possible exception: When the local buyers, local butchers, speculators, and small packers secure their requirements they usually quit the market, no matter what the surplus receipts of the day. Should the large packers do the same, large quantities of material would be left on the market for which no sale could be had; it would have to be carried over at added expense to the producer for feeding, thus entailing losses and demoralizing the market. So that it devolves solely on the large packers to support the market and purchase all offerings each day, willing to accept the market price. In this manner the extraordinary movement of cattle out of drought-stricken regions were cared for at a fair price.

"Similar conditions arise when, at the end of the grass season, there are extra-large runs; and likewise of hogs in the fall season, when it is impossible that current demands of the trade can utilize all the offerings on the market.

"Thus it will be seen that the large packer is the real strength and support of the live-stock industry, rather than a destructive agency, as charged. And in this connection it can be seen how essential to a steady market are the branch houses and cold-storage system and other facilities provided by the packers for storing and preserving surplus stocks until the consuming public require them. Otherwise there would result immeasurable waste and consequent losses that would bankrupt the industry and bring ruin to the producers of live stock.

"Reasons for apparent alleged division of purchases: These reasons account for the situation, at points where there are two packing houses, purchases are made on a basis approximately of 50-50, and at points where three or more packers are represented there are other varying percentages of purchases. This does not mean that there are any agreements for such or that each must buy any particular percentage of the receipts of the market. In practice it works out that, after all interests, large and small, speculative, local, or otherwise, buying upon the market have satisfied the requirements of their trade demands in that market, a duty still devolves upon the large packer to care for any surplus offerings remaining thereon; otherwise producers would stop shipments to any market where uncertainty existed as to whether a sale could be made. One concern could not be expected to carry such a burden, as it would soon find itself bankrupt from continual buying of more material than its trade required; on the other hand, if one concern undertook to purchase all the receipts on the market it would have the effect of shutting down the other plants, throwing thousands out of employment, and give the one concern able to do it an actual monopoly of the meat business. So that these, and a thousand other economic reasons, automatically adjust the percentage of purchases upon each market.

"There is a fundamental law governing live-stock markets which the commission apparently fails to comprehend, and that law is based upon a competitive market. Farmers and producers of live stock do not like to ship in quantity to any market where there is only one packing establishment, for the reason that he has no competitive bidding. For example, when one of the five packers established a plant in Oklahoma the people offered a substantial bonus to secure the location of a second establishment in order to secure a competitive market, and thereby induced the producer to send his shipments to that market. It therefore became automatically necessary that each of the concerns enjoy a sufficient amount of the business in order that he might be able to remain in business; otherwise, as soon as he failed it would destroy the market. The same is true in every market in the country, and any person who can understand that point will appreciate the fact that it requires no illegal agreement to produce the condition of a fair distribution of the receipts. Each voluntarily purchases his requirements and leaves the others to do likewise. Should any one of the packers desire to monopolize the markets and decide to force his competitors out, he can only do so by paying a higher price for his material than it could be sold for at a profit; when that stage is reached the sane business man would drop out of the market until the other fellow had exhausted his resources and became bankrupt, knowing full well that to enter into a destructive conquest, even if one succeeded in destroying the other, the ultimate result would be at the same time to practically destroy that particular market, for when the survivor had it all to himself the producer would not feel inclined to ship to that particular market, where no competitive bidding would be possible. So that it is perfectly logical that under such a system the result would irresistably be the final destruction of the market and the loss of the entire investment. Thus it follows naturally that every business man confines his purchases to the requirements of his trade demands and the additional purchases necessary to absorb the offerings on his market.

"This explains the success of the small packers on all the markets and gives promise to any newcomers who may desire to enter the fields. The law of supply and demand regulates the market prices, which is a solemn fact in the business of today no matter how much doubt may be cast upon it by those who fail to comprehend it. Therefore it matters not whether the relative purchases of concerns on a given market, where only two packers have plants, be on a basis of half and half of their respective purchases. It will be seen that the gross percentage of any given packer on all the markets will be governed by the amount of products he is able to sell in the markets of the world. If he can increase his outlet he will increase his purchases of raw materials.

"Let any section of the country increase its patronage to any particular packer and one will find that he will buy the material for his increased requirements, no matter what packer suffers the loss of percentage. This is proven by the annual variations in percentages of purchases shown by the table published by the commission, which offers more decided proof of competition than of combination. Every successful packer has two eyes, like any other mortal, one of them is looking upon the supply in the markets and the other on the demands of the consuming public. He is willing to risk millions of capital for a small relative return on the turnover of each of his invested dollars. And if the packer is willing to perform this great economical service for the small margin per dollar employed therein he certainly does not deserve the attacks being made upon him by the representatives of our Government, which is largely depending upon him, confidently, and rightfully so, to support its extraordinary needs and those of our allies in these tragic and crucial times. And the authorities are invited to point out, if possible, any occasion on which the packers thus attacked have failed to respond to any demand made upon them.

"Percentages vary from year to year: So that, if the table of percentages set forth in the report of the commission is a correct representation of the relative percentages of purchases by the five large packers for five years it furnishes evidence of the fact that there is no arbitrary division of receipts, as the commission has undertaken to assert; but, on the contrary, the percentage purchased by each of the five companies vary in each of the years—only two of them show increase, while three of the companies show a decrease; and when it is understood that the smallest fraction of a percentage of increase or decrease means many thousand head of cattle, it will be better understood how energetic and progressive concerns must fight to maintain their position in the business world—and this more than any other reason explains the apparent approximate consistency of the percentage of purchases made. For illustration—the percentage of total cattle purchases of Swift & Co., according to the commission's table, increased from 33.90 per cent in 1913 to 35.07 in 1917, an increase of 1.17 per cent in four years. This slight variation meant that in 1917 that company slaughtered approximately 90,000 more cattle than if it had not increased its business over that of 1913. So it will be seen that Swift & Co. had to create a demand and find a sale for that additional quantity of meat and the by-products of that additional number of cattle. This fact bears out the contention of the packers that there is competition; otherwise is it reasonable to suppose that three of the packers would willingly submit to a shrinkage of their percentage of volume of business if it could have been avoided?

"Producers not interested in who purchases: It can not be said that either the producer or general public are interested in the particular pecentage of live stock purchased by any particular concern. It is not a matter of public interest as to who buys the live stock; and likewise it is a matter of no importance to the producer whether Swift & Co. purchase 35 per cent or 50 per cent of shipments on any particular market, or upon all the markets as a whole. The producer's only concern is to receive fair treatment in the markets and to secure the highest possible price for his product commensurate with the demand, allowing the packer a reasonable return on the capital he employs in his business.

"Power to control prices: If the five large packers had the power, which is not true, to absolutely control the percentages of purchases and depress the value of live stock, they could, by the exercise of the same power, increase the selling price to the consumer. There does not exist the slightest evidence of any agreement or combination to control the distribution of fresh meats or other products of the packer. In fact, the commission is forced to say in its report that 'There is apparently no "dressed-meat pool" at the present time, such as existed in the nineties,' and the incontrovertible facts are that the packer only receives less than half a cent per pound profit on dressed beef—an item of profit so small that it could be entirely eliminated and not affect materially the cost of the product to the consumer. So that if, by the widest stretch of the imagination, it could be argued that the volume of purchases from year to year, by each of the packers, was proof of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, the argument is completely exploded by the fact that such a coincidence has not decreased the value of live stock in the hands of the producer.

"Even a cursory examination of the records will substantiate this statement.

"Average yearly price of cattle: The average yearly price per 100 pounds of native beef catle at Chicago, as compiled by the Chicago Drovers Journal, was as follows:

	1,500 to 1,900. pounds.	750 to 1,050. pounds
1910	$7.70	$5.90
1911	7.00	5.65
1912	9.60	7.10
1913	8.85	8.00
1914	9.75	8.10
1915	9.25	7.70
1916	10.75	8.45
1917	13.75	10.50

Figures for 1918 will show a decided increase in values.

"Average price of hogs: The average price of hogs and pigs, for the same period, likewise proves the contention:

	Mixed.
1910	$8.90
1911	6.70
1912	7.60
1913	8.50
1914	8.30
1915	7.20
1916	9.60
1917	15.10

"With a still larger increase for 1918.

"So it will be seen that live stock sold for an increase of nearly 100 per cent in 1917 over 1910.

"Number slaughtered compared: These values have increased in the face of a constantly growing volume of animals marketed each year; so that we find that there were slaughtered at 919 Government-inspected establishments in—

Cattle.
1910	7,962,189
1917	9,299,489
Swine.
1910	27,656,021
1917	40,210,847

"Increase on farms: It is of further interest to note that on July 1, 1918, the relative number of live stock in the United States had increased over July 1, 1917, by the following percentages: Hogs, all ages, 3.3 per cent; cattle, all classes, 3.9 per cent; sheep, 16.5 per cent.

"Thus it is shown that notwithstanding the large increase of live stock marketed and the increased supply in the hands of the producers there has been a phenomenal increase in the prices paid the producer for his products.

"Packers' profits small: The packers have taken all the risk in handling a perishable product, requiring billions of dollars to move, and have passed the finished product on to the consumer at a profit per pound so small as not to affect the price to such consumer if same was entirely eliminated, and were it not for the immense volume handled this could not have been accomplished.

"The figures will further show that for any given year the margin of profit to the packer between the prices paid the producer and the amount received from the consumer has been relatively as small, and such prices have fluctuated according to the supply and demand, and explodes every theory that the packers manipulate the markets and levy tribute upon the consumer. No other business in the world of such magnitude and importance does business on such a small percentage of profit on the volume of business.

"Evidence of competition: The period required to market beef, from the time of its slaughter until the meat is in the hands of the consumer, ordinarily covers from 10 to 14 days. The demand in the various markets fixes the price. Many shrewd buyers examine the stocks on hand of the several packers, and shop from one concern to another, seeking and obtaining the best bargain to be found. The meat can only be profitably kept for a short time, and when the market is overstocked, as frequently happens, the product is sold at a loss. This is easily demonstrated in any market in this country, and can not be successfully controverted. This fact in itself is sufficient to demonstrate that the packers are in active competition with each other in the sale of their products.

"Other evidence of competition is found in the rivalries existing between the companies, in the fluctuation of profits from week to week, in the competition between the packers and speculators, and many other facts patent to anyone who will take the trouble to study the business in all its details.

"Profits: One of the largest packers has figured that during the year ending September 30, 1917, the average price paid for cattle to the purchaser was $84.45 per head; packing house expense, selling, and freight, $7.30 per head; net profit, $1.29 per head; total, $93.04 per head. So that upon an outlay of $91.75 per head a profit of only $1.29 was produced. Even though the profit might be double—for the sake of any possible inaccuracy—it still would make the profit less than 3 cents upon every dollar of business done in a business dealing with a highly perishable product. No fair-minded person can object to such a result, and it explodes the argument that the packers are profiteering.

"South American business: The commission being forced to abandon the "beef-pool" idea, as proof of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, resorted to the argument of a division of purchases on the markets, and as an additional circumstance offered in corroboration they charge a conspiracy to divide the trade from South America. The commission, in its report, included in that alleged conspiracy all of the five packers assailed, although Cudahy & Co. have no establishment in South America engaged in the packing business.

"Ships commandeered: The facts are that at the time of the outbreak of the European war practically all refrigerator ships capable of transporting fresh frozen meats were of British registry and sailing under the British flag. The English Government commandeered all such refrigerated space and used it in transporting fresh meat to supply her civilian population and the armies of the allies. The British Government had contracts with each of the local British and American packers transacting business in South America and allotted certain definite space in these boats to each of the packers. The amount of space so allotted automatically and definitely fixed the percentage or volume of business which each of the packers were able to transact from South America. All this was done with the sanction of the British Government, and under these circumstances the meeting referred to could not possibly have been in violation of any law of this country, nor does it afford a proof, circumstantial or otherwise, of the charges made by the commission.

"Thus the chief corroborating circumstance offered by the commission is exploded.

"Joint funds: The third circumstance offered by the commission is the charge that the packers have maintained joint funds to defray expenses undertaken in matters affecting the general industry.

"It is true that the five packers have maintained a joint fund, which has been used for entirely legal and proper purposes—generally to protect the industry against unfair attacks and to pay attorneys for defending actions involving the product of the general industry. Likewise such funds have been raised to promote the welfare of packing-house employees in providing amusements, entertainments, and outings for the families of workingmen, and many other things to promote their social well-being.

"There is scarcely an organization of any kind in this country relating to any particular branch of business which does not raise joint funds for legitimate and proper purposes incident to the business.

"So that this circumstance also utterly fails to sustain in any way the charges made by the commission.

"Agreements relating to other lines: The fourth circumstance offered by the commission charges that there are alleged agreements relating to other lines than the purchase of live stock and the sale of meats, namely, cheese and lard compound.

"The packers deny that they have any agreements or understandings in effect relating to any commodity handled by them.

"The commission, in support of its contention on this point, offers certain correspondence, quoted on pages 36 and 37 of the report. We quote the following from same:

"It is certain that by no means all the agreements in effect between the big packers came to the attention of the commission. Thus, for example, we have evidence of an agreement on lard compound, which was made at the time the commission's investigation was being vigorously pressed and came to light only by chance.

"Letter, Armour & Co. to H. G. Sharpnack (Armour's branch house superintendent at Pittsburgh), dated January 24, 1918:

"'It's always been our understanding that if our organization had the same price as the other fellow that's all they need. This is certainly a fact on substitute since January 14, and we will be very much surprised if your territory does not triple its business each month. We do not recall having such an opportunity in the history of this firm, and if this practice is maintained it's a pretty safe bet we will get our share.'

"This was followed on January 28, 1918, by a circular letter from H. G. Sharpnack to all managers giving the following instructions:

"'Please give this compound all attention possible. Everybody's price must be the same as yours. If you find any deviation, make doubly sure that you are right by seeing the bill, noting the date of same, quantity sold, and the price, and let me have it.'

"This so pleased Armour & Co. that on January 30, 1918, L. L. Whelen, of Armour's lard department, wrote Sharpnack:

"'Very glad to note your cooperation on White Cloud as per your circular to houses dated the 28th. In this connection, however, it occurs to us that we should not make any noise about competitors' prices being identical, etc. Under present conditions this is not advisable, as you are undoubtedly aware. Also you might destroy this letter on the subject.'

"Evidence of other agreements might be quoted at length, and they will appear in the report. The quotations already made would seem to answer affirmatively the President's question:

"'Are there manipulations, controls, trusts, combinations, conspiracies, or restraints of trade out of harmony with the law or the public interest?'

"No doubt that, under the methods used by the commission to take such correspondence from the files of the companies and place their own construction upon it without calling for any explanation of same, led them to believe that they had secured therein evidence of a flagrant disregard of the law, flaunted at the very time when the investigation was being vigorously prosecute.

"Uniform prices regulated by Food Administration: The facts are that the uniform prices referred to had been suggested by the Food Administration of the Government, which has regulated and stabilized the prices of many basic food products since our entry into the war. And this was merely a letter from one of the companies to its own agent, admonishing him to go after the business, and see that none of his competitors deviated from the prices outlined by the Food Administration; if so, to be certain of his facts and report it.

"So that, instead of being evidence of a violation of law, it shows that Armour & Co. was after all the business they could secure, and desired to cooperate with the Government in maintaining its regulations.

"This affords a fair illustration of the many misconstructions placed upon the memoranda and data collected by the commission.

"Butter, eggs, cheese, etc.: In regard to the packers' various ramifications in other products, such as butter, eggs, cheese, poultry, canned fruits and vegetables, jellies, jams, preserves, etc., this expansion is in keeping with the development of a highly organized and efficient business institution. It must be borne in mind that the packer has branch houses located in practically every important city in the United States, equipped with storage facilities, in charge of a manager, with a force of employees, such as accountants, bookkeepers, delivery systems, etc., which are necessary in the transaction of the meat business alone; therefore the expansion into these other food lines go hand in hand with the meat business, products being sold in most instances to the same retailer who buys meat food products and the business operated under the same fixed expense.

"Hoarding hides: Another equally clear misapprehension is found in the charge made by the commission that the packers were hoarding hides. On page 15 of the report the commission say:

"Finally, the packers' storage facilities and strong financial position make it possible for them to manipulate the markets and dispose of their products without regard to supply and demand. It is admitted in correspondence of the big packers that during the past year, when leather was in enormous demand, certain of the Big Five hoarded hides in such immense quantities for the purpose of inflating the already unreasonable prices that (to quote their own correspondence): 'We were forced to pack them in our cellars and outside in the open, but have reached the point now where we have no place to go with any more.'

"Had the commission permitted an explanation of conditions existing at the time referred to, they would have found the facts to be that, normally, there are about 500,000 hides in storage at the packeries all the time, representing the normal monthly slaughter of cattle. No tannery will accept for delivery hides that have not been cured in salt for at least 30 days. Consequently the packers must hold in storage all hides for that length of time.

"During the period referred to there was an increase in the slaughter of cattle to meet the requirements of our country and our allies in the matter of food. Also, one of the agencies of our Government took an option on 750,000 hides for a period of 60 days, requiring the hides to be held during the period of the option, which created the condition referred to in the quoted letter, and it may be of further interest to state that at the end of the period the Government failed to exercise its option and forced this immense quantity upon the market, which declined materially during the period and caused a loss to the packers of several million dollars. One of the smallest of the packers lost nearly one-half million dollars on the 75,000 hides it was required to hold under the Government option.

"Country hides: It is appropriate to refer to the speech of the Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH, of Idaho, in the Senate, September 6, 1918. Mr. BORAH takes for his subject the report of the Federal Trade Commission, and undertakes to justify the same, elaborating to some extent upon the question of hides and skins produced by local killing or from animals that died on the farm, making the statement that this product is practically without any market value—that the packer in control of the principal supply of hides dominates the market to the extent that the country hide seller must take what is offered.

"Mr. BORAH has doubtless been misinformed in regard to this situation, as it is not conceivable he would make these statements from hearsay. The facts are that the country hide and skin situation is controlled entirely by local or independent firms who make a business of gathering up these hides and skins, as well as other by-products such as bones, tallow, etc., and there is just as much of a fixed market for country hides and skins as there is for packer hides and skins; the packers are not dealers in or tanners of country hides.

"Action War Industries Board: The lack of any discrimination not alone on the part of the packers but on the part of the large country hide dealers for that matter is conclusively proven by the action of the War Industries Board in stating the differential between packer and country native steer hides at 6 cents per pound. In other words, if the packer native steer hides sold for 26 cents, a country hide would bring 20 cents, and it would be noted that practically the same spread was in existence one year previous, long before the Government ever thought of adjusting these prices.

"Differential fair: This differential is fair and reasonable, being based entirely upon the condition of the hides and its fitness to be turned into leather.

"The country hide and skin, as is well known in the trade, not being taken off by experts, is subject to cuts or scores. Also there is a larger percentage of brands on country hides, which affects the tanning.

"Furthermore, they are not always packed as the packer hides, fresh after being taken off and salted and kept free from deterioration until they go to the tanner.

"There never has been a time when the same market condition affecting packer hides would not also affect the country-hide situation. As a matter of fact, war conditions have brought out more clearly than ever the undesirability of country hides for the reason that the Government specifications are very rigid and will not admit of any defects whatever in production of leather for Government uses.

"Do not fix prices of products: The Senator also charges that the packers, through their attorneys and agents, sit down at a table regularly, either weekly or oftener or less frequently, and agree among themselves as to prices of the products which they sell the people.

"This statement is also based on misinformation as the packers or their representatives are not engaged in any such practices, but, on the contrary, are doing their best to live up to the letter as well as the spirit of all laws.

"Raise-a-pig movement: Aside from the alleged illegal acts complained of, the commission finds its greatest objection to the magnitude of the business done by the five large packers, and complain that the packing plants are concentrated in a few large centers, and at the same time they complain that live stock production is discouraged because the plants are not established near every small community where live stock is raised, and that the failure to so establish such plants has retarded the present 'raise-a-pig' movement, because there are no convenient near-by places to dispose of the pig after it has been raised.

"It has been demonstrated in the past that packing plants of small capacity can not be as economically operated as larger ones; neither can the by-products be profitably utilized.

"Large packers and small ones: In fact, the large packers are a great help to the small packeries situated in outlying sections, in that they purchase the by-products and surplus meats from many of such concerns. And it may be said that some of them would find it impossible to continue operations if the large packers should refuse to purchase their surplus stock.

"Again, it may be said without immodesty that no industry has been of more importance to our country in the present world crisis than the packing industry; and had it not been for the wonderful and highly specialized organization and financial strength of the five large packers, together with their nation-wide system of branch houses, storage facilities, as well as their equipment in the matter of refrigerator cars, a serious calamity would have befallen the civilian population and armies of the allies engaged in the present world war.

"Packers sustain allies with food: In this connection it may be said, as a matter of pride and satisfaction, that on the 22d day of February of this year while the packing concerns were furnishing food to our armies in cantonments in this country and in the field abroad, as well as supplying meat and food to the families of the civilian populations in this and other countries, our allies found themselves in dire straits for meat. The meat division of the Food Administration on the above date called upon the chairman of the executive committee of the packers, organized in connection with the Food Administration, to furnish immediately for the allies 134,500,000 pounds of meat, the shipment of which they requested to commence within three days and the entire quantity to be moving within 14 days. This extraordinary request called for a shipment of 60,000,000 pounds the first week and 74,500,000 pounds the second week, or approximately 1,550 carloads the first week and 1,900 carloads the second week. And it is to the credit of these concerns that they patriotically responded to the request of the Government and met the requirements on time.

"It is manifest that no such achievement would have been possible had it not been for the great capacity of the plants, the possession of adequate storage branches, cars, and other equipment, and adequate financial strength to handle such an enormous demand, in addition to its regular established business. So that the magnitude of the business and the financial strength of the five large packers, instead of being a menace, has really proven a blessing at this period of the world crisis.

"Recommendations of commission: The first recommendation of the commission is that the Government acquire, through the Railroad Administration, all live-stock cars owned by the packers. It intimates that the ownership of stock cars in the packers give certain power of control and a manipulation of the means of transportation.

"Stock cars: A very small percentage of the receipts of live stock arrives in stock cars owned by the five large packers. All such cars are now under the supervision of the Railroad Administration; and there can be no serious objection to the Government taking over such cars, if the service can be thereby improved.

"Acquire refrigeration cars: Another recommendation is that the Government acquire all privately owned refrigerator cars through the Railroad Administration.

"The reason why the packers own their refrigerator cars has heretofore been explained. Meat cars are of a special construction, and are not furnished by the railroads in quantities sufficient to handle the business. Therefore it became necessary for the packers to provide their own equipment of this character and they are an integral and essential part of the packing business.

"Interstate Commerce Commission report on private car lines: The Interstate Commerce Commission made an exhaustive study of the matter of private cars, covering a period of several years, and, in a report dated July 31, 1918, they say:

"It is clearly established that shippers of petroleum oils, fresh meats, packing-house products and dairy products could not have done the volume of business they have done in the past, or that their plants were constructed to do, except they had possessed themselves of private cars over which they could exercise, and have exercised, control.

"The refiner of oil or the meat packer could no more do business on an economical and efficient basis without his private cars than he could without his modern equipped refining or packing plant. The private car part of the business has grown with the rest. Doubtless in the beginning demands were made by these shippers that carriers should supply tank and meat cars, but it was quickly demonstrated that business could not be done in the most effective manner were carriers to own or control cars of that kind. As a rule, carriers have never furnished these cars, and it has come to be mutually understood that they should not do so. The oil refiner and meat packer demand an adequate supply of cars at all times. It is conceded by shippers that neither an adequate supply nor its efficient distribution can be afforded by carriers. The requirements have been that there shall be the most efficient use of tank and refrigerator cars, which has been one of the results of private ownership. While this has undoubtedly been of benefit to carriers, it has been of incalculable benefit to shippers as well.

"It requires a special department to keep track of and manage these cars in each of the packers' organizations. The mileage compensation received by the several companies is not sufficient to make their operation profitable to the packers, and it is a fact that they are operated at a loss. However that may be, they are an essential part of the business, and it would be manifestly unfair and unjust for the Government to confiscate these cars without providing as efficient service as now exists, and also making provision for future expansion of business.

"Government now supervises packers' cars: In this connection, it is a fact that the Government already exercises certain supervision over such cars, through the Railroad Administration.

"On January 1, 1918, there were approximately 1,000 owners of private cars of all kinds in use in commercial service in this country, not including railroads. The number owned by each ranged from one to eighteen thousand; and as yet we have heard nothing of any movement to take away from any other vital industry, equipment so essential to the business as the refrigerator car is to the packers. The ownership of such cars does not give the packers any control over prices of live stock, nor does their possession in any way affect the prices of meat to the consumer.

"Furthermore, the packer enjoys no advantages in the way of rates, switching charges, demurrage, or anything whatever not enjoyed by a shipper using a railroad refrigerator car.

"Government ownership of stock yards: Another recommendation of the commission is that the Government acquire the principal stockyards of the country through the Railroad Administration.

"The stockyards were established by some of the packers, as heretofore explained, in order to furnish market places supplied with pens for the animals and with watering and feeding facilities. Every packing center must have proper and efficiently operated yards in order to care for the animals.

"The principal reason that the packers have become interested in the yards has been to provide such facilities and extend them as the business expanded. It is doubtful whether such efficient market places would ever have existed had they not been established in this manner.

"Private ownership gives no control of prices: The ownership of the stockyards gives no control over prices of live stock and no control over the commission men at the yards. Yardage and feed charges are reasonable and uniform to all patrons.

"Yards already under Government jurisdiction: There can be no serious objection to the ownership of the stockyards by the Government, if their efficient management and operation shall be guaranteed. But, as in the matter of cars, the stockyards are likewise under Government regulation, which has been established under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Markets of the United States Department of Agriculture, and in furtherance of this plan the Government is holding open meetings, taking up the question of the fairness of stockyards operations and their various charges for service, testimony being taken from shippers, commission men, and packers alike.

"Government ownership of branch houses and cold storage: The fourth recommendation of the commission, that the Government acquire branch houses and cold-storage plants belonging to the packers, is wholly impractical and would unsettle and have a destructive effect upon the entire industry.

"Branch houses are a very necessary part of the system of which large centralized packing plants are the basis. The operation of branch houses requires initiative and skill on the part of an experienced manager, and the efficiency of the organization would suffer if they were made into public markets, with the manager responsible only to the Government.

"We see no reason why the Government may not establish such facilities for the use of smaller packers, unable to afford same, if it is deemed a proper governmental function to perform such service in matters of private business enterprise. But it would be manifestly unjust and unfair to undertake to deprive the packers of the very means upon which they are dependent for the proper and efficient handling of their respective businesses.

"Commission chart: The Federal Trade Commission has prepared a chart in their report showing the packers interests in various outside enterprises, such as land companies, stockyards, cattle loan companies, banks, terminal facilities, publications, etc.

"The inference naturally created by a study of this chart is to a great extent incorrect, as the interest shown is mostly individual, does not in any way affect the packing business or carry any control over the outside business referred to. The relation between the stockyards and packing houses has been discussed. The same thing applies to terminal facilities, as well as some live-stock publications.

"It is no doubt correct to state that practically all of the interest in different banks, as shown by the statement, is represented by personal investments in stock, in some cases very small. The fact that an individual is a director of a bank or corporation does not necessarily mean he is a large stockholder.

"What is more reasonable than a desire on the part of most any bank located at the different packing centers than to want successful business men on their board.

CONCLUSION.

"The recommendations of the Federal Trade Commission were doubtless made under the misapprehension that there exists at this time a conspiracy among the large packers to restrain trade and manipulate prices.

"It would be unthinkable that the commission would make such recommendations wholly on the ground that the magnitude of the business justified such action.

"We submit that there is no evidence shown in the report of the commission upon which any court of competent jurisdiction in the country would find the packers guilty of the charges made against them.

"The packing industry of this country is made up of a large number of competing units—some large and some small. A few are large enough to achieve the economies and render the broad and efficient service resulting from a nation-wide organization. Moreover, there are numerous small packers who are growing into financial strength and power, right under the shadows of these large concerns. They not only offer effective competition in the purchase of live stock in the markets, but also in the sale of the finished product to the consumer. There is no other business which offers so many proofs of the independence of each concern engaged in the business, or more convincing evidence of actual competitive conditions existing in all lines of their business activities. No other line of business is more perfectly supervised by the Government. A minimum price for hogs has been established, while the prices of many of the products of the packers are under supervisory regulation by the Food Administration of the United States Government. So that, even if any of these concerns desired to misuse or abuse the power which the commission complains they possess, they would be powerless to do so, under the efficient and effective regulations now prevailing over their business through the different departments of the Government.

"Packing industry under Government supervision: The packing business now is, and has been since November 1, 1917, operating under license from the Food Administration, who have limited the five larger packers profits to 9 per cent on their investments, but in no case to exceed 2½ cents per dollar on the turnover; the smaller packer being limited to 2½ cents straight on the turnover.

"The larger packers' books are being constantly examined, and a uniform system is being devised and installed by the Federal Trade Commission which should remove any doubt in the minds of the most skeptical that the business since November 1, 1917, is receiving the closest possible governmental supervision, and certainly there can not justly be any criticism of the maximum profits allowed the packer. The Food Administion no doubt regarded these profits as reasonable and essential to the proper maintenance and also to provide for the expansion of the plants necessary to care for the growing demand of the Government and of the general business. Likewise, they were necessary to maintain the credit of the packers, who are large borrowers of money. The Government, after thorough investigation, found they could not reduce this profit without eliminating profit altogether, and the packer rightfully feels that the Food Administration's adjustment of control verifies the fact of small profits per dollar turnover—impossible on a small volume—reported as being earned by the packer for a number of years past, should effectively controvert any charge of profiteering.

"The packing business is already regulated by more laws, both State and National, than any other business institution. The food product of every animal is inspected by a representative of the United States Government.

"Edible products not emanating from animals are subject to the United States pure food and drugs act, so that virtually every law of any kind affecting business applies to the packer.

"The very existence of the packing business is so closely related to the continued success of the live-stock raiser and farmer that on anything like a thorough analysis of the relation one to the other would easily show that to disregard their interest would be to deliberately cut their own throat in a business way, if they followed anything like the tactics they are accused of following in the Federal Trade Commission's report.

"To fully comprehend this, it must be thoroughly understood that the packer is wholly dependent for his supply of raw material from day to day on the voluntary shipments of live stock made to the public markets by the individual farmer, as outside of a few personal investments which, compared to their requirements of live stock, are infinitesimal, the packer directly or indirectly does not own or control his live-stock supply.

"From any angle upon which this important subject is approached, the report of the Federal Trade Commission unfortunately throws discredit upon one of the most important industries in the country, and at a time when every such concern should be maintained at its highest standard of efficiency. The recommendations of the commission are purely experimental, and this is no time for such, and if carried out will be destructive to the industry and render it incapable of performing the important services to the country now devolving upon it."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask that the conference report on the food-production bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the food-production bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the Senator from Oklahoma asks for that, I should like to inquire whether or not the report of the Federal Trade Commission, to which the report which has just been ordered printed is an answer, has ever been published in the RECORD? I have not been able to find it.

Mr. GORE. I do not think it has been printed in extenso.

Mr. THOMAS. I think not, Mr. President. The Senator from Idaho himself asked to have it printed as a public document some days ago, and the request was referred to the Committee on Printing; but it has not been, I think, printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] or the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]—I think they are both on the Committee on Printing—whether or not any report has ever been made upon my request that so many copies of that report be printed as a public document?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think there has been.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have been in attendance daily on the meetings of the Finance Committee; and I can not say whether or not, at the last meeting of the Printing Committee, it was reported out.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the committee has not acted on the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the charges, made in such strong language, that this report is false, I should like to ask that this report be published in connection with the report which is to go into the RECORD to-day. I am unable to find where this report has ever been published in the RECORD.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will say that I believe it has been published in the RECORD; that it was presented in the House and published in the RECORD. In fact, I read it, if my memory serves me correctly. I am very much in favor of the request of the Senator. I think it ought to be published in connection with the other report.

Mr. THOMAS. That was the profiteering report.

Mr. BORAH. I would not want to have it put in twice. The Senator says he has read it. I think he must have read it as a public document, or some other document; but it was not published in the House proceedings.

Mr. GORE. I think that was the profiteering report.

Mr. BORAH. I went through the RECORD, and I am unable to find that it ever was published there.

Mr. THOMAS. That was the profiteering report.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission stated to me that it never had been published, so I do not think this is a request to publish it the second time. I think this is the only time it has ever been published. Therefore, I ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD in connection with the report that is to be printed upon the request of the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not wish to be misunderstood. I have reference to the report made by the Federal Trade Commission, calling attention to profiteering in the meat-packing industries.

Mr. BORAH. This is a different report.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator refer to the report on flour milling and flour jobbing? That was published in the RECORD.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; and on meat packing, also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to printing in the RECORD the report referred to by the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will state that the document having reference to profiteering has been made a public document, No. 248.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho? The Chair hears none, and the report will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BORAH. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am going to feel obliged to insist on the regular order.

Mr. BORAH. I am not going to ask to displace the regular order, but I do not want the printers to get confused as to these two reports. The profiteering report is a different proposition entirely. I want to have published in the RECORD the report which was made to the President upon the meat-packing industry.

Mr. KENYON. The report of July 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator send the report to the desk, so that the official reporters can get it?

Mr. BORAH. I will see that they get it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

SUMMARY OF THE REPORT OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ON THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT.

JULY 3, 1918.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

SIR: On February 7, 1917, you directed the Federal Trade Commission to "investigate and report facts relating to the production, ownership, manufacture, storage, and distribution of foodstuffs and the products or by-products arising from or in connection with their preparation and manufacture; to ascertain the facts bearing on alleged violations of the antitrust acts, and particularly upon the question whether there are manipulations, controls, trusts, combinations, conspiracies, or restraints of trade out of harmony with the law or the public interest," to the end that "proper remedies, legislative or administrative, may be applied."

On July 1, 1917, funds for carrying out this direction became available and the commission undertook the task.

The work fell naturally into various divisions, and reports have already been made to you with reference to the milling and jobbing of wheat flour and the preparation and distribution of certain canned food products. Other divisions will be the subject of reports to you as rapidly as the results of our studies can be reduced to proper form. At this time we are reporting to you on the meat-packing industry.

Answering directly your question as to whether or not there exist "monopolies, controls, trusts, combinations, conspiracies, or restraints of trade out of harmony with the law and the public interest," we have found conclusive evidence that warrants an unqualified affirmative.

This evidence in summary form accompanies this letter and will be set forth in more detailed form in seven reports in support of our findings and recommendations, which will be placed in your hand at the earliest possible moment.

While we have found and will disclose to you an intricate fabric of "monopolies, controls, combinations, conspiracies, and restraints" which would seem to indicate a similarly complex and minute system of legislative or administrative remedies, we believe that an adequate remedy may be more simply arrived at.

We believe that if the fundamental and underlying evils are rooted out the whole structure of conspiracy, control, monopoly, and restraint must fall.

If we are correct in this judgment, the task of applying legislative and administrative remedy is greatly simplified.

It appears that five great packing concerns of the country—Swift, Armour, Morris, Cudahy, and Wilson—have attained such a dominant position that they control at will the market in which they buy their supplies, the market in which they sell their products, and hold the fortunes of their competitors in their hands.

Not only is the business of gathering, preparing, and selling meat products in their control but an almost countless number of by-product industries are similarly dominated; and, not content with reaching out for mastery as to commodities which substitute for meat and its by-products, they have invaded allied industries and even unrelated ones.

The combination has not stopped at the most minute integration, but has gone on into a stage of conglomeration, so that unrelated heterogeneous enterprises are brought under control.

As we have followed these five great corporations through their amazing and devious ramifications—followed them through important branches of industry, of commerce, and of finance—we have been able to trace back to its source the great power which has made possible their growth. We have found that it is not so much the means of production and preparation, nor the sheer momentum of great wealth, but the advantage which is obtained through a monopolistic control of the market places and means of transportation and distribution.

If these five great concerns owned no packing plants and killed no cattle and still retained control of the instruments of transportation, of marketing and of storage, their position would not be less strong than it is.

The producer of live stock is at the mercy of these five companies because they control the market and the marketing facilities and, to some extent, the rolling stock which transports the product to the market.

The competitors of these five concerns are at their mercy because of the control of the market places, storage facilities, and the refrigerator cars for distribution.

The consumer of meat products is at the mercy of these five because both producer and competitor are helpless to bring relief.

The stock car is a part of the equipment of the common carrier, whose services are necessary to the producer of meat animals so that he may reach the market. The railroads furnish suitable cars for the transportation of other kinds of freight, and as to the use of such cars the miner of coal or the manufacturer of furniture are on an equality but in the matter of transportation of live stock to a small degree there comes in a private ownership and a control and a manipulation of the means of transportation—the stock car—so it is that we recommend:

"1. That the Government acquire, through the Railroad Administration, all rolling stock used for the transportation of meat animals, and that such ownership be declared a Government monopoly."

In the transportation of all other kinds of freight the transportation companies provide proper and suitable freight depots. The proper and suitable freight depot for live stock is a stockyard with its equipment of exchange buildings, terminal railways, and means of distributing full, unbiased, helpful market information, etc. We therefore recommend:

"2. That the Government acquire, through the Railroad Administration, the principal and necessary stockyards of the country, to be treated as freight depots and to be operated under such conditions as will insure open, competitive markets, with uniform scale of charges for all services performed, and the acquisition or establishment of such additional yards from time to time as the future development of live-stock production in the United States may require. This to include customary adjuncts of stockyards."

A requisite for the proper transportation of fresh meat and dairy products is that type of rolling stock known as refrigerator cars. The railroads supply proper, special types of cars for other classes of freight, but the beef refrigerator cars and icing facilities, which are absolutely necessary for the transportation and distribution of fresh meats, are in private ownership. This ownership furnishes these five great packing companies one of their most powerful means for controls, manipulations, and restraints. Lacking access on equal terms to these facilities competitors of the five great packers are at their mercy, and, competition being stifled, the consumer similarly is helpless. We therefore recommend:

"3. That the Government acquire, through the Railroad Administration, all privately owned refrigerator cars and all necessary equipment for their proper operation and that such ownership be declared a Government monopoly."

Proper freight houses are provided by common carriers for the various sorts of freight except meat and perishable products. The indicated freight depot for such commodities is a cold-storage house. Such a depot used as a distributing station, if free of access to all, would constitute an agency for fair and free competition. Such a depot in private hands, as now, constitutes an invincible weapon for monopoly and control and manipulation. We therefore recommend:

"4. That the Federal Government acquire such of the branch houses, cold-storage plants, and warehouses as are necessary to provide facilities for the competitive marketing and storage of food products in the principal centers of distribution and consumption. The same to be operated by the Government as public markets and storage places under such conditions as will afford an outlet for all manufacturers and handlers of food products on equal terms. Supplementing the marketing and storage facilities thus acquired, the Federal Government establish, through the Railroad Administration, at the terminals of all principal points of distribution and consumption, central wholesale markets, and storage plants, with facilities open to all upon payment of just and fair charges."

The commission believes that these four suggestions strike so deeply at the root of the tree of monopoly that they constitute an adequate and simple solution of a problem the gravity of which will be unfolded to you in the pages which follow.

Out of the mass of information in our hands, one fact stands out with all possible emphasis. The small dominant group of American meat packers are now international in their activities, while remaining American in identity. Blame which now attaches to them for their practices abroad as well as at home inevitably will attach to our country if the practices continue. The purely domestic problems in their increasing magnitude, their monopolization of markets and their manipulations and controls, grave as those problems are, are not more serious than those presented by the added aspect of international activity. This urgently argues for a solution which will increase and not diminish the high regard in which this people is held in international comity.

Some show of competition is staged by the five great packing companies. It is superficial. There is the natural rivalry of officials and departments, and this is made much of as indicating the existence of real competition. It is not real. How sham it is will be fully set out in the accompanying summary and the complete reports.

Some independent packers exist by sufferance of the five, and a few hardy ones have survived in real competition. Around such few of these as remain the lines are drawing in.

Having answered affirmatively the question to which you directed our attention and having summarized what we believe to be the simplest form of an adequate remedy, and before proceeding to a more detailed discussion of the subject, we make acknowledgment of the tireless industry, the fidelity to the public interest, and the patience and forbearance of the men who have composed the commission's staff in this inquiry.

These men have met and overcome every obstacle that ingenuity and money could devise to impede them. Space forbidding individual mention, we make this general acknowledgment, and this seems the proper time to call to your attention again, and especially the work of Mr. Francis J. Heney, whose conduct of the case, because of its success, has met with condemnation, misrepresentation, and criticism. We contrast Mr. Heney's legal ethics with the legal ethics of the men by whom he was opposed.

The commission, through Mr. Heney, had to meet deliberate falsification of returns properly required under legal authority; we had to meet schools for witnesses where employees were coached in anticipation of their being called to testify in an investigation ordered by you and by the Congress of the United States; we had to meet a situation created by the destruction of letters and documents vital to this investigation; we had to meet a conspiracy in the preparation of answers to the lawful inquiries of the commission.

We will not trespass upon your time to go into details as to the legal and business ethics employed, but on the foregoing statement, which we are prepared to substantiate in every detail, we contrast the ethics of the commission's legal and investigating staff with the legal staffs of the five great companies. And in leaving this part of the subject, we say, as we have said repeatedly to you during the time of the investigation, that Mr. Heney's conduct of the case, as well as that of the other agents and attorneys of the commission, was under the direct supervision of the commission, the acts were performed with the knowledge and under the direction of the commission, and the commission assumes all responsibility for them.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM B. COLVER, Chairman.
JOHN FRANKLIN FORT.
VICTOR MURDOCK.

SUMMARY OF REPORT.

This report, while dealing generally with the problem of the meat industry, is more particularly a study of the activities of the five principal meat-packing corporations (Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Morris & Co., Wilson & Co. (Inc.), and the Cudahy Packing Co.) in all fields, in so far as they bear on the production and distribution of food. This concentration of attention is adopted by the commission because we are convinced that their power and influence over the production and distribution of food are dominant and because it is our judgment that until their activities are curbed and their control is eliminated, all measures looking to the improvement of the food situation will be relatively ineffective.

The pages which follow contain a summary of the evidence upon which our findings and recommendations are based. This summary shows:

"First. The magnitude of the large meat-packing companies, the extensive ramifications of their interests, and the instruments by which they have established and maintain control.

"Second. The nature of their combination, with details of the various agreements and combinations.

"Third. The practices of the combination and their social and economic effects.

"Fourth. The remedy proposed."

The detailed evidence, including hundreds of documents taken from the files of the packing companies, about 9,000 pages of sworn testimony, and many thousand pages of field reports of agents of the commission has been carefully analyzed and digested, and will be laid before the President as rapidly as the various sections can be put in final form.

Before proceeding to the findings of the commission it is desirable to consider briefly some of the difficulties encountered in the investigation, because of the light which will thus be thrown upon the facts and the conclusions to be presented. In the first place, the packers have important interests in fields where the commission's inquisitorial powers are limited, but which are nevertheless of the greatest significance in connection with their activities in the food industry. Thus, for example, they are closely linked with a large number of banks, trust companies, and railroads, which connections are utilized, often unfairly if not illegally, for the promotion of the packers' interests in the food industry.

This would not be of vital consequence if the officials of the packing companies could be relied upon to furnish accurate and reliable information, or if their records were kept in such a way as to reveal the true state of their affairs. At the beginning of the investigation the commission attempted to proceed on these assumptions, but it was soon demonstrated that the records of the companies, particularly as regards stockholders' lists and other evidences of ownership, were constructed to conceal rather than reveal facts; that important documents had been removed from their proper places in the files, and that the reports of some of the most important corporations and the statements of their officials could not be accepted. Thus, Armour & Co. in their report, attested by the vice president, Arthur Meeker, among other falsifications, omitted the company's interest in the Chicago Stock Yards, amounting to $1,552,000, although the treasurer of the company testified that the transfer of this property from J. Ogden Armour to the company had been made prior to the time the report was prepared. That the omission was willful and part of a general plan to conceal the interest in the stockyards is evidenced by the facts that admission of Armour's interest was made only when the commission's examiner was on the point of discovering the truth, and that Arthur Meeker on June 6, 1916, stated before the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives that "the Armour people have no interest in the Chicago Stock Yards."

The commission is also in possession of documentary evidence that a committee was formed by Swift & Co. to "coach" employees who might be called upon to testify or give information to the agents of this commission and other Government bodies.

We know also that the five packing companies—Armour, Swift, Morris, Wilson, and Cudahy—conspired together in the preparation of their answers to the commission's inquiries to the end that all should agree. As part of the evidence in our possession substantiating this statement, the following letter is submitted:

AUGUST 2, 1917.

MESSRS. G. F. SWIFT, Jr., F. S. HAYWARD, R. C. MCMANUS, A. D. WHITE, J. M. CHAPLIN, L. D. H. WELD:

Mr. Veeder informs me that he has, at different times, talked to Messrs. Thomas E. Wilson, M. W. Borders, C. J. Faulkner, James Sheehan (retained by Armour & Co. for this investigation), and Thomas Creigh, and has suggested to them that each firm prepare its own answer to the questionnaire received recently from Commissioner Davies, and that when the answers have been completed we have a conference for the purpose of discussing objectionable things, if any, which might be contained in the individual reports.

All of the gentlemen to whom Mr. Veeder has talked have agreed to this policy, and it is Mr. Veeder's idea that as soon as our people have formulated our reply we should have a meeting among ourselves to consider it, and that we should at that meeting discuss the advisability of exchanging copies of letters with the others as against simply bringing our letters into a meeting to be discussed there without exchange of copies.

Told him that I thought that this was a point that ought to be given very careful consideration, and that we would not want to commit ourselves at this time to an exchange of letters with the others.

Told him that when our material was ready would arrange for meeting of all interested who were in town at that time.

Will Mr. White please advise me when the data is in shape to be considered in a conference of our own people?

WM. B. TRAYNOR,
Secretary to Committee.

LL.

In addition to the general "combing" of the companies' files in anticipation of the investigation, attempts were made on certain occasions to abstract important documents from the files under the eyes of our agents. G. S. Shepard, vice president of Cudahy Packing Co., admitted that he had ordered his stenographer to make an incorrect copy of a letter which the commission's agent had requested, and had himself destroyed the document. Finally it may be stated that the attorney for Morris & Co., M. W. Borders, when put on the witness stand under oath, after first demanding immunity on the ground that his testimony might tend to incriminate him, proceeded to make statements which were disproved by the documents, many signed by himself, with which he was later confronted.

Cases of this nature involving violations of the law have been placed in the hands of the Department of Justice for appropriate action.

It should be remembered also in considering the results of this investigation that these corporations are now operating under a Federal injunction issued in 1903; that they had been informed by the Attorney General in 1912, at the dissolution of the National Packing Co., that they would be the objects of close scrutiny and inspection; and that a committee of their confidential employees reported on April 10, 1916, that "as matters now stand criminal prosecutions are sure to follow."

These facts have been cited at the beginning of the report, not so much for the light which they throw upon the character of the corporations and individuals under investigation but because they demonstrate that this report based as it is upon documentary evidence of the corporations, is an understatement rather than an overstatement of the situation.

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS.

Five corporations—Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Morris & Co., Wilson & Co. (Inc.), and the Cudahy Packing Co.—hereafter referred to as the "Big Five" or "The Packers," together with their subsidiaries and affiliated companies, not only have a monopolistic control over the American meat industry, but have secured control, similar in purpose if not yet in extent, over the principal substitutes for meat, such as eggs, cheese, and vegetable-oil products, and are rapidly extending their power to cover fish and nearly every kind of foodstuff.

In addition to these immense properties in the United States, the Armour, Swift, Morris, and Wilson interests, either separately or jointly, own or control more than half of the export-meat production of the Argentine, Brazil, and Uruguay, and have large investments in other surplus meat-producing countries, including Australia. Under present shipping conditions the big American packers control more than half of the meat upon which the allies are dependent.

The monopolistic position of the Big Five is based not only upon the large proportion of the meat business which they handle, ranging from 61 to 86 per cent in the principal lines, but primarily upon their ownership, separately or jointly, of stockyards, car lines, cold-storage plants, branch houses, and the other essential facilities for the distribution of perishable foods.

The control of these five great corporations, furthermore, rests in the hands of a small group of individuals, namely, J. Ogden Armour, the Swift brothers, the Morris brothers, Thomas E. Wilson (acting under the veto of a small group of bankers), and the Cudahys.

A new and important aspect was added to the situation when the control of Sulzberger & Sons Co. (now known as Wilson & Co., Inc.) was secured, 1916, by a group of New York banks—Chase National Bank; Guaranty Trust Co.; Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; William Salomon & Co.; and Hallgarten & Co. The report of the committee appointed by the House of Representatives to "Investigate the concentration of control of money and credit" (the Pujo committee) states (p. 59): "Morgan & Co. controls absolutely the Guaranty Trust Co." The Chase National Bank, a majority of its stock being owned by George F. Baker, is closely affiliated with the First National Bank. William Salomon & Co. and Hallgarten & Co. are closely affiliated with Kuhn, Loeb & Co. Thus we have three of the most powerful banking groups in the country, which the Pujo committee classed among the six "most active agents in forwarding and bringing about the concentration of control of money and credit" now participating in the rapidly maturing food monopoly above described. The entrance of the bankers into the packing business, it should also be noted, was not at all displeasing to the big packers. J. Ogden Armour and Louis F. Swift were frequently consulted during the negotiations, and Paul D. Cravath is quoted by Henry Veeder as giving assurance that the final arrangements would be "more than satisfactory" to Armour and Swift.

The menace of this concentrated control of the Nation's food is increased by the fact that these five corporations and their five hundred and odd subsidiary, controlled, and affiliated companies are bound together by joint ownership, agreements, understandings, communities of interest, and family relationships.

The combination among the "big five" is not a casual agreement brought about by indirect and obscure methods, but a definite and positive conspiracy for the purpose of regulating purchases of live stock and controlling the price of meat, the terms of the conspiracy being found in certain documents which are in our possession.

There are undoubtedly rivalries in certain lines among the five corporations. Their agreements do not cover every phase of their manifold activities, nor is each of the five corporations a party to all agreements and understandings which exist. Each of the companies is free to secure advantages and profits for itself so long as it does not disturb the basic compact. Elaborate steps have been taken to disguise their real relations by maintaining a show of intense competition at the most conspicuous points of contact.

The Armour, Swift, Morris, and Wilson interests have entered into a combination with certain foreign corporations by which export shipments of beef, mutton, and other meats from the principal South American meat-producing countries are apportioned among the several companies on the basis of agreed percentages. In conjunction with this conspiracy, meetings are held for the purpose of securing the maintenance of the agreement and making such readjustments as from time to time may be desirable. The agreements restrict South American shipments to European countries and to the United States.

Since the meat supplies of North and South America constitute practically the only sources from which the United States and her allies can satisfy their needs for their armies, navies, and civil populations, these two agrements constitute a conspiracy on the part of the "big five," in conjunction with certain foreign corporations, to monopolize an essential of the food of the United States, England, France, and Italy.

The power of the Big Five in the United States has been and is being unfairly and illegally used to—

Manipulate live-stock markets;
Restrict interstate and international supplies of foods;
Control the prices of dressed meats and other foods;
Defraud both the producers of food and consumers;
Crush effective competition;
Secure special privileges from railroads, stockyard companies, and municipalities; and Profiteer.

The packers' profits in 1917 were more than four times as great as in the average year before the European war, although their sales in dollars and cents at even the inflated prices of last year had barely doubled. In the war years, 1915–1917, four of the five packers made net profits of $178,000,000.

EXTENT OF "BIG FIVE" OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL.

The meat industry: The most satisfactory single index of the proportion of the meat industry controlled by the Big Five is the fact that they kill, in round figures, 70 per cent of the live stock slaughtered by all packers and butchers engaged in interstate commerce. In 1916 the Big Five's percentage of the interstate slaughter, including subsidiary and affiliated companies, was as follows:

Cattle	82.2
Calves	76.6
Sheep and lambs	86.4

Illustrative of how completely effective competition has been eliminated from the meat industry is the fact that there is only one independent packer, Kingan & Co., who slaughters as much as 1 per cent of the interstate total of cattle, and only nine independents who slaughter as much as 1 per cent of the interstate total of hogs.

The big packers, in presenting their case to the public, have given great emphasis to certain figures purporting to prove that the Big Five handle "not to exceed one-third of the total meat production of the United States." This result can be obtained only by juggling figures; for example, by omitting from the Big Five's total the animals slaughtered by their affiliated companies. Their statement is further deceptive, because under "total meat production of the United States" are included all the animals killed on the farm for home consumption. On this theory, monopoly could not be considered to exist in the meat industry, even if every pound of meat consumed in towns and cities were handled by a single company, so long as farmers continued to kill their own hogs and cows.

Control of the meat industry carries with it not only control of all kinds of fresh and preserved meats, but in addition a very great competitive advantage in more than a hundred products and by-products arising in connection with their preparation and manufacture, ranging in importance from hides and oleomargarine to sandpaper and curled hair. In all these lines the Big Five's percentage of control, as compared with other slaughterers, is greater even than the percentage of animals killed, because of the fact that many of the small packers are not equipped or have been unable to utilize their by-products.

Foreign interests.—The investigation of the foreign interests of the American packers is not yet complete. The following list of those companies which thus far have been identified as subsidiary to or affiliated with the Big Five is indicative of the extent of their activities abroad:

Armour:
- Armour & Co. of Australasia (Australia and New Zealand).
- Armour & Co. of Uruguay (Uruguay).
- Compania Armour do Brazil (Brazil).
- Frigorifico Armour de la Plata (Argentina).
- Dominion Tanneries (Ltd.) (Canada).
- Armour Canadian Grain Co. (Canada).
- Allen & Crom (Ltd.) (Great Britain).
- Armour & Co. (Ltd.) (Great Britain).
- Fowler Bros. (Ltd.) (Great Britain).
- James Wright & Co. (Great Britain).
- Times Cold Storage Co. (Great Britain).
- Armour & Co. (Frankfort) (Germany).
- Armour et Compagnie Societe Anonyme (France).
- Armour Societa Anonima Italiana (Italy).
- Armour & Co. (Ltd.) (Denmark).

Armour & Morris:
- Sociedad Anonima La Blanca (Argentina).

Cudahy:
- Cudahy & Co. (Ltd.) (Australia).
- The Cudahy Packing Co. (Ltd.) (Great Britain).

Morris:
- Morris Beef Co. (Ltd.) (Great Britain).
- Haarers (Ltd.) (Great Britain).

Swift:
- Australian Meat Export Co. (Ltd.) (Australia).
- Compania Swift do Brazil (Brazil)
- Compania Swift de la Plata (Argentina).
- Compania Swift de Montevideo (Uruguay).
- Compania Paraguaya de Frigorifico (Paraguay).
- Swift Canadian Co. (with its selling branches) (Canada).
- Libby, McNeill & Libby of Canada (Canada).
- Libby, McNeill & Libby of London (Great Britain).
- Curry & Co. (Ltd.) (Great Britain).
- Garner, Bennett & Co. (Ltd.) (Great Britain).
- H. A. Lane & Co. (Ltd.) (Great Britain).
- H. L. Swift Stall (Great Britain).
- Swift Packing Co. (Ltd.) (France).
- Franklin Land & Investment Co. (Great Britain).
- Swift Beef Co. (Ltd.) (Great Britain).

Wilson:
- Frigorifico Wilson de la Argentine (Argentina).
- Archer & Co. (Ltd.) (Great Britain).
- Nuttall Provision Co. (Ltd.) (Great Britain).

Their present and prospective positions in the Commonwealths of the Pacific are well described by the following extract from a communication from the American consul general, Auckland, New Zealand, to the Secretary of State, dated April 26, 1918:

"I have the honor to advise that the Hon. W. D. S. MacDonald, minister of agriculture, industries, and commerce of New Zealand, has asked me to secure for him and the use of the New Zealand Government all the information possible relative to the investigation made by the United States Federal Trade Commission into the American Meat Trust; and I should very greatly appreciate it if I might be furnished with at least two or three copies of this information for the honorable minister, who indicated that he would like at least that many.

"In this connection I wish to explain that the operations of the American Meat Trust are of very great interest to New Zealand stock raisers, since they are very greatly alarmed over their actions in this part of the world, fearing that they propose to get control of the meat business in this Dominion. Armour & Co. already have an office at Christchurch, and have employed one of the most expert stockmen in this Dominion.

"This question is being discussed extensively in and out of Government circles, and I believe it will be wise to make it clear that the American Government is in no wise connected with or fostering the methods used by what is known as the American Meat Trust."

Substitutes for meat: The business of the packing companies originally was limited to the slaughter of live stock and the distribution of meat and animal products and by-products. Now, however, they are rapidly extending their control over all possible substitutes for meat—fish, poultry, eggs, milk, butter, cheese, and all kinds of vegetable oil products—and have secured strategic points of collection, preparation, and distribution of these products.

Swift & Co. is the greatest butter distributor in the United States, handling in 1916, in round figures 50,000,000 pounds, or nearly as much as the combined sales of the two largest nonpacker organizations.

Judged conservatively by trade estimates, the Big Five packers handle at least half of the interstate commerce in poultry and eggs and in cheese. The packers are also important factors in the preparation and distribution of condensed and evaporated milk, and are rapidly increasing their proportion. Wisconsin, the leading State in the production of butter and cheese, is covered by their creameries, condensaries, and buying stations, and a similar process of concentration and control is already evident in the other principal dairy States.

Vegetable-oil products are becoming increasingly important as substitutes for animal fats. The most abundant and widely used of the vegetable oils in the United States is cottonseed oil, of which 31.8 per cent was refined by the five big packers in 1916. The most important by-product of the cottonseed-oil industry is cottonseed cake, which is in great demand by live-stock producers.

Canned fruits, vegetables, etc.: Fruit and vegetable canning and preserving are remote from slaughtering and meat packing, but the big packers, through ownership of refrigerator-car lines and their branch-house system of distribution, possess special advantages for control of this field of industry. The Big Five's advantage in this field rests not so much on their ownership of canning factories, although in some branches their output amounts to more than a quarter of the total for the United States, as upon their rapidly growing control of the wholesale distribution of canned goods. Indicative of the size and rapid expansion of the packers' canned-goods business is the fact that Armour & Co. increased their canned-goods sales from about $6,500,000 in 1916 to about $16,000,000 in 1917, whereas the combined sales of these products by Austin Nichols Co. and Sprague, Warner & Co., two of the largest independent wholesalers, amounted to only a little more than $6,000,000 in 1917.

Staple groceries and vegetables: Recently the big packers began dealing in various staple groceries and vegetables, such as rice, sugar, potatoes, beans, and coffee, and increased their sales at such a great rate that in certain of these lines they have become dominant factors. Here again the immense selling organization of the packers, built up in connection with their meat business, assures them almost certain supremacy in any line of food handling which they may wish to enter.

Armour's drive into the rice market in a single year is perhaps the most striking instance of the potentialities in this direction. Early in 1917 Armour & Co. first undertook the handling of rice, and in that one year sold more than 16,000,000 pounds of rice, thus becoming at a single move, on the statement of the vice president of the company, "the greatest rice merchant of the world." During this period the wholesale price of rice increased 65 per cent.

Grain: Armour is the only one of the big packers who appears to be interested in the grain trade, although James A. Patten, a large stockholder of Swift & Co., is also one of the important factors in the cereal markets.

The Armour Grain Co. is a close corporation, in which J. Ogden Armour owns 64 per cent of the stock and other members of the family 22.9 per cent. Directly or through its subsidiary or trade-name companies the Armour Grain Co. operates over 90 country elevators. Its 8 terminal elevators at Chicago and its 2 elevators at Kansas City constitute 25 per cent of the total elevator capacity of these cities. In 1917 it handled 75,000,000 bushels, or 23 per cent of all receipts of grain at Chicago, the greatest market in the world, and its business is rapidly growing. Nearly all of this was directly merchandised and only a small fraction sold on commission.

In the manufacture of breakfast foods and stock and chicken feeds the Armour Grain Co. is expanding, especially in the line of producing retail brands. Within three years it has undertaken the manufacture of Armour's Oats, has taken over the Buffalo Cereal Co., with its many brands of cereal foods and animal feeds, and within the present year has taken over the Mapl-Flake Co., of Battle Creek, Mich.

In connection with its line of country elevators the Armour Grain Co. merchandises fertilizer, feed, coal, fence posts, wire fencing, builders' hardware, binding twine, lumber, millwork, cement, lime and plaster, brick, sand, gravel, and roofing.

Fertilizers: The fertilizer industry lies at the base of American food production. The packers, controlling the disposal of more than two-thirds of the offal produced in the packing industry, have become the most important factors in the manufacture of animal fertilizer ingredients and have strongly entered the field of production of mineral ingredients. In mixed fertilizers they produce 19 per cent of the total.

Hides, leather, and wool: In addition to the far-reaching ownership and control in the various branches of the food industry outlined above, the Big Five also occupy an important position with reference to the clothing of our civil and military population through potential control of the hide and leather markets of the United States and of a considerable proportion of the total wool production.

There is no question of their dominant position with reference to hides and leather. The Big Five not only handle more than three-fourths of the hides and skins produced by interstate slaughterers, but directly, through their subsidiaries or through leases and contracts, tan a large part of the leather produced in the United States. The big packers occupy an even more important and profitable position in the hide and leather industry than these statements indicate, because of the fact that their hides receive a higher grading than those of independent packers and butchers, whose hides are arbitrarily classed as "country hides," and that they control a large share of hide imports.

Finally, the packers' storage facilities and strong financial position make it possible for them to manipulate the markets and dispose of their product without regard to supply and demand. It is admitted in correspondence of the big packers that during the past year, when leather was in enormous demand, certain of the Big Five hoarded hides in such immense quantities for the purpose of inflating the already unreasonable prices that (to quote their own correspondence), "We are forced to pack them in our cellars and outside in the open, but have reached the point now where we have no place to go with any more."

INSTRUMENTS OF CONTROL AND MONOPOLY.

The actual and potential powers of these corporate groups and individuals are far greater and much more menacing to the welfare and true prosperity of the Nation than this enumeration of industrial possessions would indicate. This greater menace lies in the fact that the Big Five have intrenched themselves in what may be called the strategic positions of control of food distribution. These strategic positions, which serve not only to protect the controls which the big packers have already acquired but to insure their easy conquest of new fields, are:

Stockyards, with their collateral institutions, such as terminal roads, cattle-loan banks, and market papers.

Private refrigerator-car lines for the transportation of all kinds of perishable foods.

Cold-storage plants for the preservation of perishable foods.

Branch-house system of wholesale distribution.

Banks and real estate.

The Big Five do not control banks in the same sense that they do stockyards and car lines, but they possess overwhelming advantages over competitors.

Stockyards: The stockyards are the depot markets through which practically all animals which move in interstate commerce pass. Ownership, partial or complete, of these markets is not only a source of great profit but affords a fundamental business advantage.

How completely the Big Five control these markets will appear from the following list:

[1] The commission has definitely located Armour's interest in the Chicago Stock Yards Co. as 19.4 per cent. There is also evidence that Swift and probably Morris were parties to the negotiations by which Armour acquired his interests, but it has not yet been possible to locate Swift and Morris stock, because of the system by which the stockholders' names are concealed through the issuance of "bearer warrants" for the stock.

[2] 96 per cent owned by East St. Louis yards.

[3] Including Allerton family interests.

[4] 82 per cent owned by Sioux City yards.

The cattle-loan bank is the institution through which loans are effected for the purchase of cattle for breeding and fattening. How jealously this monopoly of making loans at the yards is guarded appears from the example at East St. Louis, where the packers would not permit the establishment of a rival bank within half a mile.

Direct control by ownership of market papers and other trade periodicals was definitely established by the commission in the case of six papers, and there are a number of others controlled by various indirect but effective methods. Control of market papers is important, both for their actual and potential influence over shipments and prices by the character of statements published and put on the wires, as well as for protection against criticism. How important this may be is shown by a letter written by the editor of a Texas paper to Henry Veeder, referring to the marked change in the policy of his papers, as he expressed it, "before and after taking" two loans of $5,000 each from Armour and Swift. This and other correspondence from the packers' files indicates that direct ownership is not necessary for control of these publications.

One of the trade journals frequently quoted as a source of authoritative information regarding the meat industry is the National Provisioner. An editor of this journal for years received a joint annual subsidy of $5,000 from Armour, Swift, and Morris.

The big packers' control at these markets is much greater than these statistics indicate. In the first place they are the largest and in some cases practically the only buyers at these various markets, and as such hold a whip hand over the commission men who act as the intermediaries in the sale of live stock.

The packers' power is increased by the fact that they control all the facilities through which live stock is sold to themselves. Control of stockyards comprehends control of live-stock exchange buildings where commission men have their offices; control of assignment of pens to commission firms; control of banks and cattle-loan companies; control of terminal and switching facilities; control of yardage services and charges; control of weighing facilities; control of the disposition of dead animals and other profitable yard monopolies; and in most cases control of all packing-house and other business sites. Packer-owned stockyards give these interests access to records containing confidential shipping information which is used to the disadvantage of shippers who have attempted to forward their live stock to a second market.

Private car lines and transportation privileges: The Big Five own 93 per cent of the total of all kinds of cars owned by interstate slaughterers, including refrigerator, stock, tank, box, flat, and gondola cars. The most important of these from the standpoint of monopolization are the refrigerator cars.

The Big Five own 91 per cent of all refrigerator cars properly equipped for the shipment of fresh meat that are operated upon the railroads of the United States. The railroads have almost no equipment suitable for shipping dressed meat, and, consequently, unless an independent packing company is large enough to afford to make a heavy outlay for refrigerator cars, it is practically impossible for it to attempt to ship fresh meat out of the locality in which it is produced. The smaller independents, therefore, confine themselves either to pork packing or to cattle slaughter for local consumption.

Icing stations advantageously located on the lines of the trunk railroads between St. Louis, Chicago, and the Atlantic seaboard are owned and operated by three of the five packers. At these stations the packers' cars are iced as well as all cars carrying perishable products, including the shipments of competitors. Besides serving as a particular advantage to the owners in that their own ice service is secured at cost, these stations put them in a position to secure valuable information concerning the shipments and customers of competitors.

From a competitive standpoint, however, a great advantage which the big packers have enjoyed has been the preferential treatment accorded their cars. The big packers' cars have been carefully handled, promptly returned, and used only for the shipment of the packers' own commodities. The small packers, on the other hand, have been subject to extreme delays in securing the return of their cars. Six months for a trip from St. Louis to New York and return was not at all uncommon, and there are a number of cases where nine months elapsed before the car came back to its owner. The railroads have also been accustomed to take liberties with the independents' cars, as, for example, permitting their beef cars to be used for the shipment of onions.

The freight tonnage controlled by the big packers has for years given them a great leverage in all their dealings with the railroads. Until the Interstate Commerce Commission interfered, this power was used to obtain money rebates, and in recent years to secure special privileges and concessions. The big packers sometimes acted in combination, throwing their joint power against the railroad or group of railroads from which special privileges were demanded.

It is interesting to note in this connection that the packers have organized various companies to sell railroad equipment and supplies, such as bumping posts, metal bearings, waste, ice, and coal. These companies have been profitable.

Cold storage: Profits and actual market control in the handling of perishable foods are alike dependent upon ability to buy during seasons of surplus production and low prices and to store at reasonable costs until there is a relative scarcity. The packers have such storage facilities. They have gone far beyond the requirements of their own output and have established huge plants in which they store outputs bought from other producers.

Branch houses and car routes: The packers' distribution of their products is effected through a system of branch houses located in the large towns and cities, and a system of refrigerator "peddler car" routes which reach the smaller communities. Swift & Co. reach a larger number of cities and towns by peddler car than all other packers, while Armour & Co. have developed a system of delivering from their branch houses by trucks, reaching by this means over 20,000 towns, and making their total number of towns greater than Swift & Co. The number of such branch houses and car routes controlled by the Big Five is as follows:

	Number of branch houses.	Car routes.
		Number of routes.	Number of towns reached.
Armour interests	366	197	[1] 24,681
Swift intersts	343	484	23,376
Morris interests	154	229	4,019
Wilson & Co. (Inc.)	117	187	1,903
Cudahy Packing Co	113	200	4,198
Total	1,093	1,297	(2)

[1] Including towns reached by Armour's truck sales.

[2] Total would include a great number of duplications.

This system of wholesale distribution through branch houses and peddler cars is the bulwark of monopoly. There is virtually no limit to the possible expansion of their wholesale merchandising short of the complete monopolization of the primary distribution of the Nation's food.

With the development of their branch house and car-route systems it is unnecessary for the packers to go through the slow process of building up manufacturing plants. Their initial move is to contract for the output of factories. After the manufacturers have been under exclusive contract for a few years they become virtually "tied" to the packers, and unable to break away and develop new outlets for production.

Already even the oldest and most strongly established wholesale houses are seeing line after line of their merchandise absorbed by the packers' branch-house system. First, they saw the packers encroach on the handling of butter, eggs, and cheese, then canned goods, then various kinds of "package goods," and now rice, sugar, coffee, and other staples are being increasingly handled by the packers. Last year the Big Five's combined sales totaled $2,127,245,000. At the present rate of expansion, within a few years the big packers would control the wholesale distribution of the Nation's food supply.

Financial and real estate interests: Lastly, as an element of control, are the big packers' widely distributed interests in banks and real estate, which the commission has not as yet completely explored.

In the financial field the packers' strength is based not so much on actual ownership as upon the influence which they can exert by reason of their volume of business and commanding industrial position.

They are further entrenched in financial institutions throughout the United States as is evidenced by the following list, which relates only to the principal cities and packing centers. In each of the banks shown in this list the packers are represented on the board of directors through members of the individual families, or through officers, directors, or confidential employees of the packing companies. In addition, there are a number of banks not covered by this list in which close business associates of the packers are directors.

The real-estate interests of the big packers apart from the land acquired and held for industrial purposes are very diverse and widely scattered. They range from immense terminal properties in great distributing centers to huge ranches in the West and in South America. Not as a list of holdings, but as examples of the kinds of properties which the big packers are interested in acquiring, the following investments may be cited:

Central manufacturing district, Chicago, Ill.: Owned by Chicago stockyards interests. Consists of 375 acres of factory sites situated "in the exact geographical and population center of Chicago."

North Kansas City real estate enterprises: Jointly owned by Armour, Swift, and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, including the following companies:

North Kansas City Development Co., North Kansas City Land & Improvement Association, Union Depot Bridge & Terminal Railroad Co., Parkside Land Co., Kansas City Ferry Co., and Guinotte Land Co. The combined book assets of these companies in January, 1918, amounted to $9,840,000, including 3,500 acres of land on the north side of the Missouri River and a strip known as the "River front property" on the south side.

Sutter Basin: The Sutter Basin consists of 120,000 acres of river bottom lands lying at the confluence of the Sacramento and Feather Rivers, which is now being reclaimed by a system of dikes. The Sutter Basin Co., 88 per cent owned by Armour interests, has acquired about 60,000 acres of this land and is now engaged in preparing it for cultivation. The company estimates that this land is worth from $500 to $1,000 per acre, making the total value somewhere between $30,000,000 and $60,000,000.

Among other real estate interests of the packers are the following:

Joint interests:
Kenwood Land Co. (Portland, Oreg.).
Peninsular Industrial Co. (Portland, Oreg.).
North Fort Worth Town Site Co. (North Fort Worth, Tex.).
South Oklahoma Town Site Co. (Oklahoma City, Okla.).
South San Francisco Land & Improvement Co. (South San Francisco, Cal.).

Separate control of 50 per cent or more of stock:
Chowchilla ranch (42,000 acres) (Merced County, Cal.).
Eastern Oregon Live Stock Co. (140,000 acres) (Harney County, Oreg.).
Hawkeye Land Co. (Sioux City, Iowa).
Franklin Land & Investment Co. (London, England).

EVIDENCE OF COMBINATION.

We now examine the character and extent of the relations which exist between these five big packers, with a view to discovering not only whether these relations are contrary to law, but what their effect is upon food production and the general prosperity of the country. The evidence of present-day activities is illuminated by a brief history of these companies and their relationships.

In the first place, these five corporations began as individual enterprises with small capital and, with the exception of Wilson & Co. (Inc.), have been, for two or more generations, under the management of the same families which established them.

Two of these concerns—Armour and Morris—are and always have been close corporations, with stocks almost entirely in the hands of the families. The Cudahy Packing Co. was a close corporation until recently. Its stock is now listed for sale to the public, but it is still dominated by the Cudahy family. The fourth, Swift & Co., although having a large number of stockholders, is now and has always been completely under the control of the Swift family. The 20,000 stockholders, widely advertised by Swift & Co., have never had even an approximately complete list of its subsidiaries and affiliated companies. Sulzberger & Sons Co., the predecessor of Wilson & Co. (Inc.), was also a close corporation, family controlled. To-day, as Wilson & Co., it has a large number of stockholders, but the absolute control of the corporation is vested in a voting trust, consisting of Thomas E. Wilson and four New York bankers—Charles H. Sabin, Harry Bronner, A. Barton Hepburn, and Elisha Walker.

Such concentration of ownership and control of these five companies in a small number of individuals made combination and conspiracy easy.

Furthermore, the "Big Five" are bound together by joint ownership of a large number of companies. In many cases these joint ownerships are not carried in the names of the principals, but, on the contrary, are concealed by all manner of devices. Thus, for example, Armour's and Morris's stock in the Union Meat Co. stands in the names of H. A. Chetham and H. J. Nelson, Swift employees, so that even the most careful scrutiny of the stockholders' list would leave the impression that the Union Meat Co. was merely affiliated with Swift & Co.

The accompanying diagram [p. 12000] presents graphically the joint interests of the five big packers. The 108 companies represented in this chart include only those in which two or more packers own stock or have representation upon the board of directors, with the exception of the National Provisioner, which is included because of the joint subsidy of $5,000 annually from Armour & Co., Swift & Co., and Morris & Co.

HISTORY OF THE CONSPIRACY.

The first public record of an inquiry into the relations of these corporations is the report made in 1890 by a committee of the United States Senate. After two years of investigation, this committee unanimously reported that there was an agreement between the then leading packers, namely, Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Nelson Morris & Co., Hammond & Co., to refrain from competition. The committee found, among other things, that there was collusion with regard to the fixing of prices and the division of territory and business. The conditions revealed by this investigation, it may be remarked, were in part responsible for the passage of the Sherman Antitrust Act on July 2, 1890.

This investigation and the passage of the Sherman Act, however, did not long prevent the big packers from combining, for it was admitted by Henry Veeder under oath, in 1912, that from May, 1893, until May, 1896, representatives of the leading packing companies, Armour & Co., Armour Packing Co., Cudahy Packing Co., G. H. Hammond Packing Co., East St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Co., Morris & Co., and Swift & Co., met regularly every Tuesday afternoon in a suite of rooms leased in the name of Henry Veeder, who acted as secretary and statistician of these meetings. It is interesting, in view of certain important evidence developed in the present investigation, to note that the rent for these rooms and other expenses connected with these meetings were apportioned among the packers in proportion to their shipments of dressed beef. At these meetings the territory was divided and the volume of business to be done by each packer was apportioned upon the basis of statistics compiled by Veeder, penalties being levied when any one of them exceeded his allotment in any territory. This was the first of the so-called "Veeder pools," conducted, it should be noted, by the same Henry Veeder whom we find acting now as the joint agent of the "Big Five" in various transactions.

From May, 1896, to January, 1897, no regular meetings were apparently held by the packers; but during the year 1897 Henry Veeder conducted what was known as a statistical bureau, which performed a part of the functions of the original Veeder pool.

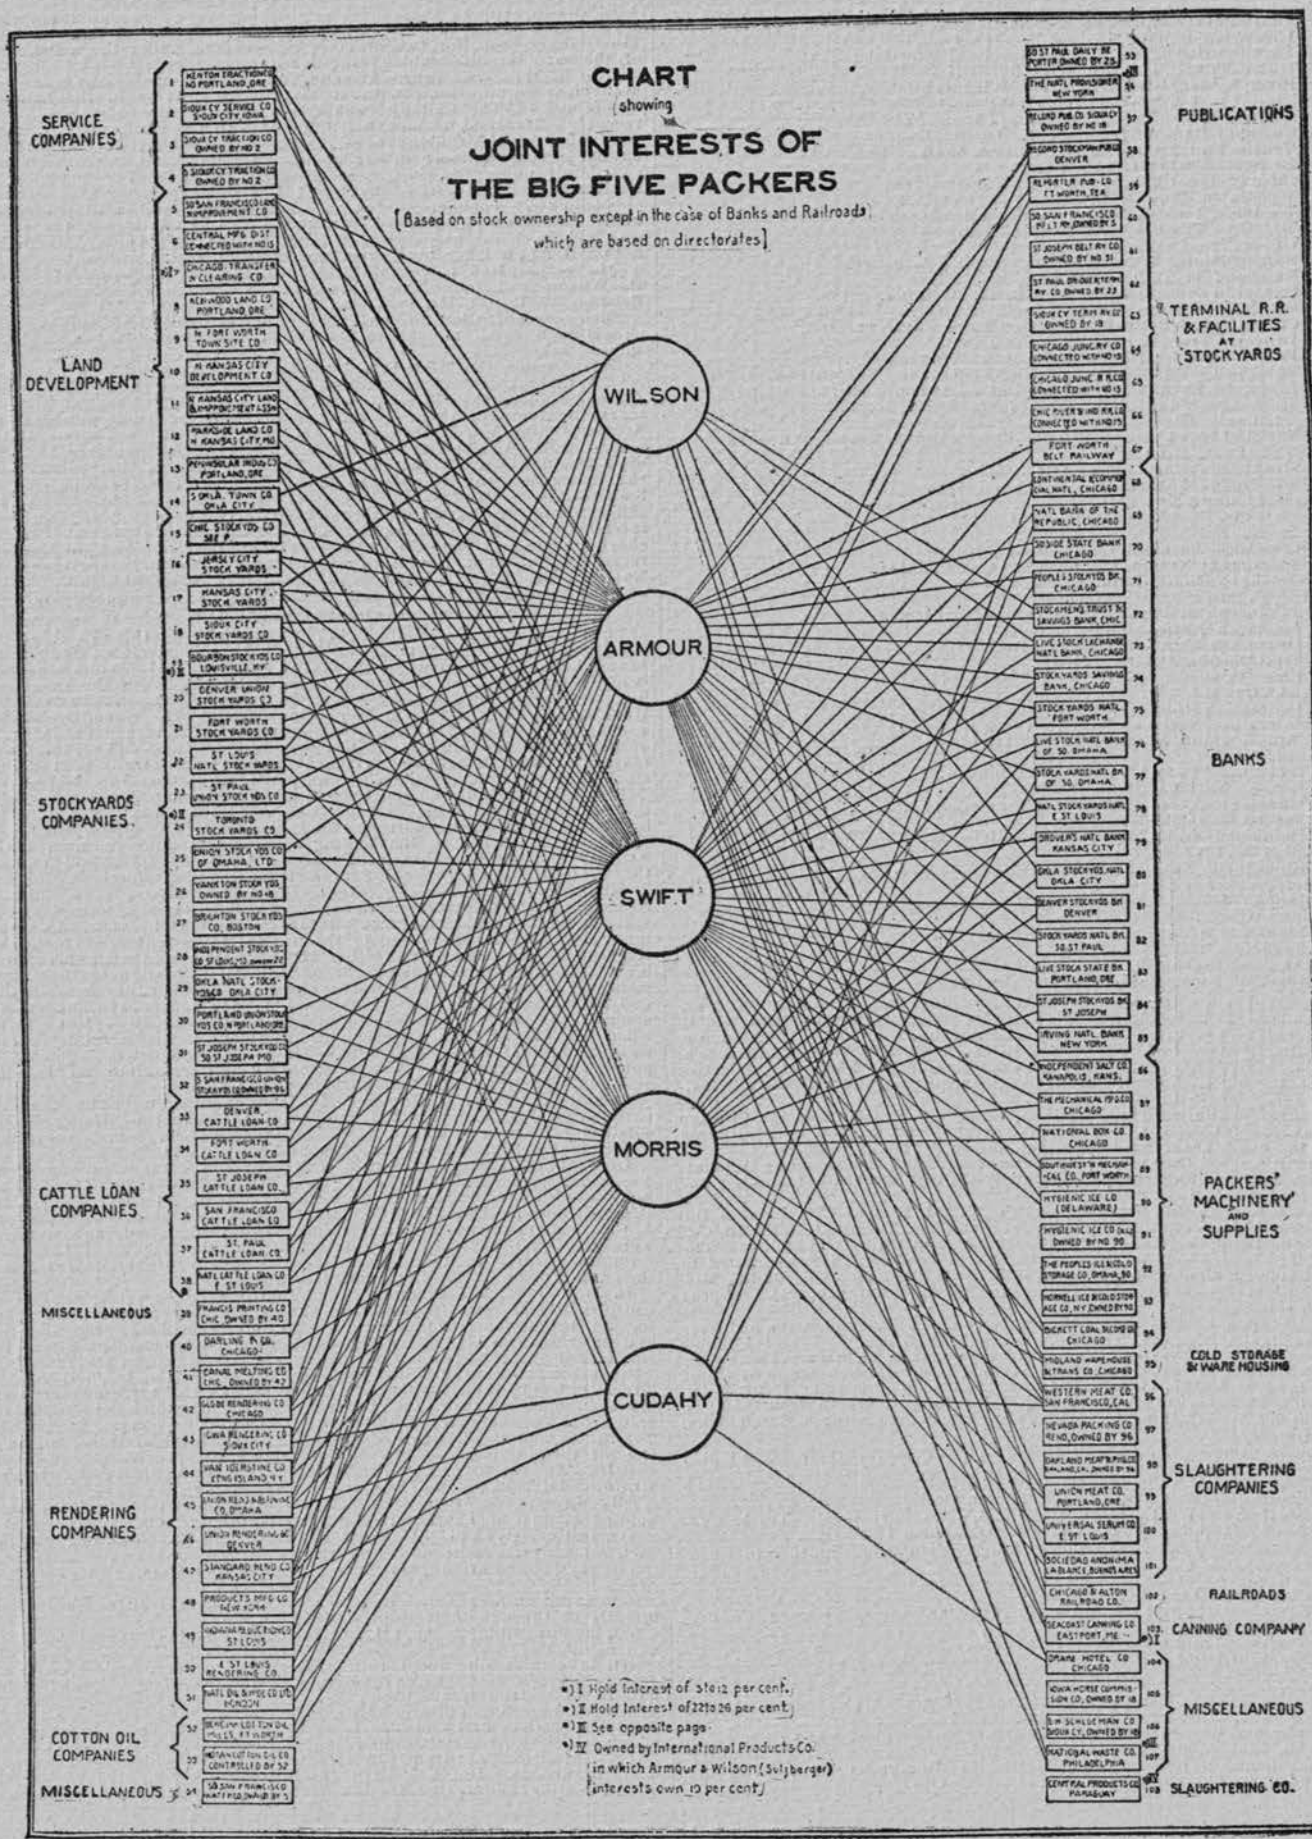
In January, 1893, however, a new pool was established under the management of Veeder, differing from the original pool only in that Schwarzschild & Sulzberger took the place of the East St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Co., which had been absorbed by Morris & Co.: the penalties for overshipment were increased, and auditors were employed to verify the statements of the packers. This pool terminated early in 1902, probably as a result of the investigation then being made by the Department of Justice.

In May, 1902, the Department of Justice filed sweeping charges of conspiracy and restraint of trade against the big packers and asked for an injunction. The charges were not specifically controverted, and after some delay and slight modifications a permanent injunction was issued by the Supreme Court of the United States on May 26, 1903. (The principal restraints imposed specifically by the injunction were "from entering into, taking part in, or performing any contract, combination, or conspiracy, the purpose or effect of which will be, as to trade and commerce in fresh meats between the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, a restraint of trade, in violation of the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies,'" either—

(By directing or requiring their respective agents to refrain from bidding against each other in the purchase of live stock;

(Or collusively and by agreement to refrain from bidding against each other at the sales of live stock;

(Or by combination, conspiracy, or contract raising or lowering prices;



(Or fixing uniform prices at which the said meats will be sold, either directly or through their respective agents;

(Or by curtailing the quantity of such meats shipped to such markets and agents;

(Or by establishing and maintaining rules for the giving of credit to dealers in such meats as charged in the bill, the effect of which rules will be to restrict competition;

(Or by imposing uniform charges for cartage and delivery of such meats to dealers and consumers, as charged in the bill, the effect of which will be to restrict competition.)

This injunction apparently terminated the pool, which exposure had made hazardous. But how little the big packers respected the courts of the Nation and feared its law is revealed by the fact, which has since come to light, that almost coincident with the application for an injunction the three largest—Armour, Swift, and Morris—secretly set to work to buy up many of their actual and potential competitors, with the object of forming a gigantic merger, monopolizing almost completely the entire meat industry. Cudahy and Schwarzschild & Sulzberger became in a minor degree parties to the merger plan, which progressed so far that more than a dozen corporations, valued at about $10,000,000, had been purchased, a million-dollar bond to insure good faith had been deposited by Armour, Swift, and Morris, and arrangements had been made through Kuhn, Loeb & Co. for a loan of $60,000,000 to finance the merger. All was going well until the head of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., foreseeing the approach of the "panic of 1903," refused to put through the financial arrangements and advised against the merger at the time.

The big packers thereupon decided to merge the properties which they had secretly acquired, and thus it was that the National Packing Co. came to be formed. Cudahy and Sulzberger were invited to purchase stock in the company (reports of Special Agent Dickinson, Bureau of Corporations, May 11 and 19, 1904), but declined to assume these additional obligations, probably for financial reasons. The entire stock of the National Packing Co. was therefore held by Armour, Swift, and Morris in proportion to the capital assets of the respective companies; that is to say, Armour & Co., 40.11; Swift & Co., 46.70; Morris & Co., 13.19; and properties acquired by the National Packing Co. after its formation in 1903 were jointly paid for by the Armour, Swift, and Morris companies in the same proportion.

The board of directors of the National Packing Co. was made up entirely of representatives of the three big companies. When these directors met each Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock (the same day and hour as the old Veeder pool meetings) to decide on policies, prices, and buying and shipping plans, they were, in fact, acting for all their joint interests, and no further communication was necessary. This simple and highly effective plan for interchanging information and fixing joint policies persisted undisturbed until, after the failure of the criminal suit against several of the big packers in 1911–12, the threat of a civil suit brought about the dissolution of the National Packing Co. during July and August, 1912. The dissolution consisted in a distribution of the properties of the National Packing Co. among Armour & Co., Swift & Co., and Morris & Co., and left all the strong independents which had been absorbed into the National Packing Co. still in the hands of the packers.

THE AMERICAN LIVE-STOCK POOL.

Although Sulzberger and Cudahy were not directly interested in the National Packing Co. and did not attend the weekly directors' meetings, they were nevertheless participants in the general conspiracy for controlling the meat industry, which had been formed in 1902, after the Veeder pools came under the ban of the temporary injunction. This general conspiracy consisted of a "live-stock pool," which evidence in our possession proves to be in existence.

Under the Veeder pools control of the meat trade was effected by agreements regulating the shipments of dressed meats into the various competitive districts, with a system of fines for overshipments and bonuses for undershipments. This scheme was so thoroughly exposed during the proceedings which led to the injunction of 1903 that it was abandoned. Besides it was a clumsy plan, which required a large statistical bureau and regular weekly meetings to determine the amount of the shipments for the coming week into each district and fix the margins. A much simpler and equally effective plan was then evolved in the form of a live-stock pool, providing substantially for the division of purchases of the cattle, sheep, and hogs sent to market according to certain fixed percentages, which could be agreed upon for long periods and needed to be changed only when conditions were greatly altered, as, for example, when one of the big packers purchased an independent plant.

This division of live-stock purchases is not only an automatic regulator of the relative volume of business of each of the Big Five, but also secures substantial uniformity of prices paid for live stock and, consequently, of the prices at which dressed meats are sold. In brief, the prearranged division of live-stock purchases forms the essential basis of a system by which the big packers are relieved of all fear of each other's competition and, acting together, are able to determine not only what the live-stock producers shall receive for their cattle and hogs but what the consumer shall pay for his meat.

In order that the working of this system shall be clearly understood, it is well to start with the simplest situation—that of a stockyard in which only two of the big packers are represented and where the division is commonly called "fifty-fifty." In such a market the independent packers, local butchers, and speculators will purchase not to exceed 5 per cent of the live stock, far too few to influence the market strongly, much less fix the price. The other 95 per cent of the live stock, it is agreed, is to be divided evenly between the two big packers. This is the situation at Fort Worth and Denver.

Even if there should be no further collusion or communication between the two big packers, it must be obvious that there will be no truly competitive purchases. Each buyer may come into the market with a different idea of what the different grades of cattle are worth, but only a few sales will be made before each will know what the other is offering, and they will come to a common price. In a freely competitive market the common price would tend to reflect the true market value, because the low bidder would be required to meet this price or be left without a supply to keep his packing house running. But in a market where there is an agreed division the natural law of the market is turned topsy-turvy, and the common price inevitably becomes that offered by the low bidder. Thus, even without any collusion beyond the agreement to divide purchases, the market price which the producer receives for his live stock is bound in the long run to be the lowest price which will keep the producers raising cattle, hogs, and sheep and sending them to the stockyard.

But the Big Five are not content to trust simply the inevitable tendencies of such a market. They must be sure of their control from the minute the market opens until it closes. Their buyers are all instructed in advance from Chicago just what they must buy on the basis of the estimated receipts; the buyers for the big packers are held back until one, two, or even three hours after the market opens, and then all go out into the yards together. By telephone and telegraph the buyers keep in constant touch with Chicago throughout the day, so that if the receipts run heavier or lighter than had been estimated, or if any other contingency arises, proper adjustments can be made, which will be in line with other markets and with the activities of other packers.

Throughout the entire market day each big packer knows exactly what the others are doing in all the markets, and at the end of the day, the end of the week, the end of the month, and the end of the year the purchases of all are checked up, so that if any of the five has bought more or less than his share, or has bought "out of line," the others may administer the proper measure of correction. If, for example, a packer buys less than his share over any considerable period, he is liable to have his percentage reduced, while if, on the other hand, any packer tries to "hog the market," he is liable to have the others retaliate by "putting the market up on him."

Furthermore, the big packers are not ordinarily content simply with a general approximation to the agreed division, but insist on dividing even the small bunches of animals. Here, for example, is a letter written by Louis F. Swift to Alden B. Swift at a time when he was apprehensive that the cattlemen might become dissatisfied with the conditions at St. Joseph, where the Swifts control the local stockyards:

SEPTEMBER 12, 1914.

Mr. ALDEN B. SWIFT,
Swift & Co., South St. Joseph, Mo.

DEAR SIR: Will be glad to have you advise me if you think our cattle buyer at St. Joseph is all right and is doing as well as Mr. Stemm did.

Also if you notice any difference in Morris's cattle buying.

Awaiting your reply,

Yours, respectfully, LOUIS F. SWIFT.

P. S.—Has our new plan of not insisting on dividing all the small bunches of cattle given any snap to the market? [Italics by commission.]

L. F. S.

The agreement among the Big Five for the division of live-stock purchases provides not only for the division at each market on which two or more of the Big Five are represented but also for the division of all the live stock which they purchase for the country as a whole. Thus, so far as the big packers are concerned, each knows in advance that his packing house is assured of relatively the same volume of business as the others and that he will be able to buy his live stock at the lowst price that will keep the producers in the business and induce them to ship their animals to market.

This alone would be sufficient to insure that the dressed-meat prices of all the big packers would be approximately the same. But here again the packers are not content simply with long-run results. Not only is there constant interchange of information regarding "margins" and "test costs" at headquarters in Chicago, but in the different selling districts the district managers inspect one another's stocks and exchange information regarding margins, even if they do not in all districts have such regular meetings as our agents have discovered them participating in at Los Angeles and Tacoma.

There is apparently no "dressed-meat pool" at the present time such as existed in the nineties, for the reason that it would be as useless as a fifth wheel on a wagon. All that the old Veeder pools accomplished, and more, is secured by the live-stock pool and by constant interchange of information at Chicago and at the points of distribution.

PROOF OF THE CONSPIRACY.

So far we have been merely describing the character and methods of the conspiracy among the Big Five. We now offer some of the illuminating proofs, leaving the examination of the voluminous details regarding the workings of the conspiracy for the full report.

The first evidence which came into our possession indicating the existence of a live-stock pool was in the form of a tattered memorandum discovered by one of the commission's agents in the files of Edward F. Swift. This memorandum, which bore signs of frequent consultation, contained only certain percentages, totaling 100, opposite which was scribbled "% live buyers." This document might not have attracted so much attention if in the same files had not been discovered a set of sheets showing the number and percentages of live stock purchased by each of the Big Five at the principal markets and in the entire country. The first glance at these sheets revealed such a remarkable uniformity from year to year in the percentages purchased by each of the big packers as to convince any disinterested person that such results could be attained only by agreement. Here, for example, are the percentages of cattle purchased by each of the Big Five during the last five years:

Per cent of total cattle purchases.

	Swift.	Armour.	Morris.	Wilson (Sulzberger).	Cudahy.
1913	33.90	27.18	17.80	11.74	9.38
1914	34.01	27.16	17.97	11.56	9.30
1915	34.47	27.57	18.14	10.15	9.67
1916	34.59	27.04	17.86	10.94	9.57
1917	35.07	26.96	17.14	10.85	9.98

The percentages for hogs, sheep, and calves displayed the same uniformity, and, even more significant, the figures for the separate markets also were consistently maintained.

Not long after this discovery another agent of the commission, in an examination of documents in the possession of Henry Veeder, counsel for Swift & Co., found a number of sheets containing various percentage figures, opposite a number of which appeared letters which were the initials of the different packing companies. But of particular importance was a series of percentage figures, accompanied by the symbols which Veeder had testified in 1912 represented the various participants in the Veeder pools. These had been bracketed and combined in such a way that the percentages for the companies which have now been consolidated with Armour, Swift, and Morris, following the dissolution of the National Packing Co., were brought together into a second series of percentages which correspond exactly with figures on the Swift memorandum. These figures seemed significant when, immediately after their discovery, Henry Veeder refused further access to the papers in his possession.

When these percentages and records of live-stock purchases were found, certain representatives of the packing companies hastened to explain that there was no significance whatever in the uniformity of purchases from year to year, either for the country as a whole or for the separate live-stock markets; that these percentages were determind by the capacities of the several plants; and that if there was a correspondence between the percentages of purchases and the memoranda which had been found, it was merely an interesting coincidence.

About this time, however, other agents investigating Armour & Co. and Wilson & Co. (Inc.) brought in several letters which demolished the "capacity theory." First was a letter of October 19, 1916, from

Phillip D. Armour to J. Ogden Armour which shows that although Armour's plant at Denver had a much smaller capacity than Swift's the division of live stock was nevertheless "fifty-fifty."

"MY DEAR UNCLE OGDEN: Just a line to tell you that Tom and I arrived here from Fort Worth and had a very pleasant trip.

"I can not tell you how surprised I was in going over the plant here. Of all the plants we have, this one certainly needs our first attention. In my opinion, the best part of it is as bad as the worst part of any of our other plants. Swift's plant, from what I hear and from the little I saw of it, is far ahead of ours, both as to the size and condition. Of course, as you know, everything here is done on a fifty-fifty basis, and with the facilities we have it is almost impossible to keep this ratio. [Italics by commission.] * * *

"Hope you are well and that everything is going all right. Tom joins me in kindest regards.

"Very sincerely, yours, P. D. A."

There are also letters between Arthur Meeker, vice president of Armour & Co., and Thomas E. Wilson, president of Wilson & Co., which prove that even so strong a company as Wilson is not permitted to buy on any market it pleases, but must conform to the agreement, which was made "on the bases of the map when peace was declared":

CHICAGO, March 24, 1917.

Mr. T. E. WILSON,
President Wilson & Co., Union Stock Yards.

DEAR MR. WILSON: Our hog department say that any hogs that your people bought in 1912 or 1915 in Omaha they bought under cover. They never maintained a salaried buyer there. What few they bought they bought through a speculator named "Red" Murphy, who used all kinds of schemes in shipping them out to have their destination unknown, shipping them to a junction point, and then they would be reconsigned under fictitious names.

As soon as the matter was taken up with the S. & S. Co. they discontinued it. So I fail to see how you can honestly claim any rights to-day for any underhand work that your firm did in 1912.

Yours, very truly,

ARTHUR MEEKER.

MARCH 26, 1917.

Mr. ARTHUR MEEKER,
Armour & Co., U. S. Yards, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR MR. MEEKER: Answering your note of March 24, you are misinformed on the matter referred to. Our people did maintain a salaried buyer in Omaha, as I have previously advised you. In fact, Mr. Harry Booth, who is now our head buyer in Chicago, was himself stationed there for periods of several weeks, and if, as you state, Mr. Red Murphy undertook to cover up the purchases that he made for this company and destination, he did it for reasons of his own, and I think you probably know that all of the hogs that he buys are first weighed to him, sorted, and reweighed. This is his practice to-day, and no doubt was in former years, when this concern did business with him.

Yours, very truly,

———.

In the public hearings, when these letters were read, Mr. Francis J. Heney, special attorney for the Federal Trade Commission, said:

"Those letters, Mr. Commissioner, can not mean anything except that the complaint was made that Wilson & Co. did not have any right to buy any hogs in that market. They must get their percentages elsewhere, and they did not have any right, because the map was not fixed that way when the peace was declared and the combination made."

As proof of the existence of these local agreements, we quote also the following excerpts from the testimony of Mr. M. R. Murphy, general superintendent of the Cudahy Packing Co., given unwillingly and only after he had been confronted with the letters from E. A. Cudahy, which appear in the record:

"Question by Mr. HENEY: I want to read you, in connection with that testimony, the copy of letters here taken from the files of the Cudahy Co. The first one is dated June 21, 1911:

"'Mr. M. R. MURPHY,
"'South Omaha, Nebr.

"'DEAR SIR: Referring to the attached papers, Mr. McNaughton advised me that he learned from one of Morris & Co.'s men that there was considerable talk about the Kansas City Stockyard that we sold out to the rendering company. Of course, we can't stop the rumors, but all we have to do is just to keep quiet and let them do the talking. I think we are justified in quitting business on account of the position that the commission men have taken.

"'When I was coming to Chicago on Monday night Mr. R. C. Howe was on the train, and he called to see me at this office, and from what he said I don't see anything for us to do only to secure our 30 per cent of the hogs at South Omaha, unless we want to take 29 per cent and let Swift run 26 per cent.

"'I expect our Omaha and Sioux City market will be out of line for some time if we are going to maintain our position. I don't see anything else for us to do. The Omaha market seems to be the only point in question, and I think we ought to figure on keeping the Sioux City market on an independent basis.

"'I will be in Omaha Friday morning.

"'Yours, truly,

"'E. A. CUDAHY.'

"And then down at the bottom are lead-pencil figures—

"'30
30
25 Swifts
15
———

"Did you receive the original of that letter?

"Answer by Mr. MICHAEL R. MURPHY. I evidently did; but I have no recollection of it now.

"Mr. HENEY. Well, at that time the percentage that you were aiming to buy per year was 30 per cent, wasn't it?

"Mr. MURPHY. Evidently Mr. Cudahy had that in mind.

"Mr. HENEY. Well, you say you buy on directions from Chicago. You had it in mind then, too, didn't you?

"Mr. MURPHY. Well, on his advices; but he never notified me to buy a percentage, or anything like that. He would say, 'Take your requirements, or whatever you need.'

"Mr. HENEY. Well, let's see—let's reread a portion of this [reading]:

"'When I was coming to Chicago on Monday night, Mr. R. C. Howe was on the train, and he called to see me at this office, and from what he said I don't see anything for us to do only to secure our 30% of the hogs at South Omaha, unless we want to take 29% and let Swift run 26%.'

"Now, isn't it a fact that it was within your knowledge that at that time Armour & Co. were aiming to get 30 per cent of the receipts at South Omaha, and Cudahy & Co. were to get 30 per cent, and Swift & Co. were to get 25 per cent, and Morris & Co. 15 per cent of the receipts?

"Mr. MURPHY. Why, it is evidently so from that letter.

"Mr. HENEY. The next letter I will read is dated November 27, 1911, taken from Cudahy's file and is addressed [reading]:

"'Mr. M. R. MURPHY,
"'South Omaha, Nebr.

"'DEAR SIR: I had a call from your neighbor to-day, and he agrees that we are paying too much money for hogs at Omaha and Sioux City, and that if we could get Omaha right, of course, it would regulate Sioux City, and he believes the best plan would be to let other people have what they want, and then split what is left. I believe in this plan, and I would advise you to work on it for this week, and I would suggest that you either call him on the phone or see him some time to-morrow and talk the matter over. We are killing a lot of hogs, and there isn't anything in them, and it is about time that we should be able to buy them at a margin.

"'Yours, truly,

"'E. A. CUDAHY.'

"That neighbor was Armour, wasn't it?

"Mr. MURPHY. Not to my—my recollection of this letter was it was his neighbor, instead of 'your neighbor.'

"Mr. HENEY. Whom did he mean by that?

"Mr. MURPHY. I would not know who he meant unless he meant some of the Armours or Swifts, or possibly this National. The National, I think, were——

"Mr. HENEY (interrupting). Oh, you can readily see that was Armour. Don't you see you would not have divided with Swift after what was left at Sioux City, you would have divided with Armour equally?

"Mr. MURPHY. Well, this takes in Omaha also, this letter does.

"Mr. HENEY. Yes; well, Armour's percentage in Omaha is the same as yours, 30–30, and Cudahy was claiming the same percentage as Armour at Sioux City on account of being the only other plant. So, of course, that would be Armour?

"Mr. MURPHY. My recollection was that he had a call from his neighbor instead of 'your neighbor.'

"Mr. HENEY. Well, who did you go to see?

"Mr. MURPHY. I have no recollection of going to see anybody.

"Mr. HENEY. You were just as anxious as anybody to please Mr. Cudahy and get this thing—this Omaha market, in line, weren't you?

"Mr. MURPHY. Yes, sir.

"Mr. HENEY. And naturally you would act on it?

"Mr. MURPHY. As a rule.

"Mr. HENEY. But you have forgotten it?

"Mr. MURPHY. As far as 'neighbor' is concerned, I have no recollection of meeting anyone whom he might have designated as a neighbor.

"Mr. HENEY. Well, Armour was the only other one that was largely interested in getting things right at Sioux City, wasn't he?

"Mr. MURPHY. At Sioux City, I would naturally think he would be."

Out on the Pacific coast, where there have been less frequent investigations than in the East, the conspiracies to control live-stock and meat prices are conducted much more openly. Not only are there meetings of the representatives of the companies such as our agents uncovered in Los Angeles and Tacoma, but the heads of the packing companies are so little afraid that they fix prices by correspondence. We have a large number of their price-fixing letters, dating from 1915 to the time of our agents' visit in 1917, from which we select the two following, which are interesting because they show the Western Meat Co., jointly owned by the Big Five, trying to fix a price so low that the Cudahy Packing Co.'s representative suggested a higher one:

APRIL 15, 1915.

Mr. R. SCOTT,
Mgr., Cudahy Pkg. Co., Los Angeles, Cal.

DEAR SIR: Do not know just when I will be in Los Angeles, but thought I would let you know that it looks to us as though it would be fairly easy to buy cattle on a reasonable basis. I think 6 cents will be the opening price, and whether they go lower or not will depend entirely on how many are offered, as the demand for beef is less than last year, regardless of the exposition.

They tell us that Mr. Fuller is shipping some of his cattle to Los Angeles to kill. Our man went down to see these cattle with Mr. Fuller who priced them at 7 cents. We did not know whether you were figuring on using these cattle or not, but we told him that our ideas were 6 cents, which of course would not hurt you in making your trade. Do you need these cattle, as if you don't we could probably use some of them very nicely, as they are not too heavy and are fairly close by?

Our market is about the same as when you were up here last, 10¼–10½ cents for desirable steers weighing 650/700 lbs., and 9¾–10¼ cents for the heavier weights. I am quoting the Butcherton prices on straight cattle, as we would not consider selling anything under 10½ cents at the present time.

Has anybody bought the Oxnard cattle yet, as I was told they could be purchased for 6¼ cents with a 4 per cent shrink?

With best regards to you and Mr. Benjamin, I remain,

Yours, very truly,

(Signed) F. L. WASHBURN.

FLW–O

P. S.—I received a letter the other day from Mr. Cudahy thanking me for taking you all to the plant, which I very much appreciated.

F. L. W.

THE CUDAHY PACKING CO.,
Los Angeles, Cal., April 22, 1915.

Mr. F. L. WASHBURN,
Western Meat Co., San Francisco, Cal.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 15th came duly to hand and would have had my attention sooner were it not on account of my absence in Imperial Valley.

Found the valley looking well, with an abundance of feed in sight and not a great many cattle on hand to consume it. The only disturbing element is an invasion of grasshoppers that were in striking evidence in parts of the valley. Whether these will increase and multiply so as to become a serious menace or will "fold their tents like the Arab gents and silently steal away" we are unable to say, but hope they will not prove of as great injury as they were last year.

We note your views as to the future of the grass cattle market, which seems to be in line with the views of most of the Los Angeles packers. I can hardly bring myself to believe, however, that we will be fortunate enough to get good grass American cattle for 6 cents per pound, and while we have not yet arranged with Fullers as to the price to be paid for the Chowchilla cattle, I have in mind a figure of 6½ cents. The sample shipment we have had is very good, and two or three weeks more time on good feed, on which they are on, will make them a very desirable herd. The weights are right and they are going to be in good condition. Our idea would be that 6¼ cents for the average run of grass cattle would be about a fair market figure, provided there are sufficient supplies to meet the requirements of the summer trade. Woodward-Bennett & Co. and the Pacific coast people seem to think there is going to be a bountiful supply of good steers. I have not yet heard the Hauser people express themselves. We understand, however, they have already paid 6½ cents for some grass steers from low freight points.

Answering your inquiry as to the Oxnard cattle, they were sold to the Pacific coast at 6¼ cents with a 4 per cent shrink. They were certainly a cheap lot of cattle and should make a nice "pot" of money. The Patterson ranch people must certainly have been in a panic to have sold them at that price with as much cheap feed as there is available at the present time. They could certainly have afforded to carry them into the summer or fall, but perhaps their judgment in disposing of them at the present time may be justified by future prices.

Very truly, yours,

THE CUDAHY PACKING CO.,
(Signed) R. S. SCOTT, Manager.

We will need the Chowchilla steers. Expect to use most of them before other coast cattle are fully matured.

THE "BLACK BOOK" MEMORANDA.

These cumulative proofs of the existence of a combination among the Big Five alone would be sufficient basis for the commission's conclusions; but they need not rest even upon this foundation, for we have memoranda by one of the members of the combination telling in detail of the negotiations which took place at several of the meetings in which the agreements were made and perfected. These memoranda were written by Germon F. Sulzberger, then president of Sulzberger & Sons Co., as soon as possible after he left the meetings, which was frequently late at night. As the minutes were for his own guidance, they covered particularly the phases of the agreements in which his company was especially interested. When discovered by the commission's agents in the files of G. F. Sulzberger, the memoranda were contained in a black leather binder, stamped in gold on the cover "G. Sulzberger," for convenience hereafter referred to as the "Black Book."

As a rule, the important parties in these negotiations were designated by code symbols. The translation of the coded proper names of the Black Book is stated by G. F. Sulzberger, and is corroborated by internal evidence to be as follows:

"Sanford"—J. Ogden Armour, or the Armour interest.
"H"—The Swift interest, or one of the Swift brothers.
"Klee"—The Morris interest, represented by Edward Morris until his death, November, 1913, then by Thomas E. Wilson.
"Williams"—Arthur Meeker, vice president of Armour & Co.

In order to understand these memoranda it is necessary to recall that the National Packing Co., jointly owned by Armour, Swift, and Morris, which had been the instrument by which the combination controlled the meat industry after the abandonment of the "Veeder pool" in 1902, had been dissolved in July, 1912, and its properties distributed. This required an adjustment of the percentages, which was effected at some time prior to the 29th of January, 1913. The basis adopted was the actual division of live-stock purchases in 1910, modified by the distribution of the live-stock purchases of the National Packing Co.'s subsidiaries and by certain arbitrary adjustments to meet new conditions which had been created since 1910. These figures are set forth in a memorandum in the Black Book of a "meeting held with Sanford (Armour) at his office January 29, 1913, 3.15 p. m." This memorandum also contains an interesting paragraph which illuminates the apparent competition which takes place, and shows how easily such matters can be adjusted between "friends," if there is no respect for the Sherman Act or the Federal court's injunction:

"Sanford (Armour) seemed very discouraged with the general situation and prospects. I explained this was due, a good deal, to his own foolish tactics in New York; that the situation there had been completely demoralized by his actions and that this was a very sensitive situation. He admitted that he thought they had made a mistake there, but that the rest of the situation did not make him anxious to change his attitude. I explained to him that he was injuring us more than anyone else there, as we had larger proportionate interests. He claimed that this was not so, that 'H' (Swift) had larger interests, but I explained to him that proportionately this was not the case. He said he had no intent to work against us, and said that he would arrange now to do the following: Reduce New York 10 per cent this week; 10 per cent next week."

By the spring of 1914 some questions had arisen as to the percentage agreement, which required settlement, so, in connection with another equally important conspiracy, referred to later, these questions were taken up for discussion at several meetings held during April, May, and June, 1914. In order to show the character of these meetings and the method of arriving at an agreement, we will quote from one of the memoranda, that of the "Meeting at Armour's office June 4, 1914, p. m." The Armour, Swift, Morris, and Sulzberger interests were represented at this meeting, but Cudahy apparently was not there, and it appears from other information that Cudahy, during this period at least, was not recognized as one of the "insiders," but accepted whatever proportion was allotted to him.

"Sanford (Armour) says showed plus 10 last week, but worse this week. (Note: This refers to the margin of profit on dressed-beef sales.)

"Question of eastern killing of sheep and lambs, whether or not this is to be included, was discussed but not decided. Klee (Morris) claimed export cattle 1910 should be included, Sanford opposed. I stated that this was more than the mere purchasing of stock.

"Export figures for 1910, according to Sanford, showed the following:

Armour	2,700
Morris (excluding 17,000 exported from Canada)	43,000
Swift	17,000
S. & S.	13,000

"Klee figures, including exports, 18.10. Sanford claimed this figure should be, excluding exports, 17.59. Sanford shows 11.79, including exports, as against 11.73, excluding exports for Sand. (S. & S.) Klee claimed account beef formerly exported by others having included (sic) therefore cattle exported 1910 should also be included. Sanford claimed this incorrect."

Armour's office appears, from those memoranda, to have been the chief meeting place at which these negotiations were carried on, and it further appears from numerous references that Arthur Meeker, vice president of Armour & Co., designated as "Williams" in the Black Book, acted as a sort of secretary to the combination, telling each what his share was and how nearly each was living up to the agreement.

These memoranda do not stand alone, but are checked and corroborated by numerous documents taken from the files of the packers and from other sources. Together they form conclusive evidence of a criminal business conspiracy.

THE INTERNATIONAL MEAT POOL.

The Black Book memoranda are not limited to a record of the American meat combination, but cover in equal detail the international meat pool formed by the Armour, Swift, Morris, and Sulzberger interests in conspiracy with certain British and South American concerns to regulate and divide the shipments of beef, mutton, and other meats from South America to the United States and certain foreign countries, particularly England.

In 1911 an agreement, referred to by Sulzberger as the "old pool," had been made by the seven packing companies operating in South America, providing for the regulation of the total export shipments and for the proportion each was to ship, as determined by meetings held from time to time. This pool broke up in April, 1913, because La Blanca Co., owned jointly by Armour and Morris, demanded a large increase in its percentage. The Argentine press at the time stated that the break was caused by the insistence of the American companies on increasing their exports to the United States as soon as the tariff was removed. The result of the break in the agreement was an almost immediate increase in cattle prices in Argentina.

About April, 1914, the pool was renewed, and it is to the meetings at which the new agreement was perfected that the memoranda in the Black Book refer. The principal meetings, attended by delegates from the American companies, were held in London, but these were supplemented by meetings and discussions among the big American packers in Chicago.

The notes on the meetings as recorded by Germon Sulzberger in the Black Book tell the story of the perfecting of the pool. We quote the notes on the meeting of June 4, 1914, which are unique in that they drop the code and give the proper names of those present:

MEETING HELD AT ARMOUR'S OFFICE JUNE 4, 1914, A. M.

Present: Messrs. White, Wilson, and Edward Swift.

I explained regarding Lamport (Lamport & Holt, big shipping company) space to States, also misunderstanding in regard to mutton.

I stated that our June shipments to States were 227 tons chilled and 120 tons frozen, and from July should be about 180 tons weekly up to October 1, 1914, and from then it would be about 250 to perhaps 350 tons weekly up to July, 1918. They questioned statement of 350 tons weekly and said they thought this was an error, probably coming on only fortnightly boats, which are starting in after October and which are probably all frozen.

La Blanca (owned by Armour and Morris) stated they had 500 tons from July on and probably 555 to 560 tons from October on up to 1918.

(NOTE.—This agreement was apparently to run until 1918.)

La Plata (owned by Swift) contract with Lamport & Holt is they are to receive one-third of total space, this covering both Uruguay and Argentine plants. I stated I thought this a little excessive for Swift.

Mutton: No one thought this item of any particular importance or interest, as they found the business unprofitable, excepting at a certain particular season of the year. While Patagonia is not included, no mutton can be shipped from there now, it not being the season until December.

Beef: They also stated percentages which had been allotted us on beef for England were as follows: Up to Sansinena (Sansinena Frozen Meat Co., Ltd.) contributed equally by everyone; difference up to one-half of La Blanca contributed by Nelson (James Nelson & Sons, Ltd.), in which they thought probably Poels had also contributed.

Sheep and lambs: The understanding had been that these were to remain as in the old pool previous to April, 1913. [Italics by the commission.] Understanding was that sheep from Uruguay, not to exceed 20,000 weekly up to October of this year. As far as the Argentine sheep were concerned, no one cared for this business, as it was not profitable at the moment.

There is no understanding that Uruguay is entitled to 25 per cent of total Uruguay-Argentine sheep; these figures happened to come out in this way at this moment. After six weeks Argentine may or may not be increased without a corresponding change in Uruguay figures; the understanding being simply that Uruguay mutton shipments are not to exceed 20,000 per week up until October, whereas the 60,000 carcasses per week for Argentine extend only for a six weeks' period.

As regards mutton for the United States, this is entirely unlimited.

Regarding beef to the United States, it was understood that Lamport & Holt would give Sansinena space equal to the River Plate (River Plate Fresh Meat Co., Ltd.) space.

I stated that the United States shipments as arranged figured about as follows, which figures were made note of:

La Plata (La Plata Cold Storage Co.)	32.23
Uruguay La Blanca (La Blanca Co.)	23.02
River Plate (River Plate Fresh Meat Co.)	11.97
Sansinena.
Sansinena Uruguay.
Smithfield & Argentine (Smithfield & Argentine Meat Co., Ltd.)	11.05
Nelson (James Nelson & Sons, Ltd.)	11.97
F. A. C. (Frigorifico Argentine Central)	9.76

(NOTE.—Swift owns the La Plata; Armour and Morris jointly own the La Blanca; and Sulzberger then and Wilson & Co. now own the F. A. C.)

I stated in reference to these figures that there would be some change on account of Sansinena not being included.

I stated we were not satisfied with our figures, which they explained, however, were all that could fairly be asked.

(Signed) G. F. S. (GERMON F. SULZBERGER).

That this combination and conspiracy to limit the supplies of meat to the United States and our allies has continued to the present time, and with pernicious results, is shown by a statement made in 1917 by the president of a committee appointed by the Argentine Chamber of Deputies to investigate the cost of necessities:

"They (the combination of packing companies) suppress real competition, maintaining it only in appearance, and they determine by common agreement the prices which are to be paid to producers, reserving to themselves the right to sell at the highest price possible in order to obtain enormous profits which do not remain in the country. Thus it is that these freezing companies have been able to show in their latest balance sheets more than 100 per cent of profits; that is to say, that in a single year they have made more than their capital. * * * Here the freezing companies contract with the foreign purchaser, who is to-day, owing to circumstances of the war, a single party, since the allied Governments have concentrated their purchases in a central office—and having made their agreements at prices which they raise as high as possible, they purchase the live stock from the producers, imposing upon them the law of the strongest."

AGREEMENTS IN OTHER LINES.

These agreements and close relationships among the big packers are by no means confined to the purchase of live stock and the sale of meats. Here, for example, are extracts from a few letters taken from the files of the Neenah Cheese & Cold Storage Co., one of the subsidiaries of Armour & Co., which neglected to "comb" its files before the visit of the commission's agents. These extracts, more or less typical of a hundred or more letters in the commission's possession, reveal how closely the American cheese market is controlled.

This control of the cheese market is of particular interest in view of the enormous hoarding of this food indicated by a letter, dated November 4, 1917, from C. E. Blodgett (who, with Armour, owns the C. E. Blodgett Cheese, Butter & Egg Co.) to I. F. Laing, of the Neenah Co., another Armour concern:

"You and I both know that there are enough twins (a form of American cheese) in storage in the United States, if England doesn't come back and buy of us, to last for the next two years to come."

On June 30, 1916, J. W. Brown (manager of the butter, egg, and poultry department of Armour & Co.) wrote to I. F. Laing:

"Your Mr. Nesbit at Spring Green raised the market to 14¾ on cheese. Don't you think this is very bad work? How do you expect we can influence the people at Plymouth (the principal cheese board) to hold the market at 14½ cents if you raise the figures? Wish you would tell this gentleman that he must not do this, because our interests elsewhere are so great that we can not afford to raise the market on ourselves, and Plymouth will certainly go up if you bid over the Plymouth prices on other boards. They all seem to be worked up about this."

Relations between the big packers in the cheese market are well shown by the following letters:

MARSHFIELD, WIS., July 8, 1916.

Mr. J. W. BROWN,
% Armour & Co., Chicago, Ill.

DEAR MR. BROWN: Referring to your wire of even date in regard to getting the market down at Plymouth. I doubt very much if this can be done. I have had this up with Plymouth and Sheboygan (two big cheese boards) this week, and again to-day. Also, talked with Mr. Pauly (Pauly & Pauly, Swift buys four-fifths of sales) about it, and they complain bitterly about what Blanke is doing down in that section; about going out to the factories, and paying premiums for cheese and claiming that the dealers are all sore about it, and they can't handle them, although they have agreed with me to put the market down a quarter of a cent, if it's possible; but I tell you one thing. Mr. Brown, I can't handle these people down there any longer unless something can be done to keep Blanke from antagonizing them the way he is, and you are the only man that can handle this. I am doing the very best I can, and sending a carload of cheese down there a week, to be distributed among the brokers, to keep the market in line, and it's costing me a hundred dollars a week to do it, but I can't do it without some help from you.

Yours, truly,

C. E. BLODGETT CHEESE, BUTTER & EGG CO.,
(Signed) C. E. BLODGETT.

(This letter had shorthand annotations, which stenographer in office could not decipher.)

JULY 11, 1916.

Mr. I. F. LAING,
% Neenah Cheese & Cold Storage Co.,
125 W. South Water Street, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Please note Mr. Blodgett's letter attached. If this man Blanke is causing all this trouble, I wish you would put a muzzle on him. We must keep down the markets if possible when we are accumulating these big stocks.

Let me hear from you, please.

Yours, very truly,

ARMOUR & CO.,
(Signed) J. W. BROWN.

JWB/R

It is certain that by no means all the agreements in effect between the big packers came to the attention of the commission. Thus, for example, we have evidence of an agreement on lard compound, which was made at the time the commission's investigation was being vigorously pressed and came to light only by chance.

[Letter, Armour & Co. to H. G. Sharpnack (Armour's branch house superintendent at Pittsburgh), dated Jan. 24, 1918]:

"It's always been our understanding that if our organization had the same price as the other fellow, that's all they need. This is certainly a fact on Substitute since January 14, and we will very much surprised if your territory does not triple its business each month. We do not recall having such an opportunity in the history of the firm, and if this practice is maintained, it's a pretty safe bet we will get our share."

This was followed on January 28, 1918, by a circular from H. G. Sharpnack to all managers giving the following instructions:

"Please give this compound all attention possible. Everybody's price must be the same as yours. If you find any deviation, make doubly sure that you are right by seeing the bill, noting the date of same, quantity sold, and the price, and let me have it."

This so pleased Armour & Co. that on January 30, 1918, L. L. Whelen, of Armour's lard department, wrote Sharpnack:

"Very glad to note your cooperation on White Cloud as per your circular to houses dated the 28th. In this connection, however, it occurs to us that we should not make any noise about competitors' prices being identical, etc. Under present conditions this is not advisable, as you are undoubtedly aware. Also you might destroy this letter on the subject."

Evidence of other agreements might be quoted at length, and they will appear in the report. The quotations already made would seem to answer affirmatively the President's question:

"Are there manipulations, controls, trusts, combinations, conspiracies, or restraints of trade out of harmony with the law or the public interest?"

We will not elaborate on the fact that these agreements, combinations, and pools are continuing conspiracies. So far as the meat pools are concerned this is proved not only by the present continuance of the agreed-upon divisions of live-stock purchases but by letters of recent date.

In the case of the agreements and conspiracies regarding cheese and lard substitute, the evidence presented relates entirely to matters which have occurred within the last two years and which there is no reason to believe have been changed by later events.

JOINT FUNDS.

Further evidence of the existence of a conspiracy among the five big packers was found in the vault of Henry Veeder, in the form of documents relating to funds maintained by the big packers and oleomargarine manufacturers, primarily for the purpose of protecting themselves from punishment for the divers practices already described in part.

These joint funds, as will be shown in one of the sections of the report, were used:

To employ lobbyists and pay their unaudited expenses;
To influence legislative bodies;
To elect candidates who would wink at violations of law and defeat those pledged to fair enforcement;
To control tax officials and thereby evade just taxation;
To secure modifications of governmental rules and regulations by devious and improper methods;
To bias public opinion by the control of editorial policy through advertising, loans, and subsidies, and by the publication and distribution at large expense of false and misleading statements.

Henry Veeder, the manager of the Veeder pools of the nineties, is the assessor, collector, and paymaster of these joint funds, and his office is the clearing house through which the money passes and to which reports are sent. Although single assessments for these funds range as high as $50,000, Veeder claims that he keeps no books showing the disposition of these large sums of money, but the many letters now in our possession show specifically to whom a part of the money was paid and for what purpose.

At least two separate pools of this character are participated in by the big packers: First, "The Packers' Pool," limited in membership to the Big Five; and, second, "The Oleo Pool," the membership of which varies from year to year, but always includes Armour and Swift.

The Oleo Pool is composed of large manufacturers of oleomargarine, butterine, and other similar products, who are pledged to divide whatever assessments may be determined upon for their joint purposes on the basis of their proportionate production of oleomargarine during the preceding year. In 1917, for example, the membership of the Oleo Pool and the percentages used in collecting the joint funds were as follows:

	Per cent.
A. (Armour & Co.)	12.387
F. (Friedman Manufacturing Co.)	6.246
J. (John F. Jelke Co.)	32.172
M. (Morris & Co.)	10.481
W. J. M. (W. J. Moxley, Inc.)	11.563
W. (Wilson & Co., Inc.)	4.265
H. (G. H. Hammond Co.)	3.652
S. (Swift & Co.)	19.234

The general character and purposes of the Oleo Pool are disclosed by the following extract from a letter written by Alfred R. Urion, former general counsel for Armour & Co., to Henry Veeder:

"I give you the following information to be disseminated amongst those who are associated with us in Pennsylvania oleomargarine. The source of my report you are familiar with. I give you letter on the subject received Saturday:

"'Have been given positive assurance by the big man that there will not be any suits brought in this State during the time named, on tinted goods, provided they are not too yellow; that is to say, you must not go to extremes in color, but that the regular run of tinted goods will be all right. The wholesalers and manufacturers should not go farther in spreading the understanding than to simply notify their trade verbally that no suits will be brought and that there will be no trouble in their handling natural tinted goods.'

"I have gone back to the party by letter and asked to get a definite statement from the big man, calling off the State agents from taking samples and frightening the trade, and have no doubt will receive a favorable answer thereto."

The genesis of what we have called the Packers' Pool, as well as the basis upon which it is operated, is told in the following letter from Henry Veeder to W. B. Traylor, assistant to Louis F. Swift:

AUGUST 23, 1916.

Mr. W. B. TRAYNOR,
Care of Swift & Co., Chicago.

DEAR SIR: You asked me the other day for certain percentages which are generally known as the "usual percentages." On July 30, 1913, L F S, A M, and T E W agreed with C and S & S upon the following percentages to cover general legislative and litigation matters:

S	35751	39723	44689
A	29266	32518	36582
M	14983	16648	18729
C	10	11111
S & S	10
	100000	100000	100000

Of course C and S were arbitrary. The A, F, and H figures are the so-called old beef figures which were based upon the volume of beef business in 1902.

Sincerely, yours,

———.

This letter and agreement contain a great deal more meaning than cursory reading would indicate. In the first place this letter, as well as many other documents to be produced hereafter, shows that Henry Veeder, the agent of the former conspiracies, is still acting as the joint agent for the Big Five and the custodian of their agreements.

Analysis of the letter shows that on July 30, 1913, just one year after the dissolution of the National Packing Co., Arthur Meeker of Armour & Co., Louis F. Swift, and Thomas E. Wilson, then president of Morris & Co. (representing the interests which had jointly created and owned the National Packing Co.), came together and agreed upon certain fixed percentages, to be known in the future as the "usual percentages," for use in the settlement of "general, legislative, and litigation matters."

The basis selected for the apportionment is shown by the cryptic words of the last paragraph: "The A, F, and H figures are the old beef figures of 1902, but the C and S & S figures are arbitrary." No F and H figures are mentioned in the letter, but reference to the testimony of Henry Veeder in 1912 shows that in the pools of the nineties each company was designated by a code letter—A for Armour, F for Morris, and H for Swift. Thus the "old beef figures" are the percentages used in the Veeder pool.

The packers joint activities for the prevention of governmental action are illustrated by the vicissitudes of the legislative efforts to secure an investigation of the packing industry. This investigation, it may be remembered, had its origin in resolutions introduced in the House of Representatives in February, 1916. Early in April of that year a committee of three of the confidential employees of Swift & Co.—A. D. White, John M. Chaplin, and R. C. McManus—were sent to Washington to investigate and report on the status and probable chances of the resolution. On April 10, 1916, they prepared a long joint memorandum, copies of which were sent to the principal officials of each of the five packing companies, stating in substance that the resolution could be blocked only by adroit and vigorous action of the packers and their friends along certain indicated lines, and containing the warning:

"We believe the situation to be serious, and recommend that due consideration be immediately given to it and that everything be done to head off the present movement and to relieve the tension. We believe that as it stands to-day nothing could stop criminal prosecutions and that the situation is serious where men like Burke (Edward L. Burke, vice president of the American National Live Stock Association), who have been in the business all their lives, regard trivial and irrelevant circumstances as conclusively proving criminal operations." [Matter in italics was underscored in red in original.]

Following this warning the Big Five proceeded to take the following steps:

First, they raised a joint fund of $15,000, assessed upon the basis of the "usual percentages."

Second, they arranged "to flood Congress," and particularly the Judiciary Committee, to which the resolution had been referred, with telegrams from commission men, bankers, and other apparently disinterested people whom they seemed to think they had under some degree of obligation.

Third, they set at work one of their most expert lobbyists, Colin H. Livingston, who in addition to his general influence, indicated by his position as vice president of a Washington bank, had for years been employed as secretary to a Senator and had a thorough knowledge of Congressional affairs.

Fourth, they brought support to a bill providing for the collection of certain data, on the theory that it would serve to sidetrack the proposed investigation.

Through these and other maneuvers, they were able to block the movement for an investigation until the President of the United States, in February, 1917, directed the commission to make the investigation.

What big packers did through their agents and tools to prevent and nullify the present investigation is only typical of their activities in connection with other attempts made by the States or by the National Government to regulate or improve the conditions existing in the industry.

METHODS AND RESULTS OF THE COMBINATION.

The purposes of this combination, which for more than a generation has defied the law and escaped adequate punishments, are sufficiently clear from the history of the conspiracy and from the numerous documents already presented, namely:

To monopolize and divide among the several interests the distribution of the food supply not only of the United States but of all countries which produce a food surplus, and, as a result of this monopolistic position,

To extort excessive profits from the people not only of the United States but of a large part of the world.

To secure these ends the combination and its constituent members employ practically every tried method of unfair competition known to this commission and invent certain new and ruthless methods to crush weaker concerns.

The early strength and rapid growth of the Big Five was stimulated by the extortion of rebates under one disguise or another and special privileges.

Among other well-known methods of unfair competition used by the big packers of which the commission has evidence may be mentioned the following:

Bogus independents.
Local price discriminations.
Short weighting.
Acquiring stock in competing companies.
Shutting competitors out of live-stock markets.

In addition to these recognized methods of unfair competition the Big Five also employ a vicious system of rotation in price cutting. This consists in each of the Big Five, or as many as happen to be represented in a given territory, arranging to cut prices in rotation, a day at a time or a week at a time, so that the burden, distributed among the big packers, will seem light, but will fall with crushing weight on the independent competitor.

These big packers who aim at world monopoly persistently stoop to the commonest of commercial frauds—short weighting. They short-weight the live-stock producers in the sale of grain and hay at the stockyards; they short-weight the retailers on their shipments of meat; they short-weight the Government; and, to make a complete job of it, they short-weight one another. Here is an amusing example of the last-named practice in the form of an extract from a letter written July 6, 1917, by Armour's Neenah Cheese & Cold Storage Co. to its Mineral Point (Wis.) branch, giving instructions with reference to Cudahy's demand for a weighmaster's certificate on his order:

"Now, if you have not an official weighmaster, get some fellow that looks like one and furnish him with blanks, if necessary, yourself. It is hardly necessary to have him make a test on each lot. You can arrange to have a few cheese sitting around for him to weigh that are not going to show up too much shortage. Whatever you do, however, give them good weights on the car."

How considerably this practice of short weighting may affect the retail price of meats appears from a single example, selected at random from several tests made in the presence of the commission's agents:

Barrel of pork butts from Armour & Co.

	Weight in pounds.
	Marked.	Actual.
Gross	287	284
Tare	21	29
Net	266	255

Here were 11 pounds of pork which the retailer is forced to pay for because of the inflexible rule of the big packers that shipments must be accepted at stamped weights under penalty of having credit cut off. The cost of these 11 pounds had to be distributed in some way over the selling price of the remainder and collected from the consumer.

Foremost of packer practices in evil results is the manipulation of the live-stock markets, manifested primarily in violent and unreasonable fluctuations in live-stock prices from day to day. This constitutes the greatest grievance of the live-stock producers against packer control of the markets. How seriously these market fluctuations are regarded by live-stock producers is expressed in the following statement of E. L. Burke, vice president of the American National Live Stock Association:

"The fact is that beef production in the corn belt has become the most hazardous and uncertain legitimate business that a man can engage in. Outside of gambling on the board of trade or the New York Stock Exchange, I know of nothing to compare with it.

"Probably the worst thing the feeder has to contend with is these violent fluctuations. The plausible contention is made by the packers that the rapid advances are an offset to the declines, but such is far from the case, as fully three-quarters of the cattle are bought on the days of heavy receipts, reducing the average cost far below the average daily prices."

Our information shows that there are three principal causes for these violent price fluctuations:

First, collusive manipulation by the big packers to drive the prices either up or down, depending upon whether they are overstocked with fresh and cured meats and want to sell in a high market or are understocked and want to buy in a low market. This is illustrated by the following extract from a letter written by E. A. Cudahy to M. R. Murphy, his general superintendent at South Omaha:

"There is no use in being very aggressive about our percentage as long as there is a loss in the hogs. * * * I think Swift is long considerable stuff on the market and Armour short, and Swift thinks he has to keep the price of hogs up in order to keep the provision market up. There isn't any particular secret about the business and I don't see that they are doing any better than we are, and the only thing we can do is to wait until they see fit to improve conditions."

Second, violent price fluctuations also occur as the result of disagreements among the Big Five, as, for example, when Mr. E. A. Cudahy, apparently excluded from the inner circle for a while, wrote the following to M. R. Murphy:

"Regarding hog buying—going to have pretty hot time unless allow other fellows to wipe us off map. Better see how our buyers stand in yards. May be at little disadvantage account position we have taken on market for long time. Notice Chicago market about 15 higher to-day—so must be row on here, too. Don't know what is matter with packers, but things seem to be getting worse instead of better."

Third. Unnatural price fluctuations are created when the packers controlling a particular live-stock market decide to keep some competitor out by raising prices. This is illustrated by the following letter from Morris & Co.'s files, signed "E. M., Jr.," presumably Edward Morris, jr.:

CHICAGO, 7/23/15.

Mr. E. G. ELDRIDGE,
Oklahoma City, Okla.

DEAR SIR: Notice Armstrong (Armstrong Packing Co., which Armour had secretly bought in 1908, but which was at the time of this letter regarded as an independent, even by members of the combination) was in your market yesterday and bought 210 hogs. With receipts getting now we can't afford to have Armstrong take any hogs out of our market. If he comes in for any hogs, let us put the market up a bit and make him pay enough so he will stay out. Our receipts are so light it is hard to operate a place even if no outsiders buy on the market.

Yours, truly, E. M., Jr.

Another indefensible practice, which particularly affects the producers of live stock and has done much to dishearten them, is technically known as "wiring on." When a cattleman, dissatisfied with the prices offered at the stockyards to which he has shipped, decides to try another, a telegram is sent forward over the packer's private wire notifying the buyers at the destination that the cattle are being shipped and giving the price offered at the first market. As a result the cattleman finds that at the second market he is offered the same or a lower price, and stands to lose at least the freight and the shrinkage as punishment for trying to beat the system.

The packers have repeatedly denied that they wired on, although sometimes admitting that they used to; but something like a hundred telegrams of recent date now in the possession of the commission completely refute the denial.

It is our opinion that the failure of American meat production to keep pace with population is in large measure due to the conditions created and maintained in the markets by the Big Five. Their conspiracies and unfair practices have disheartened producers of live stock by destroying their confidence in the fairness of the marketing system to such an extent that large numbers have abandoned or curtailed their operations. Thousands of the more intelligent producers to-day regard the stockyard markets as gambling places in which the packer owners not only take an exorbitant "percentage" but rig and control the game itself.

They see in the violent fluctuations of the market—and our investigation confirms their suspicions—manipulations by the big packers in order to secure their raw material cheaply. They know by repeated experience that these fluctuations are so large and so unnaturally sudden that many a producer loses heavily because he happened to ship his live stock on Monday instead of on Wednesday. When this happens and a live-stock producer loses thousands of dollars on animals whose production and shipment represent a large investment and long months of hard labor, there follows discouragement and a loss of credit which effectually prevents the speedy re-establishment of the same scale of production. It is such conditions which have led able and energetic cattlemen to testify before the commission that under present conditions they would not willingly hand on their business of cattle raising to their children.

But the packers have even more directly affected production. Their very system of concentrating the markets and packing houses at a few large centers, where live stock can be disposed of profitably only in bunches, has discouraged farmers and people in small towns from raising animals which otherwise would readily find sale. The present "raise a pig" movement is retarded by the fact that there are no convenient near-by places to dispose of the pig after he has been raised.

Moreover, the packers have deliberately discouraged production in certain regions where they do not wish to establish packing plants and slaughterhouses. The story of the packers' activities in destroying the raising of sheep and other animals in New England is a chapter by itself.

It is unnecessary to do more than point out the large part which live-stock raising plays in the successful production of other foods. Live stock on farms are not only essential to fertilization but provide a means of utilizing waste and surplus crops which often marks the difference between success and failure. There is room on the farms and ranges of the United States for an immense additional number of animals, but so long as farmers and live-stock men believe that they will have only a "gambler's chance" instead of a "square deal" at the markets there will be great difficulty in securing this production.

What has been said applies specifically to the production and marketing of live stock, but the same methods are being applied by the big packers in other branches of food production, and equally deplorable results are apparent. The producers of milk, butter, cheese, and poultry are finding themselves disheartened by exactly the same conditions and practices, against which the live-stock men have been vainly contending for more than a generation. Little has been heard of these conditions outside the particular regions in which they exist, but they are already causing unrest and dissatisfaction in the regions where these foodstuffs are produced, and sooner or later, unless the conditions are corrected, there will be a situation in connection with each of these as serious as was the live-stock situation which led to this investigation.

With the thought that the road to reasonable food prices lies in the direction of the elimination of monopoly, the curbing of unfair practices, and the assurance of a fair and reasonably stable market, the commission here gives relatively small space to the question of profits and costs. There is no doubt that the packers' profits, particularly since the beginning of the European war, have been enormous, both in the United States and in foreign countries. Measured by prewar profits, the 1917 profits (exclusive of Armour's foreign profits; inclusive of only part of Swift's South American profits) were 350 per cent greater than in the average of the three years before the European war; measured by the amount of sales, they averaged, in 1917, 4.6 cents on the dollar, which was sufficient to produce for the five companies a total profit of $96,182,000; measured by the net worth of the combined corporations (capital stock plus surplus), they averaged, in 1917, 21.6 per cent; measured by the capital stock outstanding, as an indication of the dividend possibilities, they averaged, in 1917, 39.5 per cent; and measured by the packers' actual investment of new capital, they amount to several times even this last figure.

All these are minimum figures for the reason that the packers' accounts are so constructed that they conceal profits rather than reveal them. There are numerous "secret reserves"; there are endless transfers of material from department to department at fictitious or arbitrary values; and there are all sorts of improper items charged in as expenses, ranging from items properly chargeable to capital to improper payments which have no place in any business. To have untangled these accounts so that a complete presentation of profits and costs could be made would have required accountants and clerks as numerous as the several thousands employed by the packers.

Moreover, the parent corporations, and particularly the meat departments, are made to bear the costs of the process of monopolization in various remote fields. Sometimes during periods of cutthroat competition these losses will run on for years, borne entirely out of the current earnings of meat and other lines; but when the fat years succeed the lean, the packers protest against any part of these earnings being carried back to the credit of the departments which bore the losses.

The unreliability of all meat cost-and-profit calculations is increased when they are placed upon a "per head" basis, for a new and difficult question immediately is presented as to what is included in the denominator of the fraction from which the result is obtained. However, since much publicity has been given by Swift & Co. to certain figures purporting to show their net profit on "dressed beef and all by-products" to be $1.29 per head in 1917, some comment is called for. This is best put in the form of a quotation of a letter written by Charles H. Swift to Louis F. Swift and Edward F. Swift under date of June 23, 1916:

[Private.]

CHICAGO, June 23, 1916.

MESSRS. LOUIS F. SWIFT, EDWARD F. SWIFT:

Referring to Henry Veeder's letter, June 13th, to L. F. S. regarding Borland resolution, in which Mr. Meeker is quoted as saying that Armour made a profit of $1.19 per head on cattle for certain period (ours for same period $1.28 per head):

Mr. Chaplin understands that Armour's includes their canners, which ours does not; part of their sausage results, and has 10 cents added per head for good measure for by-products transferred at market prices, which ours does not.

If our and Libby's cattle were thrown together for the period, without including sausage or anything for good measure, it would bring ours up over $2 per head.

Mr. Chaplin didn't think there could be as much difference as this, but checked it pretty close and understands definitely that theirs includes all of the above mentioned, which ours does not.

CHARLES H. SWIFT.

The statement of the accountants who prepared the Armour cost figure of $1.19 per head shows that it did not include actual profits from fertilizers and various other by-products. The significance of this letter is that it shows that, when we include a part of the by-products and take in transfer values at market prices, Swift's profit immediately jumps to "more than $2 per head," and if we add other by-products properly chargeable and bring back the branch-house profits, the figure keeps on climbing until it is more than 100 per cent larger than the $1.28 for 1916, and the $1.29 for 1917, which Swift & Co. are spending great sums in advertising.

BUSINESS ETHICS OF THE PACKERS.

The packers, in their recent public statements and advertisements, have striven to create the impression that they have grown to their present size solely as a result of superior efficiency, and that whatever improper or illegal practices were discovered in connection with their business were merely incidental. The conclusion, however, that is produced by a study of their history and present activities is that they have attained their dominant position primarily as a result of unfair practices and illegal methods. The fact that they have so generally resorted to unfair methods of meeting competition discredits their claims of superior efficiency. It is difficult to believe that, if the big packers had been able to extend their business rapidly by efficiency alone they would have resorted to the devious and illegal means of crushing competition which they have employed.

This conclusion is strengthened by a perusal of the packers' letters in which their motives are often frankly stated. The following letters, introduced with merely explanatory comment, were written by the packers or their agents in the course of their everyday business.

Extract from a letter written by Guy C. Shepard, vice president of Cudahy Packing Co., to Mr. R. Murphy, general manager of the company, under date of February 12, 1918:

"I presume that it is true that all of us have not been as considerate as we should have been in view of the great strain and the difficulties under which you and all of the superintendents have been laboring since the first of January. The whole truth of the matter is we have nearly bitten off more than we can chew. There never was a time in the history of the business when we have had as good a margin on the hogs for as long a stretch continuously, and naturally it has made everyone very greedy to kill every hog they possibly could. I don't suppose any of us have wasted much time figuring out whether we could or could not handle the business when we saw a chance to land a big allotment over at the Food Administration. The main idea that we had in mind was that it was profitable business, and the first thing to do was to take the order and then get through with it some way or other.

To understand the following telegram, sent by F. E. Wilhelm, of the Cudahy Packing Co., to the assistant manager of their Omaha plant, it is necessary to know that cheek meat, shank meat, and bull meat are inferior kinds of meat, which until very recently were almost valueless.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 6, 1918.

W. DEISING, Omaha:

Notice you sold some beef cheek meat at 12½c. EAC [apparently E. A. Cudahy, president of the Cudahy Packing Co.] says not to sell any more, but to consider it worth 18c. Would suggest you hold this stock, as we have been discussing recently with the Food Administration about having the specifications for canning meat revised so that cheek meat might be included, and would like to have this extended to shank meat and bull meat.

F. E. WILHELM.

A little earlier Morris & Co.'s sales manager wrote the following letter, relating to th sale of a quantity of "fishy" butter at fresh-butter prices to one of the Army camps:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., November 24, 1917.

Mr. C. J. MURPHY,
Morris & Co., Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: We are in receipt of your two letters of the 22d relative butter we are holding here for Panama.

Regarding the duty having been paid on these shipments, will say that we will be unable to do anything on this here towards securing a refund or drawback, as the duty was paid by consignee in Panama, and they of course will have to enter their claim down there and collect from the Panama government.

We have advised the foreign department fully as to the disposition of this butter, giving them all the information you request, and suggest you take up with Mr. Carlsen regarding. With reference to your remark "to work a little closer" on a proposition like this, it would seem to us that the fault is not at this end, as we were handling this for the foreign department, and if it was necessary for you to be in touch with this that they should have kept you posted. We certainly kept them fully advised at all times as to what we were doing with this stock.

Regarding shipping this butter to Alexandria, La., to take care of the butter contract for Camp Beauregard, we wired Mr. Simpson night message 11/13, asking if it would be satisfactory to use this butter to fill contract orders Camp Beauregard, and received reply from Chicago 11/14 advising it would be O. K. to use this butter for this purpose.

Might add for your information that we examined some of this stock before shipping to Alexandria and found all we tested to be very fishy, and we feel that the stock was well sold at price you mention. [Italics by commission.]

Yours, truly,

MORRIS & COMPANY,

Of somewhat similar character is the following letter, written by Armour & Co.'s branch house superintendent at Philadelphia to the manager of the dressed-beef sales department:

ARMOUR & CO., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

917-925 NOBLE ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.,
February 23, 1918.

Mr. V. H. MUNNECKE,
Armour & Co., Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: This has been a very unsatisfactory week, because of the great quantity of bad-condition beef we have had to sell. Even our kosher cars coming into Noble Street were off condition. Ninety per cent of our beef unloaded this week was very stale.

Morris and Wilson had just as much trouble as we had. Swift got by with practically no trouble at all. Possibly this trouble may partly be accounted for by the beef being held a long time at the plant, while Swift had cars and was able to keep closer up to date on his shipments.

Wilson froze quite a little beef, some out of their own shipments, and some they bought. They bought beef from us at 132 N. Delaware Avenue that had been wiped up twice before we sold it to them. They bagged it up and shipped it to New York for freezing. They bought beef from Arch Street that was so bad that we bathed it in vinegar and soda before we showed it to them. I think this beef also was shipped to New York for freezing.

I certainly do not know what they are going to do with this beef. I certainly do not think beef in the condition they are buying ought to be exported or offered to our armies. [Italics by Commission.]

Yours, truly,

T. G. LEE.

WHAT OUGHT TO BE DONE.

In the President's letter of February 7, 1917, we were asked to state as a result of our investigations:

"What measures are necessary to effect fundamental improvements?"

What the remedy is will appear from a brief analysis of the situation. The rapid rise of the packers to power and immense wealth and their present strangle hold on food supplies were not based necessarily on their ownership of packing houses, but upon their control of the channels of distribution, particularly the stockyards, private car lines, cold-storage plants, and branch houses. Similarly the great profits which they have secured and are now securing are not primarily due to exceptional efficiency in operating packing houses and manufacturing plants, but are secured through their monopolistic control of the distributive machinery. This applies not only to the meat industry, but to the other branches of the food industry which they control, as is evidenced by the fact that particularly in recent years they have made far greater efforts to secure control of the distribution of the product than to secure manufacturing plants in the case of such products as cheese and canned goods. Several letters in our possession might be cited in support of this statement.

As long as the packers control these distributive utilities, producers will be at the mercy of the big packers, competition will be restrained and consumers generally will continue to pay the price of monopoly. Control and manipulation of the live-stock markets have been the great factors in the discouragement of live-stock production. Control of the transportation and marketing facilities have been the instruments by which competitors have been crushed.

We see no possibility of effecting the "fundamental improvements" which the President's letter sought, short of the acquisition by the Federal Government of the distributive utilities now controlled by the Big Five, and the establishment by the Federal Government upon equal terms for all the additional storage and distributive facilities necessary to open the channels of commerce in foods and related products and insure their free and unrestricted flow from the producer to the consumer.

We recommend, therefore:

1. That the Government acquire, through the Railroad Administration, all rolling stock used for the transportation of meat animals and that such ownership be declared a Government monopoly.

2. That the Government acquire, through the Railroad Administration, the principal and necessary stockyards of the country, to be treated as freight depots and to be operated under such conditions as will insure open, competitive markets, with uniform scale of charges for all services performed, and the acquisition or establishment of such additional yards from time to time as the future development of live-stock production in the United States may require. This to include customary adjuncts of stockyards.

3. That the Government acquire, through the Railroad Administration, all privately owned refrigerator cars and all necessary equipment for their proper operation, and that such ownership be declared a Government monopoly.

4. That the Federal Government acquire such of the branch houses, cold-storage plants, and warehouses as are necessary to provide facilities for the competitive marketing and storage of food products in the principal centers of distribution and consumption. The same to be operated by the Government as public markets and storage places under such conditions as will afford an outlet for all manufacturers and handlers of food products on equal terms. Supplementing the marketing and storage facilities thus acquired, the Federal Government establish, through the Railroad Administration, at the terminals of all principal points of distribution and consumption, central wholesale markets and storage plants, with facilities open to all upon payment of just and fair charges.

The stockyards and their essential adjuncts, such as exchange buildings and terminal railroads, must be acquired and operated by the Government under such conditions that the producer will be assured of a fair market, reasonable charges, open bidding, full and helpful market information, the limitation of violent fluctuations in price, and the elimination of unnatural market influences. Moreover, the measure authorizing the acquisition of the stockyards should provide for the acquirement by right of eminent domain of such sites adjacent to the yards as may be necessary for their proper expansion and for the location of such independent, municipal, or cooperative abattoirs or packing houses as may be established. This will open the way for the independent packers and butchers, big and little, to establish their plants and secure their live stock under such conditions as will enable them to compete actively with the big packers. Furthermore, we believe that the establishment of such open, competitive markets will be followed by a large increase in live-stock production.

The necessity for acquisition by the Government of refrigerator and other private car lines and icing stations is so obvious, particularly since the railroads have been brought under Federal operation, that argument seems unnecessary.

Acquisition of the stockyards and car lines alone will not secure the fundamental improvements which we are seeking. Figuratively speaking, we will have opened only two of the doors by which the big packers have obstructed the channels of food commerce, while the third remains closed. An independent packer may with Government-owned yards and cars find it possible to secure and ship his products upon terms of equality with the big packers, but unless he has an opportunity to dispose of them under fair conditions his competition will not be effective and the consumer will not be benefited.

It is for this reason that we consider the provision of proper marketing and storage facilities by the Federal Government through branch houses and establishment of central wholesale markets and storage places to be an essential feature of a system which will provide for the American people adequate supplies of food at reasonable prices during both war and peace.

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 7, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: An adequate supply of food products is a matter of concern to the Nation at all times. It is of peculiar importance at present. Our domestic food supply is normally very large and has become increasingly varied. In some respects it has steadily expanded and has kept pace with the increasing population. Unfortunately, this is not true, however, of a number of important staple products, including certain cereals and particularly meats. While the population of the Nation has increased 26,000,000 since 1900, the production of the two leading cereals, corn and wheat, while tending to increase, has shown only a slight advance; and that of the meat products in the same period has shown an increase of only 3,500,000,000 pounds—a decrease of 29 pounds per capita.

Much can be done, and is being done, to change this situation through improved methods of production and through the control or eradication of plant and animal diseases. But there are problems also of distribution; and, in some respects, the problems presented in this field are the more difficult. Only recently have official agencies been created to deal systematically with this side of the difficulty. Much work has been done, and, considering the limited nature of the powers under which it has been conducted, no little headway has been made, particularly in obtaining and diffusing useful information. Nevertheless, it is not yet clear in many directions just what the nature of the difficulty is or what measures should be adopted to effect fundamental improvements. Many necessary facts are not available, and it is questionable whether any single agency of the Government at present possesses the requisite power and equipment to secure the information needed to enable both public and private instrumentalities to render their fullest service to the people. It is obvious that there will be no sufficient incentive to enlarge production if there does not exist an unobstructed and economical system of distribution. Unjustifiable fluctuations in prices are not merely demoralizing; they inevitably deter adequate production.

It has been alleged before committees of the Congress, and elsewhere, that the course of trade in important food products is not free, but is restricted and controlled by artificial and illegal means. It is of the highest public concern to ascertain the truth or falsity of these allegations. No business can be transacted effectively in an atmosphere of suspicion. If the allegations are well grounded, it is necessary that the nature and extent of the evils and abuses be accurately determined, so that proper remedies, legislative or administrative, may be applied. If they are not true, it is equally essential that the public be informed, so that unrest and dissatisfaction may be allayed. In any event, because of the grave public interests which the food supply affects, the efficient performance of the duties imposed upon agencies of the Government requires that all the pertinent facts be ascertained. To this end, the powers of such agencies should be made adequate, if in any respect they are now deficient.

Pursuant to the authority conferred upon me by the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, therefore, I direct the commission, within the scope of its powers, to investigate and report the facts relating to the production, ownership, manufacture, storage, and distribution of foodstuffs and the products or by-products arising from or in connection with their preparation and manufacture; to ascertain the facts bearing on alleged violations of the antitrust acts, and particularly upon the question whether there are manipulations, controls, trusts, combinations, conspiracies, or restraints of trade out of harmony with the law or the public interest.

I am aware that the commisison has additional authority in this field, through the power conferred upon it to prevent certain persons, partnerships, or corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce. I presume that you may see fit to exercise that authority, upon your own initiative, without direction from me.

The Department of Agriculture has been engaged for several years in studying problems of distribution. I have noted that it has been proposed in the Congress to add to the funds of the department and give it larger powers to conduct its investigations. As its activities will touch phases of the problem I am calling to your attention which may not be covered by your inquiry, and may furnish information of great importance for the purposes contemplated, I shall direct that department to cooperate with you in this enterprise.

For the adequate prosecution of the inquiry by both your commission and the Department of Agriculture, it is essential that sufficient funds be available. I accordingly request that you furnish me at the earliest possible moment an estimate for an appropriation, if one is needed, to supplement existing appropriations, to enable you successfully to carry out the investigation.

A copy of this letter is being sent to the Secretary of Agriculture, with the direction that his department cooperate with you and with the request that he furnish an estimate for the funds needed by his department.

Sincerely, yours,

(Signed) WOODROW WILSON.

Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS,
Chairman Federal Trade Commission,
Washington, D. C.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GORE. I renew my request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill named by him.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products, and for other purposes."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to say that after several sessions the conference committee of the two Houses reached a partial agreement. They adjusted the differences on all the amendments except the amendment commonly known as the rent amendment. Upon that amendment we were unable to reach an agreement. We therefore report a disagreement to the two Houses.

In a moment I shall move to agree to the report and that the Senate further insist on the so-called rent amendment. Before making that motion, however, I wish to say with respect to amendment numbered 30, which is the amendment intended to prohibit the interstate shipment of adulterated feed stuffs, that the committee was not able to reach an agreement upon that amendment. There was, however, an appreciation of the importance of the subject; and I am perhaps at liberty to say that an agreement was reached between the chairmen of the two Agricultural committees that a subcommittee from each of the two Houses would be appointed, whose duty it would be to consider the adulteration of feeds and fertilizers and to prepare and report to the two Houses a comprehensive measure intended to prohibit fraudulent practices with respect to feeds and fertilizers, so far as Congress has the power to accomplish that end.

I move that the Senate agree to the conference report and further insist upon the so-called rent amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Agricultural Committee about the amendment concerning which no agreement has been reached. Is that the so-called Pomerene rent amendment?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; it is the Pomerene rent amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I think it is well that the Senate should appreciate just what this condition is, so that the conferees may understand that the Senate will insist upon this amendment being possibly considered by the conferees, with a view to reaching some conclusion.

The Senate has already acted very conclusively with regard to this measure by approving the action of its conferees on the Pomerene bill, as it came from the Committee on the District of Columbia, in refusing to confer with the conferees of the House under the circumstances which are disclosed in the RECORD. I want to say, so far as the District Committee of this body is concerned, that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who is the author of the bill and has spent a great deal of time on it and has very ably drawn the bill to correct the housing conditions in Washington, so far as possible, desired to withdraw from that conference committee because of occurrences in another body, which are disclosed in the RECORD; but the District Committee, I think unanimously, declined to allow him to withdraw from that conference committee, and each and every member of the District Committee stated that he would not under the circumstances accept an appointment as a conferee to represent the Senate.

Now, it is very important, I think, that this bill should be agreed upon. There are very many circumstances arising regarding rents in this city in a multitude of cases that I think the Pomerene bill would reach which need to be reached at this particular time. It is a very important measure, and unfortunately it is the only way in which this legislation can be obtained. If the House declines to consider it through a conference committee, as they have done, I simply hope that on the House will be placed the responsibility of the failure to bring about conditions in this District regarding housing which so much need attention.

I only wanted to impress on the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the head of the conferees, that it was very necessary, in my judgment, to get the House conferees to consider this matter, which, I understand, they have absolutely refused to do. Otherwise certainly it would be improper in the minds of a great many Senators for the Senate ever to agree to a conference report where this amendment is wholly disregarded.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I served as one of the conferees on this bill, I am sorry to say. I think the Senate ought to know what the conferees have done.

I will say that I do not concur in this conference report and have not signed it. The Senate attempted to practice economy in some of these appropriations. It struck out all of subdivision 3 on motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I am sorry he is not present. That has all gone back in the bill. The first provision, where the item of $105,000 for production of beef cattle was stricken out, has come back in the bill, and where these few economies crept in in the Senate and some of us had hoped that we might hold them in conference, practically all are eliminated, and the appropriations come back, cottage cheese and all, which item was restored after many tears shed by the conferees over the cottage-cheese situation. It simply illustrates that it is impossible to cut down appropriations. When you get into conference, it seems to be the duty of the conferees from their standpoint to take back to their respective bodies a report showing that what they have done in those respective bodies the conferees have won by a tremendous victory. They bring back the flag of victory. I had always supposed that legislation should be arrived at from the standpoint of what was the best interest of the public, and not as to the matter of offending the dignity of either the Senate or the House.

Now, on the rent profiteering, I trust the Senate will insist on that amendment. We have no pride of opinion about the Pomerene amendment. We simply insisted on the fundamental proposition that something should be done here in the District of Columbia as to these rent profiteers. The House conferees took the position—I do not know that I violate any confidence—that this amendment did not belong on this bill; that the District of Columbia committees should consider these matters. That is true, but we face a fundamental condition that unless something is done on this bill for the people of the District of Columbia, who are being so systematically and thoroughly robbed, nothing will be done at this session of Congress, and we have no right to shirk or evade that responsibility even if there be certain Members of Congress who are exceedingly anxious to get home.

But a situation has grown up—and we might as well be frank about it; it is no secret—between the conferees of the Senate and the conferees of the House, as to the District of Columbia bill.

Unfortunately remarks made by Members of the House offended the Senate conferees, probably rightfully so, and the House conferees on this present bill now feel that to take any action on this matter is a slap in the face of the chairman of the District of Columbia Committee in the House. There we stand in this boyish, silly attitude; because somebody is going to be offended either in the Senate or the House the people of the District must submit to these injustices. It is not right or fair or decent.

I do not mean to indulge in criticism of the conferees at all. They are all high-minded men and desirous of doing what is right, but they are placed in a difficult position by the unfortunate situation which we have gotten into over this bill as relates to the District of Columbia Committee. I believe if it is sent back to conference, and if the Senate conferees are willing to stand firmly by the proposition of doing something on the rent provision, we can get something accomplished, and that we ought to do. We will be recreant to our duty if we neglect this opportunity to relieve the people of this District.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, when the conference report on this bill was submitted by the chairman last Tuesday I entered an objection to its immediate consideration. I wished to ascertain why the amendment No. 29 had been omitted by the conferees, because it will be remembered that amendment No. 29 was the bill which provided that the Secretary of the Interior may, under rules and regulations prescribed by him, lease for not more than 30 years certain tracts of Indian reservations for metalliferous mining. The Senate became convinced more than three months ago that it was an unwise policy to send to Ceylon and to Brazil and other points across the sea to obtain minerals necessary for the conduct of the war in making munitions, and so forth, when we have those same metals right at home; and the Senate wisely, in my judgment, adopted that amendment providing for leasing tracts in Indian reservations, so that manganese, and rare metals especially, might be obtained.

I am very sorry that amendment No. 29, which is the metalliferous mining proposition, has been omitted by the conference; but I have talked with our Senate conferees, and I am convinced that they have done every reasonable thing and have summoned every reasonable argument that ought to be made to induce the House conferees to keep amendment No. 29 in the report. I am persuaded that our conferees abandoned the amendment simply, solely, and only because it was the only thing that they could do. In other words, I am convinced that the House conferees will not now under any circumstances agree to amendment No. 29, and I have no disposition, therefore, to delay the adoption of the conference report. Of course if I thought for a moment that a further delay of the report would bring about any agreement to amendment No. 29 I should continue my opposition.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I have nothing to say further than to give my colleagues in the Senate, who are intensely interested in the measure, the assurance that I have received from the House that the measure has been put upon the calendar—I believe, what they call the unanimous-consent calendar—to be called up on motion, and that there is every prospect that we may finally get it enacted as an independent law, which is the better way to enact such legislation if it is possible to do it. If I did not see some hope of getting a bill of this importance through at this session I should make every effort that I could possibly command to see if we could not further insist on the amendment, and convince the House conferees that they should yield.

But, feeling that the conferees, as my colleague has said, have done all that they could, we must take our chances on action in the House hereafter.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to indorse what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] said in reference to the amendment known as the rent amendment and also to indorse the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] that our conferees ought to insist upon some action being taken upon that amendment. The people of this District, especially the Government employees, are being harassed and threatened and intimidated and robbed systematically, and Congress ought to take some steps to correct it.

We have passed what is known as the Saulsbury resolution. That prohibits the raising of rent or the eviction of tenants during the war. Personally, I am satisfied that that resolution will be sustained by the courts if it ever comes before them, but it is being contended by the landlords that it will not stand the test of the courts. Tenants are being told that, and they are being threatened with suits, they are being ordered to get out of premises, and told that if they do not do it they are going to be sued. Many of them could not stand the expense of a suit. Very naturally, they are not only very much perturbed in mind, but they feel as though they have either to get out or else comply with the demands of the landlords with reference to increased rent.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Gladly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. A lady from Texas, working in one of the departments, came to me a few moments ago and stated that she is paying $45 a month for one room, and that the landlord has threatened to raise her rent to $60 per month.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That instance can be multiplied over and over again. It is quite a modest demand that that landlord has made compared with the demands made by others.

Mr. President, as the Senator from Iowa has said, this is no time for anybody to stand upon dignity or anything of that sort. The interests of the people of this District are to be considered in connection with this legislation. It is legislation largely for the benefit and for the protection of people who have been brought into this District to do the work of the Government that is necessary to be done in the conduct of the war, and it is nothing short of an outrage that we will permit those people to be systematically mulcted by those who happen to own the property and the rooms which they must necessarily occupy if they would stay here at all.

The Senate, recognizing the situation that exists between the two bodies as far as the Committees on the District of Columbia are concerned, were perfectly willing to place this proposition in the hands of conferees from another committee. They were willing to do that in the hope of getting the legislation that we ought to have, and it does seem to me that another body, which we properly can not name, ought to be perfectly willing to allow our contention with reference to this matter to be considered by a committee that all must recognize would be entirely impartial. It does seem to me that the House conferees ought to be willing to consider this proposition.

Mr. President, we have not done in this case anything different from what we have done time and time again. There is hardly an appropriation bill of any character that comes over here which does not have amendments put on it that would properly go to some other committee. Yet they are put on in the hope and belief of getting legislation. No question is ever raised about reflecting upon anybody or slapping anybody in the face or outraging anybody's dignity or anything of that sort, but the conferees take up the propositions and consider them and try to reach a conclusion with reference to them.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate conferees will insist upon something being done in this matter, and I trust that the other body will recognize the importance, not to us, not to Members of the House, but the importance of this proposition to people who, as I said, have been brought into this District to do the work of the Government, that they may be protected in their rights and in the discharge of the duties they have come here to perform.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I infer from the remarks of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that perhaps he does not understand the parliamentary situation as I do. The conferees of the two Houses reached an impasse with reference to this particular amendment—the rent amendment. The House conferees were not willing to recede from their disagreement to the amendment. The Senate conferees were not willing to recede from their insistence upon the amendment. Of course, the Senate conferees were powerless to prevail upon the House conferees to change their position upon the subject. We held several sessions. The Senate conferees, appreciating the fact that the Senate was thoroughly committed to the amendment, that it had been attached to the bill by an overwhelming majority, that it was the legislative sense of the Senate, were not willing to take the responsibility of a recession. We therefore refused to ask to recede. The conferees of the two Houses reached a disagreement, and we now come to the Senate asking that the agreement, with respect to other amendments, be accepted and that the Senate further insist upon amendment No. 28—the rent amendment.

Of course, under parliamentary procedure it will then go to the House and the House itself will then have an opportunity to act directly upon the merits of the amendment. It is my hope that some one in the House will move to concur in the amendment in order that the issues may be squarely raised in that body. If, however, they disagree, of course there are only two courses which the Senate can pursue. One is to recede and the other is to ask for a further conference. Of course I shall abide the pleasure of the Senate when that conjuncture arises, but I should like to say further that there were certain reasons why the Senate conferees were not willing to let this particular bill ride at anchor indefinitely in Congress. I think that statement is sufficient and Senators will appreciate what I mean.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator must have misunderstood me. I think I understand the situation. I do not want our conferees to keep the bill in conference indefinitely. I simply want them to insist when they go into conference that something shall be done on this proposition, and if the House conferees absolutely refuse then I want them to bring back a report of a disagreement.

Mr. GORE. That is what has been done, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know the Senator has now done that, but I am referring to future conferences. I was referring to conferences in the future. I know what has been done and I am glad our conferees have done it; I am approving their action in the matter, but I want to let them know, as far as I can, that the Senate is behind them in insisting upon the bill going to conference again, and that some action must be taken on this amendment or the conferees will have to report a disagreement to the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I fully indorse what has been said by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] with regard to the importance of the so-called rent amendment to this bill, and I am very sorry that any question of a personal character should interpose itself so completely between the members of the conference committee of the two Houses as not only to suspend but to imperil the enactment of a very desirable and most important amendment.

I want to say, Mr. President, in this connection, that my experience, which has been considerable, regarding the rent situation in the District convinced me that a very large proportion of the extortionate instances occurred between lessees and their sublessees. There are occasions where landlords owning property have been extorting, but the large bulk of them are composed of men and women who have leased apartments or rooms or houses and who have then sought to take advantage and are taking advantage of the enormous pressure in the District for shelter to demand and receive prices that are out of all proportion to what they should be, and in many respects far beyond the ability of their victims to respond. Of course, it is that class of people, the small sublessees, which need the protection of this body more earnestly and more summarily than any other.

There is a species of profiteering which is carried on by the owners of large and palatial residences who are demanding and receiving from people who are here on Government business and who are very wealthy practically the value of their property in the enormous amounts of rent which they ask and which they receive. That class of people, however, can get along. It is the others whose condition is so pitiful that it ought to appeal to the sense of justice of the members of the conference committee and enable them, if they are not satisfied with this measure, to amend it in some such way as to enable us to enact it into law.

Mr. President, there is an amendment to this measure which has passed the conference and which in its consequences upon the revenues of the country is very formidable. I refer to what is called the "bone-dry" amendment, the effect of which is to prevent the sale and the carrying on of transactions regarding distilled liquors, and which when it shall go into effect by that very act prohibits the further sale of intoxicants.

I am not going to touch upon the question of prohibition any more than may be necessary for my purpose, because I am well aware of the fact that the prohibition sentiment in the country is overwhelming and that nothing I can say will in any wise prevent the early establishment of this principle in the approval of the bill which is the subject of the conference. But, Mr. President, when you consider that, speaking roughly, 50 per cent of the revenues of the General Government have for many years prior to the war been derived from specific taxes upon distilled, brewed, and fermented liquors and tobacco, and that ever since the Civil War these articles and the business have been a prolific source of revenue, as was said by some one a revenue which is the only one known that is voluntarily paid, as no man needs to smoke or drink unless he chooses, and that up to this time a very considerable portion of our war revenues have been derived from the same source, the effect upon the revenues for 1919, because of this amendment, becomes a subject of first importance and one which has necessarily presented itself to the consideration of the Senate Committee on Finance now in charge of the revenue bill.

The best information which we have convinces us that as a result of this "bone-dry" amendment the revenues of the country will in all probability be depleted in 1919 in the sum of $750,000,000 to $800,000,000, and we must either acknowledge the fact and legislate accordingly or seek other sources of revenue to make up the certain deficit between the amount thus lost and the $8,000,000,000 which we are trying to secure.

There are in bond in round numbers 138,000,000 gallons of distilled liquors, and out of bond, consisting of what is called floor stuff, about 40,000,000 gallons. The bill now in committee proposes a tax of $8 per gallon upon all of this merchandise, being $4.08 in excess of the prevailing rate, which is or was when it was imposed considered excessive. The liquor which is not in bond has paid the tax of $3.80 per gallon and will be liable, so much of it as may remain in existence when the bill goes into effect, to the additional sum of $4.20. The owners of the liquor are of course bonded to the Government for whatever tax has been or may be imposed upon it after the time it is withdrawn from bond.

I know nothing, Mr. President, or at least not enough to hazard any statement, of the monthly or yearly consumption of distilled liquors in the United States, but I think it is safe to say that when the 1st of July, 1919, arrives the great bulk of the liquors now in bond will still be in bond, and inasmuch as it is unlawful, or will be unlawful at that time, to make any further sale of liquor the loss to the owners will be complete. Perhaps it may not be the subject of any very strong protest, although I do not believe it right, but the source of revenue will be gone and gone forever.

Now, apart from the evident injustice of legitimatizing and encouraging the manufacture of an article and its use as an article of merchandise and trade and the subsequent practical confiscation of property by law, is added to the problem of revenue in a great crisis like this. Our information is, Mr. President, that fully 50 per cent of this enormous stock of liquors has not yet reached an age which justifies its sale as a beverage unless it be disposed of to manufacturers of rectified whisky, which is an artificial product, largely speaking, and made possible by the use of flavors, sugar, and so forth.

Now, I wish those who are responsible for this legislation would give the members of the Finance Committee the benefit of their better judgment as to whether, purely from the standpoint of revenue, under all the circumstances, it is wise at this time to insist upon this arbitrary limitation and end by this legislation the 1st of July next any further disposition of this large stock of liquors; and if the law is to be insisted upon, then to indicate to the committee in what manner the deficiency can be provided against by the imposition of taxes upon other forms of taxable wealth.

Eight billions of dollars, Mr. President, is nearly twice the amount of all of the money in the United States of all characters and descriptions; it represents a sum which the mind of man can not grasp; and in order to realize it, it is necessary to tax to the last degree all pursuits and all property in the United States which, under the limitations of the national taxing power, can be made to yield their proportion of this desired sum.

The whole eight thousand million dollars is a small proportion of the annual expenditures of the Government during this war. Indeed, it was announced but a few moments ago that the military bill now under consideration in the House of Representatives makes an appropriation of from seven to nine billions of dollars for military purposes, in addition to the appropriations hitherto made by this Congress. A great liberty war loan compaign is now in progress, to which the people are responding with an enthusiasm and an alacrity that is highly gratifying; but the fact remains that the certain depletion of our estimates by 10 per cent either requires us to reduce those estimates, which the Treasury says would be extremely unwise and injurious, or to go on piling up our percentages of taxation upon other forms of property and other business.

This seems to me, Mr. President, to be a most critical situation, one in which sentiment should play no part whatever, one in which the needs of the Government—and they are paramount at this time—for money should be the prevailing and the only consideration.

I am constrained to call the attention of the Senate at this time to this subject, because, speaking for myself alone and without any desire or intention of representing any of my colleagues or associates upon the Finance Committee, I believe that we must reconsider this legislation in the revenue bill in some such way as will enable us to realize a revenue from this commodity until it shall have disappeared, until it has been exhausted and consumed, and until it shall no longer figure as a business or as an element of our taxable wealth. It is a serious problem and an insistent one, one which the Finance Committee can not, if it would, avoid, and which it would not, if it could, disregard.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I merely want to say a word and to have a letter printed in the RECORD relating in a certain way to the amendment to which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has referred. I am not going to discuss the phase of the matter which he has discussed, though I recognize the very great importance of it. Some of us, however, who have pressed legislation along the lines of that amendment have been charged from time to time with lugging into legislation matters not connected with the war; that we have had no regard to the war situation in pressing this legislation, and our protestations seem to have no effect. I am glad, Mr. President, to have a vindication from official sources connected with the administration, fully justifying our activities in behalf of this legislation as war legislation and which would fully justify even further action than Congress has taken.

A short time ago I received a telegram from several of the business men of Yakima, Wash., calling attention to the financial disaster that would come to the hop industry and those who had become financially interested in it by reason of the closing of the breweries. I referred that telegram to the Fuel Administrator, and I simply desire to read his letter. Under date of September 25 he writes me as follows:

> MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of September 21, inclosing copy of telegram sent you by business men and hop growers of Yakima, Wash., with reference to the closing of breweries.
> I am sure that no one regrets more than I the financial loss restrictions of this kind entail, but I can assure you that this restriction was not imposed until after the matter had received the most careful attention.

Now, I desire to call the Senate's attention especially to this paragraph:

> The entire matter has been under consideration at Washington for many months, and it was considered of such importance that practically all of the various governmental departments were consulted.

Not alone, Mr. President, the Fuel Administration, but practically all of the governmental departments were consulted with reference to this matter.

> After studying the matter most carefully from all its angles, it was decided that brewing ran counter to the war needs in so many important directions that the best interests of the war called for the action taken.
> Very truly, yours, H. A. GARFIELD,
> United States Fuel Administrator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not going to detain the Senate. I have no doubt the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] will be agreed to, and that the pending matter will take the course indicated by him. However, as amendment numbered 28, the amendment with reference to the rent situation, will be left open, I desire to call attention to some provisions in it, which really I think the conferees ought to change. They can agree to the amendment with an amendment. It is immaterial to me, anyway, but instances have been brought to my attention which warrant me in mentioning the matter, so that the conferees may consider it. For instance, on page 18 of the bill accompanying the report, in the lines from 7 to 10, in reference to a landlord getting possession of his premises, the condition is—

> That the premises are reasonably required by a landlord for the occupation either by himself or his wife, children, or dependents while in the employ of or officially connected with any branch of the Government.

There are cases where the title to the home, to the property, which has always been occupied and used as a home, is in the wife. Some such cases have been brought to my attention. I know particularly—and this illustrates the situation—where an elderly gentleman and his wife have lived here in Washington for some years. The husband is employed by the Government. About a year ago they rented their home. Now they want to occupy that home. The lease has expired; the husband is actually in the employment of the Government; but the title to the property is in his wife's name. Therefore, this provision will not give the wife the relief which Congress intended that the owner of the property should have, as I take it, because this remedy is confined to the property being that of the landlord, and where he and his wife and his children wish to occupy it.

I am a firm believer in the woman having equal, if not superior, rights to her husband, and especially when it comes to their home; but here is a provision which would enable the husband, if he owned the title to the property, to recover possession of it when the lease has expired, but it does not give the wife the same right in this instance. I have no doubt there are numerous other cases in the city, and it seems to me they ought to be regarded when it comes to a consideration of this amendment. Although the husband is actually employed by the Government, and the wife and he desire to occupy their home, he can not get possession of it under the provisions of this bill; neither can his wife do so. I think the amendment ought to be so modified as to cover cases like that. Where the title is held by the wife, the right to recover possession of the property ought to be vested in her.

I merely call the attention of the committee to that phase of the matter. A very slight amendment would correct it. Now, resumption of possession of the property is limited to the right of the husband, and if he does not own the title to the property he is not the landlord, and therefore can not recover. Where the wife owns the title she ought to be permitted to recover in instances of that sort. I merely mention the matter in order that the conference committee may consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. KENYON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Agreement to the report sends the amendment with reference to the rent question back to the conferees, as I understand?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires whether or not this is a complete report?

Mr. GORE. No.

Mr. KENYON. It is not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the amendment upon which there is no agreement will, of course, remain in conference.

Mr. GORE. No, Mr. President, I do not think that is the course it will take. My motion is to further insist upon the amendment. That amendment will then go to the House, as I understand, and the House will vote upon it separately.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; but in the manner in which the Chair put the motion, would that accomplish what the chairman of the committee desires?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should think the question would first come, Mr. President, if I may suggest, on the adoption of the report of the committee of conference. The report is that all of the items in the bill, except No. 28, have been accepted and agreed on by the conferees, and that there is a disagreement as to amendment numbered 28. We recognize that, and then that would be followed by the further motion, I take it, that the Senator from Oklahoma means to make, to insist upon that amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado will state it.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it not a rule of parliamentary law in the Senate that a conference report must either be adopted or rejected as an entirety?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; that is true, but there is no conflict between that rule and the present status. It is more correct to follow the procedure indicated by the Senator from Florida. I united the two motions to agree to the report and to further insist upon amendment numbered 28. Perhaps it is better first to move to agree to the report. I shall then follow that by a motion further to insist upon amendment numbered 28.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point raised by the Senator from Colorado is correct, but it does not apply to this case.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, here is a report, which is a disagreement, except as to one item, and there is a disagreement as to that. Now, in order to sustain the committee, must we not disagree to the entire report?

Mr. GORE. No. The two Houses will agree to this report in so far as we have reached an agreement. That eliminates all those items from any future conference, whatever else may happen. When I move to insist upon this particular amendment, if that motion is agreed to, then that amendment will be messaged to the House, and the House will take independent and separate action upon that particular amendment. Of course, if they concur in the amendment, that ends it; but if they disagree, it will come back to the Senate for further action, when the Senate may either recede or ask for another conference. That is the procedure which was followed, I will say to the Senator, in connection with the regular Agricultural appropriation bill. The same situation exactly arose, and this procedure was followed at that time with respect to the so-called wheat amendment. The report was accepted, and an agreement was reached on everything but that particular amendment; the report was agreed to by the Senate, and the Senate further insisted upon that amendment. Then it went over to the House and was agreed to by the House with an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate further insist upon amendment numbered 28.

The motion was agreed to.

STATISTICS OF COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a very brief bill, which I am sure will not be objected to by anyone. It is calendar No. 527, being the bill (S. 4924) to amend section 336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the annual report on the statistics of commerce and navigation of the United States with foreign countries. It relates simply to the printing of this volume which I hold in my hand. Under the law it has to be printed at the end of the fiscal year. The Department of Commerce, the Shipping Board, the War Industries Board, and other departments all very much desire that the statistics shall be brought down to the close of the calendar year and that this document shall be printed, instead of as now required by law on June 30 of each year, at the end of the calendar year. This bill merely changes the date for the printing of these statistics, which are regarded as very valuable and very important, and they will be very much more useful if they are brought down to the end of the calendar year. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the word "fiscal" immediately preceding the word "year" at the end of the first sentence of said section and by inserting in lieu thereof the word "calendar."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STREET CAR SERVICE IN CITY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am going to take this opportunity to say a few words in reference to the street car situation in Washington, and I have delayed my remarks until along toward the last, so that Senators who may not desire to remain in the Chamber need not do so.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope that the Senator will bear in mind that we ought to have a brief executive session.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will get through in time for that.

Mr. THOMAS. So that the Senator does not run over 6 o'clock I will not object.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will not run that long.

Mr. THOMAS. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, street car traffic in the District of Columbia became much congested last fall and winter. On February 11, 1918, the Senate passed a resolution asking the Public Utilities Commission for information as to what steps the street railway companies were taking to meet the situation. On March 9 the commission reported, showing that an expert had been employed to study conditions and try to devise ways of operating the cars that would better meet the congestion. This has resulted in the establishment of the skip-stop system, platform loading, rerouting of cars, and rearrangement of the hours when Government and private employees go to work. These things have been of great benefit, but have not kept pace with the influx of population, and actual conditions have been getting worse.

On September 9 the Senate passed another resolution calling on the Public Utilities Commission for certain information. The commission was requested to advise the Senate what orders it has issued requiring the street car companies to procure more cars for operation on existing lines in the District; and, if no such orders had been issued, to inform the Senate why it had not done so. The reply of the commission shows that it has issued no such orders. No reason is given why it has not done so, except as we may infer that it did not deem it necessary to do it because the Capital Traction Co. has ordered 20 new cars and the Washington Railway & Electric Co. 50 new cars since the passage of the former resolution by the Senate. So I take it that the other resolution was not without value, at any rate.

The commission calls attention to the letters which it received from the companies and which were transmitted to the Senate stating their intention to purchase additional street cars. It also points out that plans and specifications for the proposed new cars were submitted to the commission and examined by its experts and that the type of car with equipmnet was approved for the one company April 10 and for the other company April 18; and that, through the efforts of the commission, similar types of cars are to be secured by both companies so constructed as to be operated singly or in two-car trains.

The commission was also asked whether it had made any investigation to determine how many cars could be used advantageously on existing tracks, and if such investigation had not been made, why it had not been done. In its answer it simply points out that the investigations referred to in its former report have been continued up to date and refers to the improvement secured through the skip-stop principle and the rerouting of cars, and so forth. We are left to infer that no investigation has been made to determine how many cars could be used advantageously on existing tracks and no reason is given for not making such investigation.

The commission was asked why more cars have not been secured by the companies. It gives us no information in that regard and we must infer that the companies did not secure any more cars simply because they did not want to do it, and that the commission did not interest itself in the matter at all.

The commission was also asked to advise us when additional new cars are likely to be placed in service. In its answer, which purports to cover both of these requests, it simply states that the commission is informed that their orders for the purchase of new cars were given in March and April, 1918, and that, through the assistance of the Bureau of Industrial Housing, certain priority orders have been issued and that deliveries are promised so that the completed cars can be assembled and ready for service beginning in December, 1918.

The commission was asked to state what efforts it had made to assist the companies in securing additional cars. It states that, upon receipt of specifications for the new cars, several conferences were held, finally resulting in both companies purchasing the same type of car, interchangeable at the lines of the two companies; and that prompt action was taken on the application of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. to issue $572,000 of bonds to pay for the cars ordered by them. Apparently the commission took no steps whatever in the first instance to require the companies to get new cars, and it has taken no steps to assist the company in getting priorities or early delivery of the new cars ordered.

The commission was asked to state why it has not required more frequent service by the companies. It does not show any special effort by the commission to secure more frequent service except the inauguration of the skip-stop system and compliance with certain standards adopted by the commission. It states that the companies have been unable to operate their cars in accordance with these schedules, very likely for the lack of trainmen, but it does not show that it has required of the companies any special effort to get additional trainmen. It does express the belief that the companies are making reasonable efforts to meet the unprecedented situation, but that they are greatly handicapped by the lack of men to operate their cars, although special wage increases have been made in the past year. They state that announcements have been made in the last few days of very large increases in wages, which the company proposes to put into effect immediately, and that with such inducements it seems reasonable to expect an increase in the number of trainmen sufficient to operate all the scheduled cars. It gives no reason why the companies have not long before this made substantial increases, nor does it give any excuse for their not making special efforts to get trainmen or secure women for the operation of these cars, as has been done in a great many other places.

It is plain to me that the street car companies of the District of Columbia have made no special efforts to meet the congested situation here. They have not increased wages as they ought to have been increased. They did not attempt to secure additional cars until the spring of this present year. The companies seem to operate upon the theory of getting everything they possibly can out of the public and rendering just about as little service as possible. As the congestion increased and the war activities became greater, they should have taken immediate steps to increase the number of cars for use upon existing lines. They never have had enough cars to meet the situation as it ought to be met, and it is certainly plain to anyone that many more cars could be used advantageously upon existing lines during rush hours to meet the congestion that must continue and become worse unless something of this kind is done.

In this connection I simply wish to call attention to two or three conditions as to the existence of which, I think, everybody will bear me out. I have occasion to come down Fourteenth Street every morning about 8 o'clock. I find that it is impossible to get a car on Fourteenth Street before getting down to Fourteenth and H; so I walk that distance every morning in order to get a car. I find that cars generally running along Fourteenth Street are from two to four blocks apart. It seems to me that in the rush hours that should not be the case. That is not the way cars run in other cities when there is a great rush. I remember a short time ago I happened to be in South Bethlehem, Pa., along about the time when the employees leave their work, and I found along the car line car after car just a few feet apart going down to meet the employees to take them home. Nothing of that sort is found here.

Then you find, Mr. President, that just as soon as the rush hour begins to get over the cars are taken off, so that, as it is now, it is practically a rush hour all through the day so far as the people are concerned who have to use the street cars. You can hardly get on a street car that has come any distance at any time of the day and be able to get a seat. It seems to me that that ought not to be. At night, about the time the theaters are letting out, the companies provide quite an additional supply of cars; but that lasts only for a little while, and if you happen to want a car a little bit later than that or a little bit earlier than that you are unable to get a seat in a car if a car has been coming any considerable distance.

On Pennsylvania Avenue the other morning about half past 8 or 9 o'clock, when one would expect a large number of cars, I was standing, as I recall, at Ninth Street, and looking back on Pennsylvania Avenue there was just one car coming down Pennsylvania Avenue from the turn at the Treasury. That was not the car that I wanted. After it passed, looking down the Avenue I saw that there was one more car in that distance. Mr. President, there is something wrong when you have a condition of things like that on the street car lines of this city, especially during the rush hours of the morning or the rush hours of the evening. In any other city of any considerable size the street car line would have been crowded with cars, moving along as fast as they could to take care of the crowds and get to the end of the line. You never see anything of that kind here in Washington City, unless there is a breakdown or an interruption of the traffic in some way.

The law requires—

That every public utility doing business within the District of Columbia is required to furnish service and facilities reasonably safe and adequate and in all respects just and reasonable.

It also provides—

That the commission shall have power, after hearing and notice upon order in writing, to require and compel every public utility to comply with the provisions of this section and with all other laws of the United States applicable and any municipal ordinance and regulation relating to said public utility and to conform to the duties upon it thereby imposed or by the provisions of its own charter, if any charter has or shall be granted.

The commission has not used this power, and has made no special effort to do so. That is true, at least, as far as any showing has been made. It has not attempted to ascertain how many cars could be used advantageously upon existing lines. It seems to me that one of the very first things that should be ascertained is whether or not the existing car lines could be put to greater use than they are now; that is to say, how many more cars could be advantageously used upon those lines. There has been some talk of need of new lines. It seems to me that we are not making full use of the lines we have. I judge that that is the case simply because the companies have not gotten the necessary cars to run on the existing lines, and the commission has not used its power to insist upon the companies getting the cars that they could use advantageously upon these lines.

The commission has issued no order requiring the companies to operate more cars. It has made no special effort to compel the companies to furnish adequate service and facilities to meet the increasing congestion in the District. The commission may not be justly subject to criticism in this respect. The members of it are the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Their time probably is taken up fully with the business of the District, and they may be unable to give proper attention to the duties placed upon them as a public utility commission. The fact of the matter is, we ought to have a separate commission, with nothing else to do but look after the public utilities of the District. That was the conclusion that was arrived at by a special committee that was appointed some months ago to investigate the conditions affecting the street car lines in this city. That committee recommended the creation of a special body as a public utilities commission in the District of Columbia and that is what we ought to have.

As I say here, the District commissioners are busy with the business of the District generally. All of their time, probably, is taken up, and they have not been able to give to this matter the attention it ought to have, and deserves; and yet I do think they might better have neglected some of the general business of the District than to have allowed matters to go on as they have gone on in connection with these street car companies.

The street car companies are now seeking an increase in rates, and I understand that some war board has approved such an application.

I saw some reference to that in the papers the other day. I do not remember the name of the board. My recollection is that it was a board composed of people quite prominent in the country. What investigation they have made I do not know, but what justification there is for such approval I am at a loss to undertsand. The companies have not incurred any very great additional expense. They have gotten no new material. They have laid no new track. Until very recently, at any rate, the increase in wages to employees has not been very large; and, judging from the way their cars are crowded, their income has certainly been far greater than ever before.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that with the conditions existing, and with the passengers that are taxing the very capacity of these cars from early morning until late at night, there is no justification in asking for an increase in rates, and I think this is borne out by an investigation of the receipts and expenditures of these companies. An inspection of their revenues and expenditures will also show that their profits have been well maintained; and unless we want to go on the theory that they should not bear any of the burdens of the war, we will not allow them to increase their charges upon the public in order that their profits may be maintained to the prewar period.

The total operating revenues of the Capital Traction Co. for 1915 were $2,206,493.59; for 1916, $2,289,250.84; for 1917, $2,783,538.01; and for the first eight months of 1918, $2,277,194.82. Its total operating expenses, including taxes, for 1915 were $1,288,083.95; for 1916, $1,380,223.06; for 1917, $1,719,611.56; and for the first eight months of 1918, $1,403,285.27. The latter sum likely includes the amount to be paid for the 20 new cars, which the commission says this company can pay for without issuing bonds. Its total operating income, after deducting taxes, and so forth, for the year 1915 was $918,409.64; for 1916, $909,027.78; for 1917, $1,063,926.45; while for the first eight months of 1918 it was $873,909.55, or $1,310,864.32 for the year, assuming a proportionate amount for the rest of the year, or a net gain of nearly $300,000 over the last year.

The total operating revenue of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. on all its lines for 1915 amounted to $3,015,058.43; for 1916, $3,118,928.39; for 1917, $2,879,388.32. The falling off of its revenues for 1917 is very easily understood when it is remembered that this line provoked a strike which not only greatly decreased its revenues but which involved it in a very large increase in expenditures. For the first eight months of 1918 its revenues were $2,563,880.06. Its total operating expenses and taxes for 1915 were $1,977,959.53; for 1916, $2,115,016.45; and 1917, $2,311,675.34; and for the first eight months of 1918, $1,899,937.96, in which is very likely included the $572,000 bond issue for new cars. Its total operating income for 1915 was $1,037,098.90; for 1916, $1,003,911.94; for 1917, $567,712.98—this decrease was largely due to the strike—for the first eight months of 1918, $663,942.10, or $995,913.15 for the year, assuming a proportionate increase for the remaining four months, or only $42,000 less than its highest year.

The Potomac Electric Power Co., which is practically a part of and owned by the Washington Railway & Electric Co., had a net operating income in 1915 of $1,134,581.88; for 1916, $1,242,964.30; for 1917, $1,120,421.09; and for the first eight months of 1918, $725,618.73, on which basis the income for 12 months would be $1,088,428.09.

The public is called upon to inconvenience itself to better the service. Those who have not far to go should walk, especially during the morning and evening rush. They should be considerate in getting on and off cars. They should and they can aid greatly by moving from the rear to the front of the cars when the car is not full.

I received a letter a few days ago suggesting that the residents of the District, or the Public Utilities Commission, or somebody, ought to arrange with some authority to see to it that passengers move up from the rear of the cars to the front, and that in this way the accommodations on the cars would be very greatly increased. I have noticed the apparent disposition of the public to pay very little attention to requests of conductors to move forward, and I myself have felt simply like stumbling over somebody who persists in standing in the middle of the aisle and in the middle of the car when there is plenty of room at the front; and I have not hesitated to step on men's toes in order to get by, so as to get up to the front, and give the people who board the car an opportunity to get forward and to take the room that is unoccupied.

There are some things that the public can do in these matters as well as the other interests concerned, but, after all, the street car companies should have been compelled to furnish more adequate facilities before the war congestion came, and they should lend every effort and the commission should compel them to use every effort and make every expenditure necessary to furnish adequate service now.

Mr. President, I have here the reports of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, which I think are on the table. I see no need of having them printed. I have stated the substance of the reports in my remarks, and I simply suggest that they be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia without being printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). Is there objection to the request? There being none, it is so ordered.

THE MORALE OF AMERICA IN THE WAR.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have here, and desire to have inserted as a part of my remarks—although it is not pertinent to the subject I have been discussing—an address delivered by Dr. M. A. Matthews, of Seattle, Wash., former moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, entitled "The Morale of America in the War." It is a very splendid address. It is short and will not take very much space in the RECORD, and I ask that it may be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE MORALE OF AMERICA IN THE WAR.

[Delivered by Rev. M. A. Matthews, D. D., L.L. D., before the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in convention in San Francisco, Cal., July 10, 1918.]

"ENTRANCE.

"Mr. President, fellow citizens, we have entered into the world's greatest struggle. Our position must be judged solely by the standards of absolute righteousness. Therefore, we invite the world to focus the light of investigation, history, and Christianity upon our motives and our conduct.

"Unashamed and unafraid, we have no apologies to offer to ourselves, to our enemies, or to the world for our participation in this gigantic struggle for universal freedom. We entered the contest at the right time—at the psychological moment. We should not have entered sooner, nor should we have delayed our entrance a single day; therefore the morale of our people is of the highest type.

"MORALE.

"Our courage, spirit, character—morale—depends entirely upon the motive controlling America's decision to enter the war. Motive—intent—fixes the degree of crime or glorifies the principles controlling one in any action. Our intent—our motive—will stand the most careful investigation. There is not a single degree of selfishness, revenge, or reward to be found in the motive controlling our actions. We are absolutely free from any selfish considerations.

"UNSELFISH.

"America has always acted from the unselfish viewpoint. History proves that her contest in 1776 was to establish the principle of self-government, independence, and the right of representation equal to taxation. Her contest in 1861 was to preserve the Union and give to the world a nation willing to sacrifice individual opinion for the preservation of indissoluble union. Her contest in 1898 was to lift the heel of oppression from a downtrodden people. She has ever been willing to sacrifice for the good of others.

"America had every reason to enter this contest to avenge the wrongs she had suffered; but she waived those reasons, and awaited the moment when the world could truthfully say she entered solely for the purpose of making her contribution to the worlds' salvation, regardless of what it might cost.

"CAUSE.

"Her citizens had been murdered, her property had been destroyed, her treaties had been broken, and her hospitality had been desecrated; every right near and dear to her own welfare had been infringed, but America waited. Conspiracy after conspiracy against her people, their happiness and welfare had been formed. Germany had entered the domain of her sister nations and had tried to incite them to make war upon America, but she waited. Her own sacred domains of diplomacy, honor, and secrecy had been invaded by infamous spies and traitors and her confidence had been insulted, but she waited.

"At last, when Germany described a zone into which she forbade American ships to sail and notified the world she would practice ruthless submarine warfare upon neutrals and belligerents alike, America said the world's liberties were then in the balance, and she would enter the contest for the protection of the liberties of the world and the freedom of the seas. If Germany had the right to describe a 3-mile zone, of course she had the right to describe a 3,000-mile zone; but America said no Government in the world had the right to monopolize the high seas, wage ruthless warfare, and murder women and children in the pursuit of their routine avocations; therefore, for the freedom of the seas, the defense of the weak, and the vindication of right, America entered this awful contest. She will stay in it until the seas are freed, the world is emancipated, and Prussianism eternally crushed.

"MOTIVE.

"We entered this awful hell to rescue the perishing, defend the weak, and help our allies establish liberty, law, democracy, and righteousness. We entered solely for the purpose of vindicating and guaranteeing to the world the principles of humanity, justice, equality, and democracy. Therefore, you see self-preservation was not the principle governing us.

"Our hands and hearts are clean, and we ask no reward for the sacrifices we are making and will have to make. We only ask the privilege of making these sacrifices for the emancipation of the world. With such a motive the morale of this country is absolutely perfect, the courage of the people consequently indomitable. When the motive is pure and the program divine, the spirit of the people is free. There is no fear in righteousness nor cowardice in virtue. The determination of the American people is unlimited.

"We have entered this contest to defend the rights of the weak and guarantee freedom to all. We will not be deterred by obstacles, discouraged by difficulties, or stopped by foes. Our universal command is, 'Forward, march, march on—Washington to Berlin!' We do not want peace. We are going to have victory, righteousness, then peace.

"THE TWO FORCES.

"It might be well for us to ask, What is this unparalleled contest into which we have plunged with such determination? It will help us very much to understand what the contending forces are, what the two motives are, and the ultimate object of each set of forces. When you comprehend these facts, then you can understand why the morale, the courage, the unselfish spirit of America and her allies is so high, and why the satanic spirit controls the central powers in their method of warfare. It is a death struggle between force and faith; between militarism and democracy; between brutality and humanity; between rationalism and Christianity.

"On the one side Germany and her allies are controlled by rationalism, force, militarism, and brutality. On the other side America and her allies are controlled solely by the principles of democracy, humanity, faith, and spirituality. Germany is controlled by the materialistic spirit; America and her allies are dominated by the spiritual forces of democracy, equality, equity, and righteoueness.

"GERMANY THE CAUSE.

"Germany started this war to glorify herself and magnify and deify might. She says might is right; we say right alone is might.

"Frederick the Great, the archprophet of Prussianism, speaking in 1740, said: 'The question of right is an affair of ministers. It is time to consider it in secret, for the orders to my troops have been given.' And again he said: 'Take what you can; you are never wrong unless you are obliged to give back.' Take the words of Bethmann-Hollweg, addressing the Reichstag on August 4, 1914, when he said: 'We are now in a state of necessity, and necessity knows no law. He who is menaced as we are and is fighting for the highest possession can only consider how he is to hack his way through.' In other words, from Frederick the Great to the present moment Germany has known but one rule, namely, the rule of might. She says the ends justify the means and that there is no law when her greed, desire, and tyrannical spirit are to be satisfied. Germany started this war for the purpose of making the world recognize Germany as supreme. For the last hundred years Germany has instilled into her people the idea that Germany should be over all. The toast at every banquet was closed with the sentence, 'Germany over all.' That was the motive, the purpose, and the program of the German people, the German Government, and the German war lords.

"She held that her people should not only be the conquerors but the rulers of the world. Every preparation possible was made to accomplish that purpose. Her people are just as much involved in the scheme as are her war lords. That damnable fiend, the Kaiser, is no more to blame than the German people, for they believe and have taught that Germany should be, by her might, the conqueror of the world and the ruler of all peoples.

"Since 1870, the close of the Franco-Prussian war, Germany has made incessant preparations for this world conflict. She entered into conspiracies with her financiers, military leaders, social factors, teachers, and preachers to bring about this awful hell, in order that she might emerge a victorious world dictator. She offered her financiers vast wealth, her political leaders power, and all her people unlimited territory. There has not been a baby born in Germany for the past hundred years who has not drawn his sustenance from the breast of military ambition, desire, and determination.

"GERMAN TEACHINGS.

"Germany's rationalism was the controlling philosophical power beneath all the purposes and programs of her people. Out of Germany's rationalism came her damnable rationalistic theology, which deified might, force, and militarism, and crucified everything spiritual, righteous, and divine in her people.

"She teaches that might is right and the sword is the only arbiter between nations and peoples. She wants territory, commercial supremacy, political power, and military domination. The Kaiser and his war lords have committed the unpardonable sin. Germany has lost her soul, crucified every principle of humanity, and has blasphemed God Almighty.

"Germany is not entitled to self-government. She is incapable of self-government, because self-government means government of the people by the principle of consent. Germany says government shall be by force regardless of consent. Her people are slaves, servants to military orders and Prussian power. They have no rights except those granted by the Emperor. The autocratic spirit of the German Emperor is clearly revealed in his own utterances, in which he says: 'The Imperial Government is in form a government by the Emperor and the Imperial Diet. The dominating factor in the latter is the federal council appointed by the kings and princes.' As King of Prussia, William the Second can make or break any policy.

"Prussia is the controlling factor—political, economic, and military—in modern Germany. In other words, the supreme controlling power in Germany, from the Emperor throughout the Government, is force, which means, when the occasion requires, the use of absolute brutality, and that brutality comes from her rationalistic philosophy and theology. There is no other way by which the world can account for the extreme brutality of Germany.

"GERMAN CRIMES.

"Behold helpless Belgium, wrecked Serbia, ruined Roumania, and a whole world on fire, while the fiendish Kaiser rejoices in his victories and blasphemes God by claiming Divine assistance. There is no other way to account for the sinking of ships, the murder of women and children, the brutal sacrifice of doctors, nurses, and dying patients, the breach of every promise, the violation of every treaty, and the inauguration of a system of conspiracies unparalleled in the history of the world.

"There is no other way to explain why the Kaiser and his people have committed such crimes. There are no atrocities known to Satan they have not committed. They have lighted the torch of the incendiary; they have devised the weapons of the midnight assassin; they have corrupted manhood, debased womanhood, ravished childhood, damned motherhood, and exhibited the nature of the beast. They have laughed as the blood of women and children flowed at their feet. They have mocked when women cried, and have derided when children pleaded for bread. They have terrorized the weak and have brutally trampled beneath their feet the helpless and the dying. They have violated every rule of decency and have set at naught the solemnity of every promise and the sacredness of every vow. They have plunged the world into blood and murder. They have stripped the thin gauze of decency from the body of civilization and left the nude form exposed to the world's ridicule. They have desecrated homes, polluted the marriage vows, defiled the altars of the church, destroyed civilization, and blasphemed God.

"They have done all these things as the logical result of their damnable rationalistic philosophy and theology. They have done all they have done with premeditation and malice aforethought. Everything they have done has been the logical result of 100 years of preparation, teaching, and planning.

"AMERICA'S PROGRAM.

"Therefore, patience ceased to be a virtue, and we entered the contest on the side of virtue, on the side of humanity, on the side of faith, on the side of democracy, on the side of right, and, by the powers of eternal right, we will stay in the contest until Prussianism is crushed, Germany humiliated, and over her is placed a protectorate to be created by America and her righteous allies.

"We are not in this contest to destroy the Kaiser and his war lords only; we are in it to defeat the German people, reorganize the German Government, liberate the world from Prussianism, and drive forever from the face of the earth a materialistic, damnable, rationalistic philosophy and theology which has plunged the world into this vortex of blood.

"America has a program, but there is not a single vestige of selfishness in it. Her spirit is free, her courage is unparalleled, and her determination grows stronger with the passing days.

"America does not want reward and will not ask for indemnity—would not take it were it offered to her. She is not seeking revenge for herself, but is seeking to vindicate right and, for the world's sake, the establishment of universal representative democracy. She is willing to pay the price at home and abroad. With the assistance of her allies, she is going to win and carry the Stars and Stripes through the streets of Berlin.

"America does not want a negotiated peace—will not have a negotiated peace.

"America will never consent to the Kaiser and his associates having a seat at the peace table. They have no right to participate in peace negotiations. They have forfeited their right to sit at the table with men who respect their word, who hold sacred personal honor and national integrity. Every proposal of peace heretofore made has been a German-made proposal. America has spurned and will continue to spurn such infamous proposals of peace.

"There can be no peace until Prussianism is crushed, representative democracy established, and universal right implanted in the hearts of the Governments of the world.

"America is prepared to defeat the enemy at home, whether that enemy be a spy, a pro-German fiend, or an American traitor. The man who is profiteering or who is in any way, shape, form, or manner giving aid or comfort to the enemy by interfering with the program of this Government is a traitor to every American principle and is an infamous assassin driving his knife into the back of America and her worthy allies. The enemy at home, whether he be in the United States Senate or in the lumber camps of the West, deserves but one treatment—eternal imprisonment or ignominious death. There may be pharisaical hypocrites, infamous pacifists, and pro-German cowards in the pulpits and in the seats of learning who object to strong language, but there is but one place for such damnable, pharisaical, pro-German enemies, namely, the grave of eternal, social, political, and moral oblivion.

"We are in this war to win, and there shall not stand in the way of the American spirit and courage a single foe at home or abroad. He who is right, whose conscience is clear, whose hands are clean, and whose motive is pure recognizes no opposition and stops for no foe.

"He who will not give his entire support to the President of the United States, the members of his Cabinet, the Army, and the Navy is not entitled to American liberty.

"There are no political, partisan principles or parties governing us at the present time. There is but one President, one party, one spirit, and one baptism—the President of the whole United States, unadulterated American loyalty, the spirit of unselfishness, and the baptism of blood. In the spirit of absolute loyalty and unselfishness we will sacrifice all for the establishment of righteousness and the freedom of the world.

"When that has been accomplished, we shall come home and continue to make our contribution to the rebuilding of the world and the perfecting of our own Nation. We shall continue to give the world unselfish service, unstinted contributions, and unlimited love, sympathy, and assistance. We shall come home to build America on a foundation of absolute equity, democracy, and righteousness. There shall never be recognized in this country class or caste. The distinctions that have controlled in the past shall give way to the principles of representative righteous democracy.

"The political parasite and the partisan assassin shall be unknown factors in the future government of America.

"The soldiers who come home will take their place in the seats of power as well as in the ranks of service. Business will be protected, but never dominate government; labor will be protected, but never control government. Government will be of all, for all, and over all, without favors for any, with persecution for none, and with equality and justice for all.

"M. A. MATTHEWS."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, October 3, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Father of all souls, through whose eternal energy, wise and beneficent purposes, our Republic lives, with its sacred institutions, high ideals, and consummate genius, we thank Thee for its glorious past, its hopes for the future. Unite us in the bonds of fraternity and Christian patriotism. Put forth Thy healing hand and restore our people to health, our Army, Navy, marines, and aviators, that the glorious work in which we are engaged, at home and abroad, may not be stayed; that order may be established and a permanent peace be secured in all the world for Thy sake, for humanity's sake, for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GILLETT rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. GILLETT. I want to ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to appeal to the leader on the other side of the House to know if he will not inform the House as to what the program is for the next few days. There is great restlessness on both sides, I suspect, and I do not believe there is a quorum in the city. Personally, I do not blame the Members who are away, because this liberty-bond campaign made great pressure on them, and I have told men on this side for the past week that as soon as the power bill was over there apparently would be nothing important to be done until the appropriation bill would be ready, about 10 days from now, and that men might go, and I know that a great many on this side, and no doubt on that side, have gone with that understanding. Therefore it seems to me we should come to some agreement, if possible, and I would be glad if the gentleman leading would tell us what the program is.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I quite agree with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts. I do not think we ought to arrest absentees. Following this bill the Committee on Rules, as I understand, expects to bring in a rule preparatory to taking up the bill establishing a sanitarium in Kentucky. After that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has the public-health bill. It ought not to take long for either of those measures, and after that the Committee on Military Affairs has several little bills which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] assures me can be disposed of in one day.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have a little bill on the calendar which the Treasury Department is very anxious to have passed. It is an important bill, but carries no appropriation. It means much to the coinage of the country, and until it is passed the coinage will be greatly hindered. I have been trying for several days to get that bill up, and I would like very much to have it passed within a few days.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. The bill the gentleman refers to is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. It would be wise to fix a day when we could take up the whole Unanimous Consent Calendar. It does not need a quorum, because with one objection it goes over, and it does not make any difference whether a quorum is present or not; and as to that bill and the bills from the Committee on Military Affairs, it ought to be understood that they are really to be considered by unanimous consent. Otherwise we have got to bring a quorum back here.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to say to the gentleman that there is a bill here, reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, at the instance of the Treasury Department and the Public Health Service, calling for authorizations to construct hospitals and sanitariums in different parts of the country to take care of the sick and disabled soldiers and sailors.

It is a very important measure, it seems to me, and it ought to be considered at as early a day as possible. Then there is another bill reported by our committee which gives to the President the power to declare certain rental areas where governmental work is in progress, and where rents are too high, and where profiteering is going on in that line, the power to declare rental areas and fix the rent, which is also, as I consider it, a very important measure and ought to be considered by Congress—those two.

Mr. GILLETT. Could not those bills wait for 10 days until a quorum would be back here to pass the appropriation bill and then they would take very little time, and could we not now have an agreement to go away Saturday night, at least a quorum could be called in, perhaps in 10 days? I do not think it will hasten matters to take them up now. They have got to go through the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; but the gentleman knows that it takes some time to get to other places. If the gentleman will permit me, I wanted to say this further, of course, it is utterly immaterial: If we could have some definite understanding, 10 days would not make much difference, if we have some definite agreement that at that time they could be taken up and disposed of. They are very important, because as I understand 14,000 discharged soldiers and sailors are coming back now who need sanitarium treatment, and there is absolutely no place for them.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. I wanted to ask the gentleman what had become of the millions of dollars appropriated for the construction of hospitals in the Army appropriation bill?

Mr. DOWELL rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. DOWELL. I desire to make inquiry of the leader on the other side with reference to when this appropriation bill will be reported to the House?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] advises me that his committee is working day and night and can not have it ready before a week from next Monday.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it possible, instead of having a recess now, after a number of Members have had to cancel engagements, to pass this legislation and take a recess for a certain time after the passage of the appropriation bill?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. That may be possible.

Mr. DOWELL. Those who live within the radius of a few hundred miles from Washington can go home and come back in 4 or 5 days, but there are those who can not go home at all if we have a recess for 8 or 10 days and then have to reassemble again. Is it not possible to pass this legislation now, and then take a definite recess after the passage of the appropriation bill?

Mr. SIMS. Until after the election.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I think we can dispose of all the bills that have been mentioned by Monday night and then probably recess for the rest of the week.

Mr. DOWELL. May I inquire of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee as to when this deficiency bill can be reported and passed?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am very glad to make a statement to the House. There are pending before the Committee on Appropriations estimates that total considerably over $7,000,000,000. In order to examine those estimates with any degree of care it is necessary to review in large measure the matters that were considered by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations in connection with the regular appropriation bills for the support of the Army, and to some extent of the Navy, because manifestly you can not consider intelligently the need for a deficiency appropriation without making an inquiry into the moneys that were appropriated previously for such purpose and the total expenditure that is necessary for the fiscal year for which provision is being made.

The Committee on Appropriations have been working every day, starting at 10 o'clock in the morning and sitting most nights as late as 11 o'clock and sometimes as late as 12 o'clock. I believe the investigation that is being conducted there will result in the committee being able to report a bill with a reduction of considerably over $1,000,000,000, and perhaps over $2,000,000,000, from the estimates that have been submitted. Personally, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I am not willing to report to this House that bill or any part of that bill without such consideration as the committee are able to give it, whether it happens to take a week or two weeks or a month. My primary responsibility is in the consideration of these huge sums. The committee owes that to the House and it owes it to the country. Speaking for myself, and as far as I am able to control the action of the committee, I propose to continue the hearings day and night in order to get through that bill and to report to the House a measure that will at least reflect the careful judgment of the committee. I trust that by this continuation of work, if I am able to stand the strain of day and night hearings, we may be able to report the bill about a week from Monday. The House itself can judge as to what time will probably be necessary for the consideration of the bill after it comes on the floor.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I understood from conversation with the gentleman that he deemed it absolutely necessary that certain items of this bill be reported and passed as soon as possible?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that is unquestionably true.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Let me ask the gentleman if it will not be practicable to bring in a bill containing those absolutely necessary items and pass that bill at once, and then postpone the other items which are not so immediately necessary and which require very careful investigation, reporting a bill containing those items at a later date?

Mr. SHERLEY. There are, of course, a number of items coming from the civil departments of the Government that the committee can easily determine on their face need not to be considered at once, but they are minor both in number and in amount. In order to determine what is necessary to be voted for the Army and the Navy it is necessary to consider all the Army and Navy items, and in order intelligently to bring in the things that are necessary we must consider the whole bill.

There is another consideration that I am sure the House will appreciate. The short session of this Congress begins the first week in December and ends on the 4th of March. In that time the Congress will be required to report all the bills for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920. It is going to be a herculean task for the committees dealing with appropriation bills to prepare and report those bills within the life of the short session. Therefore it is highly desirable that there should not now be thrown over onto the short session any work which can be considered and disposed of during the present session. The House is aware of the very large military program that the country has undertaken. Particularly in connection with artillery is it necessary to make provision many months in advance in order to get production. It is also true of a great many other items, and I repeat that the Committee on Appropriations would be derelict in its duty if it permitted any considerations personal to its membership or to the membership of the House to delay for a single day the consideration and reporting of this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it is very evident that it will be difficult at any time from now on until election day to get a quorum of the House. Even when the appropriation bills are brought in it will be difficult to secure a quorum. Members from the far distant parts of the country have generally remained here in the hope that the business of the House would be disposed of in time to give them a few days home in the campaign before election. It is hardly fair to those Members to have recesses in the immediate future and then insist on taking up business that will demand a quorum at a later period. It seems to me. Mr. Speaker, that in view of the situation it is the duty of all Members on both sides to assist in disposing of the bills that are essential and necessary without raising any question that will call for a quorum if that can be avoided. I think it is the duty of gentlemen on both sides to compose their differences, to each yield a little, in order that there shall be no question raised that will require a quorum. Under these circumstances we can not afford to quibble over minor matters. When there is not some question of principle or some very important question of policy involved it seems to me we ought to agree with regard to those matters and pass these bills whether we entirely approve all of their provisions or not. We can consider them within the next few days by continuous work until we have cleaned up the calendar so far as the legislation that is of immediate and pressing importance is concerned—the bills from the Military Committee and the other bills that have been referred to. We should also take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and if possible the Private Calendar, under a unanimous-consent agreement. I hope that gentlemen on this side and gentlemen on the other side as well will be willing to have this legislation considered and that of pressing importance passed, though there may be some details of it that they do not approve of. There is no great principle involved in these bills. They are largely of detail and administration, and they ought to be disposed of. Clearly they can not be disposed of if Members are going to insist on raising the point of no quorum—insist on having a quorum here.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman allow another question?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it the intention of the gentleman to ask for a recess after the passage of the appropriation bill?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. After the passage of the $7,000,000,000 appropriation bill it is the intention to ask for a recess until after election. I think that will probably be two weeks before election.

Mr. DOWELL. I take it that the appropriation bill will be called up immediately after it is reported, and then upon its passage the majority will ask for a recess?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Upon its passage the majority will ask for a recess until after election.

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. McARTHUR. On what date does the gentleman intend to call Members back; on what date will the House reassemble?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. A sufficient length of time after election to enable everybody to remain at home and vote. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that we run along until to-morrow night and dispose of as many of the propositions that are pressing as possible. It may be possible to arrange for three-days recesses over the most of next week, if not over the entire week.

Mr. MONDELL. If that is done the Unanimous Consent Calendar, which is very important, can be disposed of.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes; I think we ought to have a day on that.

Mr. GILLETT. I will cooperate with the gentleman, and I think we ought to dispose of these bills which have been suggested, and also the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and I think we ought to have a day for the Private Calendar and clear up everything so there will be nothing left but the appropriation bill.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. It looks as if we might commence to recess Monday night.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he now ask that to-morrow or next day be set aside for bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I do not want to ask that until we get through with these pressing war propositions.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I want to say that some of the measures on the Unanimous Consent Calendar are war propositions.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, day before yesterday I asked unanimous consent that the Military Committee be given the right of way to call up and consider until disposed of bills on both calendars reported by the Military Committee. There are 10 of these bills, and the most of them are simple bills which have been recommended by the War Department since the passage of the appropriation bill on July 9, when the conferees tacked onto that bill substantially all of the war legislation that had been recommended up to that date. These are such bills as I think can be disposed of in one day if the House will give it one day's consideration. They are such bills as the pay of nurses in captivity; the correction of a mistake in the pay of the chief Army nurse made in the appropriation bill; authority to take over the soldiers' home at Hampton, Va., for hospital purposes during the war, to be returned back at the close of the war; amending the fiftieth article of war, which gives the commanding general in the field the authority to remit a sentence without waiting for an order to come from the President across the seas.

All these are matters of which I imagine there can be no controversy at all. I think we can pass them all in one day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not have them placed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and if unobjectionable they will be passed without controversy in the same order with other bills.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman knows that the Unanimous Consent Calendar sometimes gets into a tangle and the bills might never be reached.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not agree that the entire calendar shall be called through, beginning on a certain date, and that calendar alone considered, and there will be no disposition not to give consideration to these bills.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it might not be possible to call the Unanimous Consent Calendar through.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that we can not do anything on this proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that Members might arrive at a conclusion quicker to go on with the business and let each gentleman think out his own scheme and suggest it to his neighbor and bring it up again.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I think the way to dispose of this question of recess is to dispose of the business that we have pending, and then you will have no question about a recess. If there is any business pending that ought to be enacted, let us enact it. A great many who have been here all the time and never have been away are just as anxious as those who have been away most of the time.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I can not yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I was just going to suggest night sessions.

Mr. MADDEN. A great many of us can not register unless we are present in person to register. Our registration will be about the time when this appropriation bill comes up. I think we are entitled to as much consideration as those who are anxious to get away. We are willing to go and come back, but in the meantime we are not willing there should be a recess for three days at a time, or any other time, while there is a great appropriation bill for $7,000,000,000 pending to be considered. That is the way I feel about it, and I shall not consent to any such recess.

DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES LIABLE TO MILITARY SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Assistant Secretary of War, which was read and ordered to be printed in the RECORD and, under a previous order, to lie temporarily on the Speaker's table:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, September 27, 1918.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: With reference to House resolution No. 390, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, requesting the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to report to the House of Representatives the number of men (with the name and home address of each) who on June 5, 1917, were between the ages of 21 and 31 years and who since that date have been commissioned or enlisted, either in the active or in any of the reserve forces of the Military or Naval Establishments, and assigned to clerical work in their respective departments, or in offices elsewhere, where such service is not directly rendered to and as a part of units of the Army and Navy employed in active or field operations, and who have received deferred classification by reason of being already in the military or naval service of the United States, I beg leave to submit to you the accompanying lists, setting forth the information desired with respect to the Military Establishment.

In submitting this report I desire to call attention to the fact that the statements from the respective bureaus furnishing the information contained herein were received on various dates between June 14 and September 26, 1918, and that while the figures given are correct for the dates on which the statements were made, they can be regarded as only approximate for this date, due to subsequent changes.

Very respectfully,

BENEDICT CROWELL,
Acting Secretary of War.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LUNN, for three days, on account of important business;

To Mr. ROSE, for three days, on account of the death of a relative;

To Mr. BLAND of Indiana, for 10 days, to enable him to assist in the liberty-loan campaign in Indiana; and

To Mr. LEHLBACH (at the request of Mr. PARKER of New Jersey), indefinitely, on account of illness.

BUILDING FOR PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE, CITY OF WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the bill H. R. 12404, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question was pending upon the committee amendment. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOOD) there were—ayes 63, noes 44.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. GOOD. I am not.

The SPEAKER. Is any gentleman in the House opposed to the bill who desires to make a motion to recommit? If not, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to recommit H. R. 12404 to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with instructions to that committee to forthwith report the same back with the following amendment:

"Strike out lines 10 and 11, page 1, and lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That no contract shall be let by the Secretary of the Treasury for the purchase of any material therefor, or for the employment of labor to construct said building on the cost-plus basis."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that proposition has just been passed upon by the House by the adoption of the committee amendment, and that it is not now in order to vote again upon the same proposition. In other words, the effect of the adoption of this motion to recommit is precisely the same as it would have been if the amendment of the committee had been rejected, and I think the gentleman from Iowa will agree to that.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee possibly was not present when the argument was made yesterday upon the merits of the amendment to strike out.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman was present.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] claimed and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] claimed that this amendment did not give the Secretary of the Treasury power to enter into a contract on the cost-plus basis, and if you struck it out it did give the Secretary the right to enter into contracts upon that basis. My amendment does strike that out, and it also then provides that the Secretary of the Treasury can not do what was claimed on the other side he would have a right to do in the absence of that provision.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I was present during the argument upon the merits and heard the statements. I have also read the language of the bill. The arguments that may have been made upon the floor do not control the construction of the language itself. If I construe the language aright, the motion to recommit, if adopted, will have precisely the effect and no more effect than would have resulted from the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the gentleman from Tennessee claim that under this amendment they could not enter into a contract upon the cost-plus plan?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Under the motion to recommit?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; under the bill as it stands now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; I do not contend so.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It authorizes him to enter into this cost-plus contract, and it is the object of the gentleman from Iowa to prevent that.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to state to the gentleman that under the bill as it stands the Secretary of the Treasury is simply permitted to do this work by contract or he can go into the market and purchase materials and hire labor and do it himself.

Now, if he lets it by contract, he must let it under the existing law, which provides that he must advertise for bids and let it to the lowest and best bidder. There is not any question about it. Now, I want to say to the gentleman further if the gentleman from Iowa, instead of undertaking to strike out the language which permits the Secretary to be free from any possible collusion among contractors and go into the open market and buy materials and hire labor, if he sees fit and if it is necessary to prevent the Government from being mulcted, if he would leave that in and simply add his proviso that there shall be no cost-plus percentage or cost-plus contract, if he desires to do that the gentleman from Alabama and the committee will gladly accept it and let it go into the law, because we have gone upon record here against the cost-plus contract and there is no effort on our part to revive it. But the gentleman undertakes to strike out by this motion to recommit the very language that protects the Government and allows the Secretary, in case there should be any collusion between contractors, to go into the open market and buy materials and build it himself.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, it is always a good thing to get down to fundamentals when we have a proposition of this kind. The motion to recommit is in the nature of an amendment, as the Speaker well knows. If there had been an amendment offered to strike out and that had been determined, another motion to strike out would not have been entertained by the Chair; but the motion to strike out, coupled with the motion to insert in place of it, would have been within the jurisdiction of the Chair. While it is true that a motion to recommit, merely asking to strike out, would be equivalent to a motion to strike out, and therefore not in order, yet now we have a different proposition, that is, a motion to recommit, striking out the amendment, together with a substitute which is offered. That raises a different question, and can be considered. I think it is well settled that in order to be subject to an objection the motion to recommit must be identical with the proposition previously passed upon by the House. For that reason the objection is not well taken and the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is in order.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BURNETT. To ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not have that if he is going to talk about the point of order.

Mr. BURNETT. I was going to suggest if the gentleman will so modify his amendment with the striking out of the cost-plus percentage proposition there will be no objection whatever, because there is no one more opposed to it than I am or the committee which reported this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Iowa giving heed to the gentleman from Alabama, who is making a peace proposition? The gentleman from Alabama will please repeat his proposition.

Mr. BURNETT. The proposition is this: We are not willing that the hands of the Secretary may be so tied that he will be compelled under this contract to do the very thing that the gentleman is trying to obviate, and if the gentleman will frame his amendment so that it will preclude any cost-plus percentage proposition in this bill—I have conferred with several members of the committee, both on this side and on that—there will be no objection to it. If the gentleman wants to take the responsibility of undertaking to tie the hands of the Secretary so there may be a cost-plus proposition and that he can not go out into the market and buy materials and build it himself, then the gentleman will have to take that responsibility. We are willing, after conference with members of the committee, to accept it if he will ask unanimous consent to modify his amendment in that respect.

Mr. HARDY. That is all that anybody apparently wants.

Mr. BURNETT. That is what they say.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from Iowa say?

Mr. GOOD. I prefer to have the Speaker rule on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question has arisen several times and Mr. Speaker Blaine rendered an opinion on the subject which goes the whole way. Objection was made practically on the same ground of a point of order, and Mr. Speaker Blaine said:

> The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman might not be able to offer the resolution in precisely the same words, but this is a different resolution, differently worded, and it is a question of privilege, and is in order at any time. The difference of a single word would bring it within the rule of the House.

The point of order is overruled, and the question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BURNETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SANATORIUM FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. CANTRILL. I wish to present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Send it up.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for one moment? I wish to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that there are several Members on this side who are very strongly opposed to the bill that is about to be presented for consideration under a rule, and several Members feel they will be compelled, if it is brought up for consideration, to have a quorum here. I merely mention that to the gentleman in view of the legislative situation.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me? I trust the gentleman from Kentucky will withhold the demand for the immediate consideration of this measure until we can dispose of some other matters. It is a measure in regard to which there will be some difference of opinion, not as to the importance of providing for tubercular discharged sailors, but as to the propriety of the construction of this particular sanatorium. I have no objection personally, but there are gentlemen who have objections to the details of this bill. There is important legislation that can be passed and disposed of without objection, and I am sure the House will be willing a little later to take up the matter the gentleman is so much interested in, and with his persuasive eloquence I trust he can prove to the House that what he desires should be done, but there are so many other matters that can be passed practically by unanimous consent that I plead with the gentleman that he let these other measures come up and be disposed of before he presents his measure.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. POU. I wish to ask the gentleman to yield just a minute.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. He says he does. I think if the gentlemen who at the moment feel constrained to oppose this measure will take the trouble to investigate the hearings and make some investigation of the measure itself, they will find that there is no measure pending before this House that is more important.

Mr. MONDELL. Why not give the opportunity for them to do so?

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, before answering definitely the question propounded by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] I would like to make this statement to the House, which will be a very brief one. The facts are that there are now 14,000 discharged soldiers and sailors from the Army and Navy who are suffering from tuberculosis. There is absolutely no hospital in the United States in which these men can be placed for treatment. The statement is also made that within the next 12 months there will be an additional 24,000 discharged soldiers and sailors, making a total of 38,000 men suffering from tuberculosis. It is the duty of this Government to take care of them. Under the war-risk insurance act we are sacredly obligated to do so. At the present time there is absolutely no place in which to put them. I realize that probably there is not a quorum in town, and I realize fully that it is useless to undertake to go ahead with this bill if some one intends to raise the point of no quorum.

Now, in the face of the statement which I have made, saying to the House that there is a unanimous report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules, this rule should now be considered and this legislation passed. And I want to say to the House that if some gentleman will simply get up and say that it is his intention to raise the point of no quorum here, of course there will be nothing to do but submit.

Mr. GOOD and Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will ask the gentleman whether the Committee on Rules, in determining the power by which these bills should be brought in by the committee, did not determine the very nature of the proposition here and conclude that this bill should be given precedence?

Mr. CANTRILL. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This measure that was reported out under the rule is to take care of 500 of these 18,000 soldiers?

Mr. CANTRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONDELL. And can not do it immediately.

Mr. WALSH. As soon as the hospital is completed.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, a single question. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not it was ascertained that this particular hospital is in a nation-wide scheme or whether or not it is an isolated proposition?

Mr. CANTRILL. The report of the committee, if the House will permit it to be presented, shows that it is but the beginning of a great many hospitals that will have to be erected in practically every State in the Union. This is to be erected because of the fact that patriotic citizens have agreed to donate 10,000 acres of land at a place that the Bureau of Health says is one of the best places in the United States, and where there will be no trouble in the condemnation of the land. They are ready to deed it when this bill is passed. On these 10,000 acres of land are magnificent springs of water, especially fitted for the treatment of diseases of these men, and the Bureau of Health says it is the best place in the United States to make a start, and they have chosen this place because these people are ready to deed to the Government, free of cost, 10,000 acres of valuable land with which to start it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. CANTRILL. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman, a member of the committee.

Mr. LANGLEY. I desire to call attention to the fact that it was stated by the representatives of the Health Department that there is no other water that possesses the peculiar curative properties that this water does.

Mr. WALSH. What has that to do with tuberculosis?

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman understands I have no objection to this bill. I doubt if there is a gentleman present who cares to say now that he will insist on the point of no quorum. That will depend on the examination of the bill and its details. That is hardly a fair proposition. The whole House is in harmony with the purpose of this legislation. There can be no question about that, but there is some question as to whether or no it would be better to delay consideration of this bill, for a day perhaps, until the Members can acquaint themselves with the report and inform themselves in regard to it, and in the meantime go on with questions concerning which there is no controversy.

Mr. CANTRILL. In answer to that, I do not think there could possibly be any controversy on this bill when it is the duty of this Government to care for these men. There are now 14,000 of them that have tuberculosis. And if any gentleman in the House says that he will raise the point of no quorum, I will have to submit, of course. And, in answer to the gentleman from Wyoming, I do not think that my request is out of the way at all. If there is nobody that wants to raise an objection, let us go ahead and consider the bill, but if some Member has determined to raise the point of no quorum, then let him raise it now and save the time of the House.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. I will.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman, I think, will agree to this fact, that if we have already hospitals of that kind, Government institutions, where there are ample facilities for treating these men, we ought to fill those up and make them available for that purpose.

Mr. CANTRILL. I will say to the gentleman that that condition does not exist.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It does. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CANTRILL. The men who are in the Health Bureau of the country say it does not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Surgeon General's office says it does.

Mr. CANTRILL. These are discharged sailors and soldiers. They are civilians. But the Government, under the war-risk insurance act, has given those men assurance that they will be cared for. Their health is broken down, and they have tuberculosis, and it is the duty of the Government to treat them.

Mr. GOOD. What I wanted to say to the gentleman was this: We have eight or nine national soldiers' homes, and, according to the testimony had before the Committee on Appropriations as long as three years ago, those homes were only occupied to about one-third of their capacity, and concerning the Milwaukee home there was a request that we cease appropriations for that home.

Mr. CANTRILL. Is it your purpose to put 14,000 tubercular patients into the hospitals now occupied by old soldiers of this country?

Mr. GOOD. Is it your purpose to put 14,000 tubercular patients in with 14,000 other disabled soldiers who are not tubercular?

Mr. CANTRILL. No.

Mr. GOOD. That is the authority granted by your bill.

Mr. CANTRILL. The intention of this bill—and it will be so carried out under the Bureau of Public Health—is to take these men and segregate them in this hospital, designed for the special treatment of tuberculosis. This hospital will be just the beginning. The House understands thoroughly that these hospitals can not all be built at once, and they can not be built until the locations are found. This is an entirely new proposition. Nobody expected that 38,000 men in the cantonments of this country within 17 months would be suffering from tuberculosis, but those are the facts, and we have got to meet the fact.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Kentucky will permit me, I want to read just a line from Dr. Banks's testimony before our committee. He is the chief medical officer of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau. He states this:

> There are only two classes of hospitals to which we can send these discharged soldiers and sailors now—the hospitals of the United States Public Health Service and the hospitals of the Indian Medical Service—because the Army and Navy hospitals are not open for the treatment of civilians. They are naturally occupied in the treatment of men connected with the active service in the war.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CANTRILL. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Did the committee consider the fact that they could buy almost for a song a large hotel at Las Vegas, N. Mex., which is adapted to the treatment of tuberculosis, instead of building this sanitarium in a climate that is not adapted for it?

Mr. CANTRILL. Let me answer that question directly. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that the Public Health Service has had dozens and dozens of hotels all over the country offered to it, which the owners have tried to unload on this service for hospitals. The gentleman knows that in the modern treatment of tuberculosis there has been great progress in the treatment of the disease, and there is not a hotel now standing in the United States which is adapted to the treatment.

Mr. FOSTER. There is urgent need that this treatment be given these men at once.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Those hotels can be taken at one-fifth of the cost that you propose in that bill.

Mr. CANTRILL. They would have to be remodeled. It would cost more money to remodel them than this would involve.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman understand that these patients could be put in tents in southern California and Arizona with scarcely any expense?

Mr. CANTRILL. I will say to the gentleman that before this war is over there is no telling how many more thousands will have this trouble. These hospitals will have to be put in every State in the Union. But the gentleman must understand that you can not send a soldier from Maine to California. You might just as well bury him. They must be placed near their respective homes, where a man can go home in the first stages of the disease and spend some time with his people, and where they can come to see him; and it will be necessary to have a hospital in Maine and elsewhere in New England, in Massachusetts, and in Kentucky and in Indiana and in New Mexico and in California for each particular section. The gentleman understands that. The gentleman does not mean to say to me, seriously, that he would take a soldier from Maine, suffering from tuberculosis, and send him to California as he suggests. You might as well bury him at once.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. You might just as well send him to southern California as to Kentucky. The journey would not be appreciably harder on him. We are sending them from the East to California now to be treated for tuberculosis.

Mr. CANTRILL. The gentleman from Iowa is setting his personal opinion against the opinion of experts.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman desire them to be built in California?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not desire them to be built in Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] does not desire to withdraw this matter, I will make the point of no quorum. I asked him to yield, and if his reply had been what I thought it would be I would not have raised the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. All this conversation is out of order, and has been from the beginning.

Mr. CANTRILL. If the gentleman wants to assume the responsibility, he can take it on himself.

Mr. McKEOWN and Mr. ANDERSON demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] raises the point of no quorum.

Mr. CANTRILL. If the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to raise the point of no quorum, so that a start can not be made for the treatment of these men suffering from tuberculosis, I will withdraw the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky withdraws his committee resolution.

Mr. SIMS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. SIMS. I wish to submit a unanimous-consent request. I wish to read the request.

The SPEAKER. How long will it take to read the request?

Mr. SIMS. Only a few minutes. I can ask the Clerk to read it, or I can read it myself right here.

The SPEAKER. What is that the gentleman asks?

Mr. SIMS. I want to make the request right now, but what I want to ask for is already written out. I wanted to put it correctly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will read it.

Mr. SIMS. I ask now that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 63, entitled "Joint resolution to establish a reserve of the Public Health Service"; that there shall be not to exceed one hour of general debate. At the conclusion of such general debate the resolution shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. After the resolution shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the same shall be reported to the House with such recommendation as the committee may make, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the resolution and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think the matter ought to go through the regular channels.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to get in touch with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], but he has left the Hall of the House temporarily. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the House proceed to the consideration of bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the House at this time proceed to consider the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WRECKING VESSELS.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11408) to amend section 4516 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by sections 1 and 2 of an act entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea," approved March 4, 1915.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, as I recall this bill it merely changes the existing law so as to permit vessels of a certain character to be exempted from the effect of the seamen's law.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Wrecking vessels.

Mr. STAFFORD. And that is the only change in the law?

Mr. ALEXANDER. We have already passed a bill exempting them from the provisions of the officering act. This bill is to exempt them from the provisions of the seamen's act. The bill is reported out of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries unanimously, and there can be no objection to it, because these vessels used for wrecking purposes are not in any regular trade, and there is no reason why they should be manned as merchant vessels are. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], and we think it should become a law.

Mr. STAFFORD. What provisions of the seamen's act would they be exempted from if this bill should be passed?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Under the provisions of the seamen's act every vessel must on departing from a port have a certain complement of seamen, and is not permitted to leave the port unless it has. Then when in port under section 2 of the seamen's act there are certain regulations from which it is intended to relieve these wrecking vessels.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I have been unable to get a copy of the bill as yet. Is there a well-recognized——

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill go to the foot of the calendar. I think if the gentleman from Colorado will investigate, he will find that there is no objection from the men whom he seeks to serve.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That the bill go to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. KEATING. I will not object to that.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the bill will go to the foot of the calendar, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

ISOLATED TRACTS OF THE PUBLIC DOMAIN IN MINNESOTA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 79) for the sale of isolated tracts of the public domain in Minnesota.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of March 28, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 77), relating to the sale of isolated tracts of the public domain, be, and the same are hereby, extended and made applicable to ceded Chippewa Indian lands in the State of Minnesota: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to lands which are not subject to homestead entry: Provided further, That purchasers of land under this act must pay for the lands not less than the price fixed in the law opening the lands to homestead entry.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, until we can have an explanation from some member of the Committee on the Public Lands—I have not my copy of the report here before me—but as I recall this is a companion bill to one that was passed before we took our recess. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] was recognized by the Speaker to move to suspend the rules to pass H. R. 78. It was passed virtually under unanimous consent. I do not recall now exactly what changes will be made by this bill in the existing law, because I have not the report before me, which I read some months ago. If any Member can give me that information I hope it will be furnished.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely familiar with these lands, but the bill itself in what it proposes is very simple. Here are certain lands that were opened up to homestead entry and settlement. Homesteads have been taken; but as is always the case in the entry of lands under the homestead laws there are small tracts, areas of 40 or 80 acres, that are of so little value that the homesteader has declined to include them within his homestead application. The law provides that where such lands have been entirely surrounded and isolated for a certain period of time, neglected by the homesteader as being of little value, they can be offered for sale under the isolated-tract law, if the Secretary of the Interior thinks it wise to do so. It is entirely within his discretion. Under the isolated-tract law the land must bring at least a certain minimum price. It is a law of general application to all of the public lands, but it requires specific application to Indian lands, where the funds derived from them go to the Indians. It is a class of legislation absolutely essential everywhere on the public domain to pass title to small, isolated, surrounded tracts of comparatively little value. If the tracts were of any considerable value they would have been included in homestead settlements. Such a tract must always be less in area than 160 acres. It must have been isolated and surrounded by lands the title to which has passed from the Government. Then the Secretary has the discretion to offer them for sale if he sees fit to do so. It is a procedure necessary to the final cleaning up of odds and ends of lands in any region under settlement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Further reserving the right to object, will the gentleman inform the House what will be the method of disposing of these lands in case the law is changed as provided in this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. As I tried to explain, all this bill does is to apply the well-established law, now applicable to all public lands, to these particular lands, small tracts, most frequently of 40 acres, that the homestead settler has declined to include in his homestead entry because he considered them of little value.

The homestead settler goes in and takes up the greater portion of the land, but leaves various small tracts, from 40 to 120 acres, that no homesteader wants, because of little value. After that land has for a period of two years or more remained undisposed of after the surrounding lands have been entered, the Secretary may, in his discretion, if he believes it in the public interest, offer those lands for sale, and they must be disposed of at not less than a certain minimum price.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the bill, the Secretary of the Interior determines that these parcels of land shall be disposed of at a price fixed originally for the sale of the land.

Mr. MONDELL. At not less than that, and as much more as they will bring.

Mr. STAFFORD. They will not be sold for $1.25 an acre under the homestead law.

Mr. NORTON. On many of these lands the minimum price is $4. If this was public domain instead of Chippewa land it could be sold under section 2455.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of March 28, 1912 (37 Stat. L., 77), relating to the sale of isolated tracts of the public domain, be, and the same are hereby, extended and made applicable to ceded Chippewa Indian lands in the State of Minnesota: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to lands which are not subject to homestead entry: Provided further, That purchasers of land under this act must pay for the lands not less than the price fixed in the law opening the lands to homestead entry.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ANDERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11709) granting the consent of Congress to the village and township of Halstad, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Herberg, Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. ESCH. If the gentleman will yield, I think the gentleman from Minnesota is familiar with the facts in this case.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire the need of qualifying the point at which this bridge is to be located "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation." I understand this bill is for building a bridge across the Red River of the North. I have been across that river in different seasons, and I have never discovered one bit of water.

Mr. NORTON. I wonder if the gentleman had been drinking before he crossed.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I was in dry territory going west and coming east. I could not discover any water in the Red River of the North. This bill proposes to establish a bridge across a so-called navigable stream, and I realize that this is the customary phraseology.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman would not imply that there is no navigation at that particular point, would he?

Mr. STAFFORD. I crossed at Breckenridge, and there was no navigation there; it was shoal for a canoe.

Mr. KNUTSON. There is navigation there at Breckinridge.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose the purpose of the bill is to put a bridge there because it is the dividing line between the two States, and even if it is a dry stream—and things are dry up there in Minnesota, and also in Dakota, which has been dry for a number of years—there would have to be some bill like this passed, and I withdraw the reservation of the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the village and township of Halstad, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Herberg, Traill County, N. Dak., and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River of the North at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the section line between sections 24 and 25, township 145 N., range 49 W., fifth parallel meridian, on the boundary line between Minnesota and North Dakota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "the village and township of Halstad,"

Page 1, lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "and the township of Herberg."

Amend the title so as to read: "Granting the consent of Congress to Norman County, Minn., and Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In section 2, line 10, the word "expressly" is misspelled. Without objection it will be corrected.

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ABSENCE BY HOMESTEAD SETTLERS AND ENTRYMEN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the House joint resolution 290, extending the provisions of the act of Congress approved December 20, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize absence by homestead settlers and entrymen, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear the bill read.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions, limitations, and conditions of the act of Congress aproved December 20, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize absence by homestead settlers and entrymen, and for other purposes," are hereby extended and made applicable to homestead settlers and entrymen who have filed their applications prior to May 1, 1918.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. May I ask the gentleman if this is not broadening to a considerable extent, taking off restrictions that were contained in the act approved in December, 1917?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The act approved December 20, 1917, provided that during the pendency of the existing war any homestead settler or entryman shall be entitled to a leave of absence from his land for the purpose of performing farm labor, and such absence, while actually engaged in farm labor, shall, upon compliance of the terms of that act, be counted as constructive residence, provided that the settler should not be excused from making the required improvements and cultivation, and also provided that the act only applied to settlers who had filed their application prior to the passage of the act. The act has no application and affords no relief to any settler who has filed since December 20, 1917, and the object of my bill is simply and only to extend that beneficial provision to the settlers filing subsequent to that time. I introduced this bill, H. J. Res. 290, last May and limited its application to filings made prior to May 1 this year. But if the committee will consider the bill at this time I desire to ask unanimous consent to amend the bill from May 1 to October 1. My report on this bill is in part as follows:

The object of the original act, as well as this proposed amendment, is plain and needs no explanation to anyone who understands conditions in the public-land States. Everyone familiar with the situation in the West knows that the public lands remaining open to settlement under the homestead laws are not only barren and usually broken and very rough and arid, but are also mostly covered with rock or brush to such an extent that it requires several years of the hardest kind of work to bring the lands into a state of clearing and improvement and cultivation sufficient to produce crops or afford the settler enough produce upon which to make a living. In other words, it usually requires practically three years in order to obtain a paying crop, and during that time the settler is compelled to find employment at some other place in order to acquire the necessary means upon which to live and with which to improve his homestead, and unless his homestead rights can be protected during his necessary absence from his claim, he is liable to lose his home. Moreover, at the present time the West has been so completely drained of men having gone into the Army or Navy, or gone East in remunerative employment, that the farmers are being compelled to reduce their cultivation, owing to the impossibility of obtaining farm help. The object of the original law was to allow the new homestead settlers to safely go off and secure employment on farms and by making the necessary showing of their active work in the production of food during their absence, to be credited with that time upon their homestead entry. If the law was just and necessary for the production of food, as it was, and also necessary to the homestead settlers, who made settlement prior to December 20, 1917, it is equally just and much more necessary now for the new settlers, who have settled upon poorer lands since December 20, 1917, and when the urgency for farm labor is becoming more intense all the time.

Therefore your committee is of the opinion that the provisions of the act should be extended up to the present time so as to give the thousands of settlers who have entered land during the past six months the benefit of the provisions of that act, in order that they may during this present agricultural season be allowed to safely absent themselves from their claims and find work on farms throughout the West, and the committee feels that the bill ought to be promptly passed so that those settlers may take advantage of its provisions during this farming season.

The Interior Department and the Land Office officials, and people generally throughout the West, have said that owing to the drainage of men going to the war and to the munition plants and other works, practically all farm labor was gone, and if they could get some of the new settlers to come on to the adjoining ranches they could get some work in that way, and it would be a very great benefit to both the settlers and farmers. The Interior Department recommends the bill and the people of the West generally recommend it. It does not grant any additional or new rights. We are having a very hard and slow time in the West to settle up that country and get people to homestead. The remaining public homstead land left in the West is principally dry and barren, often rocky and broken and cut up with gulches and arroyas, often covered with oak brush, and it is the hardest kind of work on earth to improve and make a living and a home on land of that kind. It is, of course, a fine thing for Secretary Lane to talk about furnishing homes for the hundreds of thousands of returning soldiers, but unless the Government spends from $2,000 to $4,000 on each homestead mighty few soldiers will ever put in the rest of their lives trying to make a home on these lands, especially if they have to submit to all the delays, red tape, and inspections and handicaps of the present homestead settlers. Now when we get a man out on one of these homesteads, for the first three years he can not grow any sufficient crop to support himself and family on, and he is compelled to go away and get work to live on. All of these amendments and little bills that we western Members have merely tend to liberalize the conditions under which these men are trying to live and support their families and to comply with the law, and this is only one of many of them. There are a great many reasons why this bill should pass. It is only common-sense fairness to the settlers and for the general welfare of the country, and the rights of the Government are in no way jeopardized.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I have the floor, but I will be glad to yield to the gentleman in a minute. I want to ask the gentleman if this is not the measure which I and some other gentlemen opposed and upon which we had a vote when it was passed before.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not think so, though I am not sure.

Mr. WALSH. It was one of these homestead-extension acts.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I was not the author of that original law which I am now trying to amend by this bill of mine, House joint resolution 290.

Mr. MONDELL. May I say to the gentleman that this law has been of great value to the West. Those Mountain States have been denuded of their farm labor and of their men by the very large quotas furnished to the Army, and in many places a homesteader can raise very little on his own farm.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. For the first three years he can not.

Mr. MONDELL. On the other hand, some men can go to an adjoining farm—he must keep up the cultivation of this land, of course—and there he can render very valuable service in the production of those things that are needful for the maintenance of our armies. The law has worked well and the only change is to bring it more nearly up to date.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say to the gentleman that with the permission of the House I want to amend the bill to bring down the date to the 1st day of October. I expect to ask to do that. If the House will not agree to that, of course we will have to take the best we can get.

Mr. WALSH. I should have no objection to moving the date, but I recall the statement the gentleman made when this measure was up originally in 1917 and I am glad to have the gentleman's prediction at that time now verified by the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming that the original law has worked very well.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It has.

Mr. WALSH. There was great apprehension about this policy.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There has been no complaint made anywhere about that law.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand it, if this date is moved down to the 1st of October—the act only runs during the period of the war——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is my understanding.

Mr. WALSH. If we move the date down to the 1st of October it is in a sense an immaterial change?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think so; but it will afford relief to many more men and do that much more good.

Mr. WALSH. It will relieve the men who have filed since the 1st of May?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Not only is this legislation needed, but it is becoming more and more apparent that further legislation than this is necessary along these lines.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is a provision in this proposed law providing that absence from the land upon the part of the entryman while engaged in farm labor will count as constructive residence upon the homestead entry.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; if he shows that he is working on some adjoining farm.

Mr. NORTON. I construe that to mean that such absence will count as part of the time which he is required under existing law to reside upon the land in order to make homestead proof thereon.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes. It does not interfere with the requirement of cultivation.

Mr. NORTON. The working out of such a law would result in many cases like this: A young woman who might have friends interested in acquiring some of the Government land would be encouraged to make entry and settlement upon a tract of land, which she would immediately desert, as far as residence would be concerned, and would proceed to her home in an Eastern State and there engage in some occupation that she could claim was necessary agricultural work. It would likewise result in the same condition regarding similar entries and settlements by men. I want to say to the House that living, as I do, in one of the western public-land States, I am of opinion that legislation of this character, while most pleasing, while most delightful to those desiring to secure Government lands by a very easy method, does not result in making many new homes in the West.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has used—unfairly, I think he will himself admit, on reflection, because he is familiar with the situation—a possibly very extreme case.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman from North Dakota has done nothing of the kind. He has stated the character of cases that are occurring every day, and will continue to occur under legislation such as this. He has stated that in face of the fact that he knows that would be very pleasing legislation to a great many people in his own section of the country, who are ready to accept the easiest possible way of acquiring title to more of the Government domain.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows, further, that there can be no abandonment, because cultivation of the land is provided by law, and fencing and everything else is still required.

All this act does is to give the settler an opportunity to go somewhere else in the community and engage in some useful labor for a few months while he is complying with the provisions of the law on his own place as to improvement, and I want to say to the gentleman I have never been for legislation that did not bring permanent settlement; no western man can be for legislation that does not bring permanent settlement. This legislation is absolutely essential in those mountain and coast States if they are to furnish their quota of men for the Army and keep up the production of wheat, mutton, beef, and wool.

Mr. NORTON. Let me say to the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming I do not at all agree with him that it is absolutely or even quite necessary for the greater production of beef or mutton or horse meat or rye or wheat or for the maximum production of any other food product in the West. It does, however, evidently seem to be necessary, by some Members of Congress and by some men who are not Members of Congress, as an easy means of getting the public domain away from the Government and into private ownership.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. No, not just now; I will in a moment. I contend that if any legislation like this is to be passed it should provide that the absence from the land on the part of the entryman during the war while engaged in agricultural labor should not be such as to allow a contest to be entered against his land; that if he desired to engage in agricultural labor away from his land, desired to be absent from his land, he should be allowed to be so absent, but at the termination of the war he should be required to reside the full time now required by law upon his land. That kind of legislation, I suggest, will settle up and make many new and desirable farm homes in the West. This kind of legislation will take the public domain away from the Government and give it into the hands of those who will dispose of it to the first buyer that can be found. The kind of legislation proposed by this measure will not tend to make permanent farm-home owners of those who acquired title to Government land under its provisions. I believe every man who is familiar with the conditions in the West knows such to be the real facts.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. NORTON. I will be pleased to do so.

Mr. RAKER. As I understand the provisions of this bill it simply is to carry out what has been the policy of the General Land Office for the last 30 years.

Mr. NORTON. No; the gentleman does not understand correctly.

Mr. RAKER. Yes, I do. Heretofore the homesteader could always leave his homestead when it was necessary to work out for the purpose of obtaining money to improve it. Now this bill just goes one step further. He has to improve his place, to fence it, to build his home there, cultivate it, but if his neighbor needs help and this man can leave his own home for the purpose of helping him for a month or a month and a half in the dire need of help, such as is now in the Western States, as I know from personal knowledge, and he is actually engaged in farm labor, it allows his absence to act as constructive residence so there will be no contest; that when the summer and fall work is over he may return home and go on at his place, to try to benefit and improve his place. I want to say to the gentleman and the House that this permit of absence is working well. It has not had the effect in my State that the gentleman claims it may have in his, and I trust the House will permit this legislation to go through with this amendment which brings it down to date. There is no question about it, because I received, I suppose, 50 letters of men who have wanted to go away and help their friends, the farmers adjoining them, to go 5, 10, or more miles so they may help put in a crop, help harvest it, and they are needed now and they ought not to be under a penalty of contest because they are helping to produce the necessary products that are so much needed. I trust the gentleman will not object.

Mr. NORTON. Is the gentleman as much interested in farmers' homes being established in the public-land States as he is in giving the public domain to anyone who may be willing to take it?

Mr. RAKER. The men who file on these lands are the very ones who build up the country, who make permanent homes and go there and stay, to live there, and they build up the country.

I have observed for the last 40 years myself. They made that country. We do not want it so that some fellow who puts his feet on the stove during the winter can go and contest when they have worked there honestly and faithfully.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman [Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado] in charge of the bill agree to an amendment providing that absence from the land shall not be counted as residence required under existing law to complete proof on the entry?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I could not agree to that; it will kill the bill.

Mr. NORTON. The bill should be so amended.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There is no use, then, in passing the bill.

Mr. NORTON. Gentlemen in favor of legislation of this kind simply want to open the gates and not require any residence at all.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. My dear sir——

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There are no gates to be opened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. NORTON. I will reserve the right to object so that the gentleman may be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has long since expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that this bill may go to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

BILL FROM THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to make a unanimous-consent request at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to submit the request.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the reading and approval of the Journal to-morrow that it be in order for the Committee on Military Affairs to call up bills on the Calendar of the House or the Union Calendar that have been favorably reported to the House and that are unobjected to.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Let the Chair submit the question to the House. Is there objection to the request submitted by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT]?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving it in order to make a statement, I will ask if the gentleman would not further make the request so that if we do not get through with the Unanimous Consent Calendar it may continue to-morrow until completed, and that at the conclusion of the Unanimous Consent Calendar he be given this right? It is somewhat understood that this entire calendar be gone through with.

Mr. MONDELL. I trust that the modification may be had, and that immediately after the consideration of the Unanimous Consent Calendar these bills be taken up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman [Mr. DENT] consent to that?

Mr. DENT. I consent to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] asks unanimous consent that the bills to which he has referred, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, may be in order following the disposition of the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to state that the bill that was objected to and on which the point of no quorum was raised this morning is just as important a bill as there is on this calendar.

The Bureau of Public Health and the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, because I happened to have introduced the bill and because it happens to relate to my district, have called me up every day on the proposition that 14,000 tubercular soldiers and sailors have been discharged and they have no place in which to put them. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had a hearing and unanimously reported this bill. Then the Committee on Rules gave us a hearing. And then they wanted to hear the officials of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau and the Public Health Bureau, and they heard them; and after that it was a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules. One is just as important as the other. If it was important to have the point of no quorum raised on that bill this morning, it is just as important to have it on the rest of them. So far as I am concerned, I am going to object.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Would not the gentleman listen to this: That anyone can object to any one of these bills on this Unanimous Consent Calendar. There are bills on here that the House may consider and there may not be any votes against them, but nevertheless we have to submit to the fact that anyone can take them off the calendar. If we all took the same attitude that the gentleman from Kentucky takes, there would not be any legislation here unless there was a quorum present. And all ought to be treated alike.

Mr. MONDELL. I assume the gentleman from Kentucky wants to pass his bill and not simply make trouble by "throwing a monkey wrench into the machinery"?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONDELL. It is the easiest thing in the world to stop all proceedings here until we can get a quorum. I hope the gentleman's bill will be considered in due course by the House. But if the House wants to take up other matters that are not objected to first, that is not sufficient excuse for the gentleman to insist that nothing be done unless his particular matter be taken up. The consideration of his measure would come much more quickly, in my opinion, if he allows the business to go in an orderly way. These bills have been reported for several months and have not been disposed of; they are also important.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not want to be obstructive, and it is not in a spirit of resentment that I rise. This is a bill here that has the unanimous report of two committees, and it is unanimously asked for here. It is absolutely important, as gentlemen will see from the hearings, that this bill pass now in order that they may get the foundation in for this hospital before bad weather, so that they can provide some place for these sick soldiers as early as possible.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman can create a situation under which these important bills that have been reported for months can not pass, or his bill either; he can create a situation under which nothing can be done. He can easily do that, but I assume he does not desire to do so.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I understand. But the point I make is——

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman would not get any further along with his legislation by objecting to the consideration of other legislation.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The "gentleman from Kentucky" does not want to obstruct any meritorious war legislation, but will insist upon his rights in the matter. I realize my responsibility as a Member of this House, and I am going to assume it. But the point I make is that when this bill came up this morning there was a threat of no quorum. Now, if it is important to consider my bill only when there is a quorum present, it is just as important to consider the rest of them with a quorum.

Mr. GOOD. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I shall object unless there is some assurance that this bill will be considered.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We will not give any assurance of that.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The only assurance I want——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2493) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December, 29, 1916.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I objected to that other request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asked if there was objection, and gentlemen were conferring with the gentleman from Kentucky, and——

Mr. KINCHELOE. I objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky objected to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT]. The Clerk has read the title of the next bill. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill should be reported before objection is made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That any qualified homestead entryman may make entry under the homestead laws of lands so designated by the Secretary of the Interior, according to legal subdivisions, in areas not exceeding 640 acres, and in compact form so far as may be subject to the provisions of this act, and secure title thereto by compliance with the terms of the homestead laws: Provided, That a former homestead entry of land of the character described in section 2 hereof shall not be a bar to the entry of a tract within a radius of 20 miles from such former entry under the provisions of this act, which, together with the former entry, shall not exceed 640 acres, subject to the requirements of law as to residence and improvements, except that no residence shall be required on such additional entry if the entryman owns and is residing on his former entry: Provided further, That the entryman shall be required to enter all contiguous areas of the character herein described open to entry prior to the entry of any noncontiguous land: And provided further, That instead of cultivation as required by the homestead laws the entryman shall be required to make permanent improvements upon the land entered before final proof is submitted tending to increase the value of the same for stock-raising purposes of the value of not less than $1.25 per acre, and at least one-half of such improvements shall be placed upon the land within three years after the date of entry thereof."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I think this important measure should receive some explanation before the objection stage is passed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I will endeavor to explain the bill. Under the enlarged—320 acre—homestead law, of which my friend from Wyoming, Mr. MONDELL, was the original author, a homestead entryman is entitled to take an additional tract of land—160 acres—besides the 160 he already has, for the purpose of getting 320 acres of dry land, and he is not required to make two residences. If he perfects his three-years' residence on his original entry that is sufficient for the additional tract. When we passed the 640-acre stockraising homestead law we attempted but failed to do the same thing. For instance, if a man now has 320 acres of dry land and can not make a living on it, and there is some more dry land in that vicinity——

Mr. MONDELL. Within 20 miles of it——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; within 20 miles of it, he can take 320 acres more to make up a 640-acre homestead. If he can get that additional tract adjoining his original entry he does not have to live on it at all. But inadvertently we provided in that law that if he is compelled to take a piece of land that is not contiguous—not adjoining his original entry—he is compelled to make a double residence. That is he has got to move off of his original entry and go onto the new tract, notwithstanding, under this law he has already resided on his original tract and cultivated it for the full three years. He can not live on both at once. The present provision is entirely unjust, impractical, and wrong, and was never intended to operate or be construed the way it is.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall, when the enlarged-homestead act was under consideration that a discussion arose on the floor as to the limit of distance where a homesteader would be privileged to take the additional land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the House provided 10 miles.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; I believe it was 10 miles at that time.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe it was subsequently changed to 20.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The reason of that change was because the homestead settlers could not get any land within 10 miles.

Mr. STAFFORD. The purpose of this bill is not to increase the privileges of that law, so far as additional land is concerned. It is merely, in case the tracts are not contiguous, to grant the right to locate upon them but not to require residence.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is correct. This bill will relieve the entrymen from being required to leave their original homestead entry where they must be living at the time and move onto the new additional tract, which has no improvement on it. Of course that would be a wholly useless and foolish thing to do.

Mr. MONDELL. I call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin to the fact that the only change in the present law is in the words on lines 10, 11, and 12, as follows:

Except that no residence shall be required on such additional entry if the entryman owns and is residing on his former entry.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, if the land were contiguous, it would be construed that he was residing on the new additional land by reason of its being contiguous. But where it is not contiguous there is that construction that requires additional residence whereby he would have to give up his former residence.

Mr. MONDELL. My opinion is that the House would never have passed the law with this addition in it except for the fact that when the law was originally introduced there was no limit of distance to the original entry, and it was the opinion, and properly, that if a man could take an addition in another State he ought to live on it. But when the addition was made of 20 miles the logical thing to do was to make it the same as was done in the case of the 320-acre law. That is what is now proposed. It will relieve a lot of folks who, if this is not passed, will have to remove to a distance of from 2 to 10 miles.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. And they will have to leave their present land and homes to go on the new piece of unimproved ground.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of the right to object.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this proposed amendment gives the right to a homestead entryman residing in any section of the country where the land is classified as "grazing land" to acquire an amount of the public domain which, added to the amount of land included in his original entry, will not exceed 640 acres, if that land is within 20 miles of his original entry.

Mr. MONDELL. And is of the character of land coming under the law——

Mr. NORTON. Yes; and is of the character of the land contemplated by the law. That is land of a character more suitable for grazing than for agricultural purposes.

Mr. MONDELL. And if his original homestead is of the same character.

Mr. NORTON. If an entryman has taken up a homestead in one of the public-land States and cultivated it and made proof on it and there is not any unappropriated Government land within 20 miles of his original entry of this character, he is deprived of the privilege to be given by this bill.

I want to say to the committee that my experience has been that this legislation, permitting homestead entrymen to take land noncontiguous to their original entries, has been one of the finest pieces of legislation passed by any Congress in many years privileging men in the West to grab up the public domain by an easy method.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman understands that this bill gives no such authority, and does not change the law with respect to making entries.

Mr. NORTON. This bill enlarges an existing unwise privilege. It is aimed by a great many of those outside of Congress who favor this amendment to give to men who now have land in the public-land States of the West, particularly in the semiarid regions, from 160 to 480 acres of additional land for practically the mere expense of putting a fence around the land. It provides to give this land to land speculators and to men who have been living out in the vicinity of this unappropriated Government land and who have for years been making a good living on their original homesteads. This is what similar legislation has done in many instances in my own State and in my particular congressional district. This is what similar legislation has caused to take place in Montana. This is what this amendment will do and encourage as long as the unappropriated public domain lasts in the semiarid sections of the country.

I wish to merely state these facts, so that the House with notice and knowledge may take such action as to it may seem proper.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. I shall be pleased to yield to the genial gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Without going into the question of the propriety of these noncontiguous entries—and I can not agree with my friend in his view with regard to them—this bill does not enlarge that privilege. Now, certainly the gentleman does not want to put himself in the position of denying to the men who have taken those noncontiguous entries the right to remain on their original entries. He does not want to compel them to move from their present homes onto the new land, generally of very little value, which they have taken up. All that this amendment does is to give them the same right that the settlers in his State have had under the 320-acre homestead law, to have their residence on their original entry counted as residence on the additional land. They must improve the additional land.

Mr. NORTON. It gives one the right now who has taken 480 acres of grazing land and is residing upon that tract to take 160 acres additional 20 miles away from his original entry and acquire title to it without any residence on it.

Mr. MONDELL. Within 20 miles.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman think that is anything more or less than merely giving one the privilege of grabbing 160 acres more of the public lands without doing anything except putting a fence around it?

Mr. MONDELL. In thousands of cases that has been the salvation of men who had to have a little pasture land and who could go into the hill country some distance away from their homesteads and get a small amount of pasture land. That has been the way the law has worked, and it has been of great value.

Mr. NORTON. I agree that if in this present stage of the Nation's population and development a man can get 160 acres of good grazing land for $1.25 an acre, or for putting a fence around it, it is a mighty good thing for him.

Mr. MONDELL. It is a good thing for the country.

Mr. GANDY. Will my friend yield a moment?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. GANDY. The theory of the 640-acre act is that a man needs 640 acres of that kind of land—that he is entitled to 640 acres.

Mr. NORTON. To make a living upon. The theory is all right. But the theory is widely departed from in giving one the privilege of taking up 640 acres of noncontiguous land within a radius of 20 miles from the original entry.

Mr. GANDY. And the same thing was true of the half-section act. It is on the assumption that a man needs 320 acres of that kind of land. Now, if a man has a quarter or half section, or in the case which the gentleman mentions, 480 acres of land of the kind and character contemplated by the section act, he is entitled to fill up the amount of 640 acres, equal in area to a section, either contiguous or somewhere else.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman seriously contend that anywhere in the West, if a man can not make a living on a 480-acre tract, it is necessary in order that he be able to make a living on his original homestead entry that he have the right to take up another 160 acres anywhere within 20 miles of his original entry?

Mr. GANDY. Will my friend yield for a moment?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. GANDY. The theory of the 640-acre act is that a man needs 640 acres of that kind of land—that he is entitled to 640 acres.

Mr. NORTON. To make a living upon. The theory is all right. But the theory is widely departed from in giving one the privilege of taking up 640 acres of noncontiguous land within a radius of 20 miles from the original entry.

Mr. GANDY. And the same thing was true of the half-section act. It is on the assumption that a man needs 320 acres of that kind of land. Now, if a man has a quarter or half section, or in the case which the gentleman mentions, 480 acres of land of the kind and character contemplated by the section act, he is entitled to the difference between that amount and 640 acres, either contiguous or somewhere else.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman seriously contend that anywhere in the West, if a man can not make a living on a 480-acre tract, it is necessary in order that he be able to make a living on his original homestead entry that he have the right to take up another 160 acres anywhere within 20 miles of his original entry?

Mr. GANDY. I have for years been a believer in and ardent advocate of such a liberalization of the homestead laws and regulations as will recognize existing conditions in the public-land States of the West. The objection of the gentleman from North Dakota seems to be directed not to the residence feature, which is all there is at stake in this amendment, but to the advisability of permitting a noncontiguous additional homestead. This subject is not a new one for me, for in the Sixty-fourth Congress the section homestead bill came from the Public Lands Committee without any provision for a noncontiguous additional homestead, and on the floor of this House I secured an amendment permitting such an entry. It was my belief then, Mr. Speaker, and it is my belief now, that persons who have made homestead entries for land of the kind proposed to be disposed of under the section act are entitled to such an amount of similar land as, when added to the land embraced in their former entries, will not exceed 640 acres whether the additional adjoins the original or not. We need not enter into the discussion of that proposition to-day for the law already provides for noncontiguous additional entries under the half-section act and under the section act. The only change that is sought by this bill is to make the residence provisions the same in the section act that they are in the half-section act, for under the half-section act where the noncontiguous additional is not to exceed 20 miles from the original and the claimant continues to reside upon the land embraced in his original entry residence is not required on the additional. If this bill is passed—and I hope, Mr. Speaker, it will be passed—several hundred homesteaders in the district which I have the honor to represent in this House, and I feel certain that many thousand in the public-land States of the West will not be required to move from the homes they have established on their original homesteads in order to comply with the provisions of the homestead law with relation to their noncontiguous additional entries.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that there is now a necessity for the passage of any such legislation of this kind, and I take occasion to say again, as I have heretofore said in this House, that if years ago a far-sighted policy of section homesteads had been inaugurated the high prairies of the West would to-day be dotted with prosperous homes where in many cases deserted homestead shacks tell the story of the inability of homesteaders to make good on quarter-section or half-section entries. We have legislated piecemeal and must go on that way. Undoubtedly there are other amendments to the section bill that it will be necessary to pass, for I recall now that there is no provision of law whereby one who has a noncontiguous additional entry under the half-section act can fill his section adjoining it. I have introduced a bill to remedy that feature and later on I hope to be able to secure consideration for it. I want to renew my statement, Mr. Speaker, that there is nothing more in this bill than the equalization of the residence provisions of the half-section law and the section law.

Mr. NORTON. The one thing more than any other which would at this time impel me not to object to the consideration of this bill is the earnestness and affability of my friend from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] whom I know is greatly interested in this proposed legislation. He has been such an untiring worker during the time he has been in Congress for those things which he believes his constituents should have that on his account I do not feel justified in making objection to the consideration of the bill.

I have called attention to what the bill if enacted into law will effect. It is for a majority of those present to determine whether it should have the approval of the House.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman from North Dakota yield?

Mr. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SISSON. If a man can not make a living on 480 acres of land, my friend certainly would not prevent him from taking 160 acres more of that land off the hands of the Federal Government. It reminds me of the man who had two eighths of land, and he wanted to get rid of both of them. Finally he got a customer for one of the eighths, and he went over to the courthouse to have the deed recorded, and when he left the courthouse he said with great glee, "That scoundrel couldn't read or write, and I shoved the other eighth off on him. I got rid of both the eighths at the same time." [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTON. My very good friend from Mississippi will find that in the public land States in the West there are plenty of people who are most willing to take all the public land suitable for grazing that Congress will permit them to get hold of by easy methods and with small expense.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

"THE OLD CUSTOMHOUSE" AT KENNEBUNKPORT, ME.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4283) authorizing the donation of the land and building at Kennebunkport, Me., known as "The old customhouse," to the town of Kennebunkport, Me.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I ask that the bill be passed informally.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida that the bill be passed informally?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not know what the gentleman means by that request.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want the bill to be passed over, that is all.

Mr. FOSTER. To go to the foot of the calendar?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. To go to the foot of the calendar. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. GOODALL] who is the author of this bill is not here.

Mr. STAFFORD. I certainly would not take advantage of the author of the bill. I have no objection to the bill being passed over, to take its place at the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill being passed over to take its place at the foot of the calendar?

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR MONTANA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 70, an act providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH and Mr. MOORES of Indiana objected.

EXTENDING TIME FOR APPLICATIONS IN THE UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8763) to amend the act entitled "An act to extend temporarily the time for filing applications and fees and taking action in the United States Patent Office in favor of nations granting reciprocal rights to United States citizens," approved August 17, 1916.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

PAYMENT OF INDIAN RESERVATION LAND, MONTANA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 935) for the relief of settlers on certain railroad lands in Montana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object. At the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS] I will reserve the objection.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, this bill appeals to me as a meritorious one and worthy of consideration by the House. The situation is this: The Northern Pacific Railroad many years ago was granted land by the Government, and a part of these lands was within the Indian reservation.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I ask unanimous consent that the reservation may be pending and that the bill may be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the adjustment of the grants to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., if any of the lands within the indemnity limits of said grants through that portion of the former reservation for the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfoot, and River Crow Indians lying south of the Missouri River in the State of Montana be found in possession of an actual bona fide qualified settler under the homestead laws of the United States who has made substantial improvements thereon and such land has been adjudged by the Secretary of the Interior to inure to the Northern Pacific Railway Co. under the grants made to its predecessor in interest, the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., the Northern Pacific Railway Co. upon request of the Secretary of the Interior may file a relinquishment of said lands in favor of the settler and shall then be entitled to select an equal quantity of other lands in lieu thereof from any of the surveyed public lands within the State of Montana, not mineral and not otherwise appropriated at the date of selection, to which it shall receive title the same as though originally granted: Provided, however, That lands withdrawn or classified as coal lands may be selected by said company, and as to such lands it shall receive a restricted patent as provided by the act of June 22, 1910.

Mr. EVANS. As I was suggesting, these lands fell within the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. They were at that time in Indian reservations. It was not known that they were within the grant of land to the company, and individual settlers to the number of 30 or 40 went on the lands and made improvements. Subsequently, the department determined that these lands were within the grant and that the company was entitled to them. The railroad company has agreed to give up the lands to the settlers, provided the Government will allow them an equal amount of land somewhere else.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would direct the gentleman's attention to the estimate placed upon it by the Secretary of the Interior in his letter directed to Senator MEYER, December 15, 1917, in which he says:

I am still of the opinion, as expressed in my report of February 21, 1917, that the settlers proposed to be benefited by this bill do not have such claims as would warrant my recommendation of the approval thereof.

Mr. EVANS. Yes, he says that; but he says something further.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I will read further, because I wish the committee to have all the information:

In view of the fact, however, that the investigations made by the railway company show that they have placed valuable improvements on the land, that they would suffer considerable loss if they were now required to remove therefrom, and that the company is willing to relinquish for their benefit, I do not desire any further to oppose the passage of the proposed legislation. The selections made by the company in lieu of the lands relinquished should be restricted to surveyed lands, and the bill should therefore be amended by adding the word "surveyed" on line 4, page 2, before the words "public lands," so that it would read, "any of the surveyed public lands within the State of Montana, not mineral," etc.

In the first place, the settlers have no claim; they are squatters on railroad land. Now, the railroad for some reason or other would like to have an exchange of land, not of substantially equal value—there is no such limitation as is usually carried in bills of this kind, but that they may have any available land in exchange without any limitation whatever.

There have been too many abuses arising out of the exchange of land by railroads for other public lands to allow such a bill as this to go through under unanimous consent without giving an opportunity for careful consideration.

Mr. EVANS. I beg to say to the gentleman that it is not the railroad company that is asking for this bill, but 30 or 40 settlers, who have cabins, fences, and their families upon this land, who have made the improvements. The Department of the Interior has determined that the lands are within the grant to the railroad company, and the railroad company says that we will get out of the way if you will give us an equal amount of land.

Mr. STAFFORD. An equal amount of land without regard to the value of it.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the gentleman object to putting in an amendment saying that it should be land of equal value or like value?

Mr. EVANS. No; I would not object to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, it is too important a bill to be considered by unanimous consent.

WATER SUPPLY, OLATHE, COLO.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on page 36 of this calendar, at the foot of the page, is a bill put on the Private Calendar. It is a bill to grant certain public lands to the town of Olathe, Colo., for the protection of its water supply. It is H. R. 5989, and is 147 on the Private Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that it be transferred to the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 5989, on the Private Calendar, be transferred to the Union Calendar.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman's only desire is to have it transferred to the Union Calendar?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is all.

Mr. WALSH. And not put on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. I will do that some other time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STUART, LEWIS, GORDON & RUTHERFORD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 906) making an appropriation to Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford in payment of legal services rendered by them to the Creek Nation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly; I reserve my objection to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, this bill authorizes the payment to Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford of the sum of $7,000 out of the Creek tribal funds in settlement of a claim for legal services rendered by this firm on account of a contract entered into by the Creek Nation on January 7, 1898. At that time the Creek Nation was one of the Five Civilized Tribes and prior to that time no contract that either of the Five Civilized Tribes ever made for legal services was ever approved by the Secretary of the Interior or by the President. They not only paid out thousands, but hundreds of thousands—yes, they paid out millions of dollars, and there never was an appropriation, so far as I know, for the Cherokee Nation, of which I am a member, which prior to that time was ever approved. Thousands and thousands of dollars were paid out on appropriations made by the Cherokee tribal authorities, just like they would be if made by the Massachusetts Legislature, or the Legislature of Minnesota or California. This firm was contracted with under a legal contract, and it was just at the time when the affairs of the tribe were being wound up. This firm of attorneys, one of the most eminent in Oklahoma, necessarily had to resist and fight the Interior Department in their construction of the laws which were enacted by Congress and test the constitutionality of many of them in the courts.

The Creek tribal legislature met and passed this appropriation to pay this claim. The principal chief signed it. It was transmitted by the chief inspector and it was recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It got to the desk of the Secretary of the Interior on the very last day, and, without any consideration on his part, he recommended its disapproval. I know that this is a meritorious claim; I know it ought to be paid; I know that these services were rendered. This has been brought up in the House two or three times. The House passed it two years ago along about the last of the session. It went over to the Senate, and there was not time for its consideration there; but here was a firm of attorneys that was as good as any in the United States, and the contract was entered into with them under an act of the Creek Tribal Council, and they had a legal right to enter into that contract, and they were legally employed. They did perform the services. While the services were being performed, namely, between January 7, 1898, and a later date, when the Creek Council passed a law authorizing the employment, Congress on June 28, 1898, passed the Curtis bill, which contains a provision that as to subsequent appropriations they must be approved by the President. They entered into the contract, and they performed the services under an act passed by the Creek Tribal Council, passed before June 28, 1898. The Creek council later on made an appropriation to carry out its contract to pay for the services rendered, but it was after June 28, 1898; and I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is a claim which has dragged along here for a number of years, but it is a meritorious one. Nobody doubts that the services were rendered, and that they ought to be paid for.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman entirely. I think the bill ought to be paid. But I think the bill ought to be on the Private Calendar and taken up and disposed of with Private Calendar bills. It does not belong on the calendar on which it has been placed. But it is evident that it will be objected to now, and I suggest to my good friend that he has made an able defense of his measure and that we ought to go on with the other bills.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to say to the gentleman that we ought to go on with the bills of the gentleman from Oklahoma just as well as we ought to go on with the bills of the gentleman from Wyoming. We have taken up a good deal of time so far with bills from the Western States.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman will yield right there. The gentleman from Wyoming has not any bill on this calendar and there is no bill in which the gentleman is especially and particularly interested. I am interested in every bill on the calendar, the bill of the gentleman from Oklahoma, as well as the bill of everyone else, but it is very evident that——

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not know that it is so evident. I am in hopes that I can get the gentleman to withdraw his objection, now that I have made the explanation. This is a meritorious bill, and I want to say one thing further, that the Creek tribal affairs are about to be wound up. They have been in the course of being wound up for the last 15 or 20 years, and it is, therefore, important that if we are ever going to pay these claims they ought to be paid now. That is one reason for the urgency of the consideration of the bill at the present time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, still further reserving the right to object, I am sure that if it were not for other reasons upon which I base my opposition to the bill the very clear and able statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma would lead me to withdraw the objections along the lines he has so clearly set forth, but I notice that this measure has been pending for some years here, and that a considerable lapse of time intervened between the date of the rendition of the services and the attempt to procure compensation by this method, and that the Secretary of the Interior seems to be of the opinion that the claim is without merit.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. We were political orphans in the Indian Territory for a number of years, and we did not get Statehood until 1907.

Mr. WALSH. I will state that they are not political orphans there to-day.

Mr. HASTINGS. I was answering the query of the gentleman as to why this matter had not been pressed. Since I have been in Congress I introduced a bill, and it was referred to the committee, and it was favorably reported, and we passed it here two years ago.

Mr. WALSH. I think I recall it. If I am not mistaken, at that time it was on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HASTINGS. No; on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, because Mr. MANN, the minority leader, and I had a considerable discussion and he yielded, and it was finally passed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar in the last four or five days of the session.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman may be correct. I was under the impression it was on the private calendar, and passed on one of the days when we took up the private calendar after considerable discussion between the gentleman and the minority leader, but I am not inclined to withdraw my objections to the measure and I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma I think, as I said before, he has led me to some doubt——

Mr. HASTINGS. Let me make one further observation. I stated a while ago the Secretary of the Interior stated this came to his desk the very last day. If you will look on page 6 of the report you will find in the report the Secretary of the Interior said:

> This act has only come to my office to-day.

It had to be reported to the President that day. Then look at the top of page 6 in the report of the Commissioner of Indians Affairs, who then gave consideration of this matter, and he says:

> It may be proper, however, to add that the said beneficiaries have rendered services to the Creek Nation, and the Creek people appear to be anxious to pay for such services and that, therefore, the act should, if no objection thereto appears, receive the approval of the President.

That is the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs transmitting the act of the Creek Tribal Council in making this appropriation. Now the Commissioner of Indian Affairs gave careful consideration, but the Secretary of the Interior, because he was antagonized by these attorneys, because it was their duty to represent the Creek Tribe, it was their duty to test the constitutionality of the various acts of Congress passed at that time—because of that fact, I say the Secretary of the Interior, without any consideration when it reached his office the last day, without giving any reason at all, recommended that it be disapproved. I submit this has been here for 10 or 15 years. These attorneys have been without their money. It does not carry interest. It simply pays the amount which was due them 10 or 15 years ago.

Mr. WALSH. Well, in view of the attitude of Secretary Lane, I think I shall object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the homestead bill passed today and other subjects in connection with my service in Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 9, SANDERS COUNTY, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 933) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands to school district No. 9, of Sanders County, Mont.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Montana if he is familiar with the facts in this case other than those set forth in the report?

Mr. EVANS. Yes, to a degree. I think I can explain it to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. This is intended to issue patent to some land in lieu of land set apart under the statutes for educational purposes. Is that the purpose?

Mr. EVANS. No; if the gentleman will permit. This land was originally in an Indian reservation and acts opening the Indian reservation provided that certain town sites, 40 acres, should be set apart, and that in each of those town sites to be reserved should be set apart——

Mr. WALSH. I recall; I had confused it with another bill. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, upon proper application, to issue patent to school district No. 9, of Sanders County, Mont., for block 8, designated as "Public reserve," upon the approved plat of the town site of Dixon, Mont.: Provided, That title to the land so granted shall revert to the United States if the said school district attempts to alienate or use the land for other than school purposes.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered as in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY, DISTRICT OF RHODE ISLAND.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 3563) to increase the salary of the United States district attorney for the district of Rhode Island.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a conflict between the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice. Some time since the Speaker ruled, as I understood, that these bills belong to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice under the rules of the House. There was a bill up here a couple of weeks ago from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice. I think some member of the Committee on the Judiciary made the suggestion, and for that reason it went off, and I believe, under the circumstances, that this legislation belongs to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice clearly and specifically under the rule, and ought to go to that committee and come from that committee.

Mr. FOSTER. This has already come from one committee. What would the gentleman do about it?

Mr. RAKER. It should come from the committee to which it belongs.

Mr. FOSTER. But this has been done, and it appears here before the House.

Mr. RAKER. That does not make any difference.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the difference?

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. WALSH. I do not speak representing the Committee on the Judiciary, but I want to ask the gentleman if he is prompted in his objection by the desire to be consistent, inasmuch as the Committee on the Judiciary reported out the woman-suffrage resolution, but, notwithstanding that, the gentleman insisted that that resolution should come from his committee.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the difference?

Mr. RAKER. It has no relation——

Mr. WALSH. Except perhaps the gentleman would like to be consistent.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why not consider the measure upon its merits?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California reserves the right to object.

Mr. MONDELL. The House is not particularly interested in the controversy between these two committees. The question, it seems to me, is should the bill pass—is it sound legislation?

Mr. RAKER. I did not quite get the gentleman's question.

Mr. MONDELL. I suggested that the House was not especially interested in the controversy between the two committees. The important question is whether or no the legislation is proper, wise, equitable, just, and reasonable.

Mr. RAKER. Well, with the same propriety you might say that all of this legislation might go to one committee—to the Committee on Appropriations, or it might go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. For a question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I direct the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this bill was reported on June 6. It has been upon the calendar during all that time, and the Committee on Expenditures has not raised the question of jurisdiction. Does the gentleman desire to take the responsibility of raising the question of jurisdiction now?

Mr. RAKER. Of course, as to the responsibility of objection, I do not assume any responsibility.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is within the right of the gentleman to object, but does the gentleman mean to object on the question of jurisdiction when neither committee has raised that question?

Mr. RAKER. What I mean by that is this: I have heard that word used this morning quite loosely, and it may be a good thing for me to refer to it at this time under this objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. I hope——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming has called for the regular order.

Mr. RAKER. If there is any objection it is that the gentleman was in his seat, and he has no right to recognition until he rises and respectfully addresses the Chair. My only purpose is to obtain a proper understanding as to the course these bills should take.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. FOSTER. Would not the gentleman leave this here until the gentleman——

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to the bill going over and taking its place at the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill going over and taking its place at the foot of the calendar? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none.

PROOF OF DEATH OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3475) to prescribe to the requisite form of proof of death under policies or contracts of insurance covering the lives of persons in or serving with or attached to the military forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think this is too important a bill to be considered on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. IGOE. I hope the gentleman will not object to it. The bill is important, and it is a measure that ought to be passed in order to be of service. I think the sooner it is passed the better.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will agree that it establishes a most important question of policy for the Government to virtually guarantee the payment of premiums of insurance companies in cases of loss?

Mr. IGOE. It does not guarantee the premiums, but simply——

Mr. STAFFORD. The effect will be to guarantee the payment in case the records are at fault. I think it is too important to be on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and therefore I object.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman withhold it?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, the situation is this: Hundreds of thousands of young men in the Army of the United States, serving abroad, have insurance in insurance societies or belong to fraternal societies which provide insurance as a feature of their organization. The names of these young men are being reported daily in the casualty lists. The officials of these societies desire to pay to the beneficiaries the money provided in the policies at the earliest possible moment, but under the laws of the several States in which they operate and under their own laws physical proof of death is required; certain affidavits are required; certain persons are required to see the body of the deceased and to be satisfied of their own personal knowledge of the identity of deceased. However, I think under the present emergency the State officials will be tolerant, and the officials of the societies will undertake payment if the Government of the United States is authorized to furnish to them a certificate in which statement is provided by the only possible witnesses of the fact of death that these men died on the battle fields of Europe; that they know the men are dead to the best of their knowledge and belief after careful inquiry. The officials who pay these claims are responsible under their bonds, which are heavy, for the faithful performance of their duties, including the nonpayment of moneys, unless proof of death is properly presented to them. They can not make these payments legally otherwise. They are subject to prosecution and to action by their own societies unless they do have some substantive statement of the fact of death. This bill provides that the proper officers of the War Department may furnish to these societies, paying out these hundreds of thousands of dollars on tens of thousands of claims, a statement of the facts as they know them. Upon this statement of facts in this great emergency, where men on the battle fields of Europe are being blown to atoms or buried in trenches, and where the fact of their death in a great number of cases can never be physically established, they are willing to undertake the payments in order to relieve women and children from the suffering that will necessarily come to them by the death of their father, husband, or son. I hope the gentleman, in view of the emergency of the measure and of the fact that thousands have been killed and thousands more will be, will withdraw his objection and let the bill come up for consideration and such amendment as in his judgment it may be proper to make that immediate and necessary relief may be afforded.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman's own statement shows the importance of the measure.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is an important measure. It is an urgent measure.

Mr. STAFFORD. And it should not be considered on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. The gentleman has not in any wise brought forth the position of the National Government, where they will be called upon to pay back in case there has been an erroneous presentation of the proof. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the bill is entirely too important to be considered by unanimous consent, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

JAIL AT GUTHRIE, OKLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12438) authorizing the conveyance of the United States jail and land on which the same is located at Guthrie, Okla., to Logan County, Okla.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey, by proper quit-claim deed, to the county of Logan, in the State of Oklahoma, the United States jail at Guthrie, Okla., and all the lands set apart therewith.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HASTINGS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next one.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS AT WAUSAU, WIS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10432) to abolish the office of receiver of public moneys at Wausau, Wis., and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I do not intend to object—I would like to inquire of some member of the Committee on the Public Lands why the office of register of public lands at Wausau, Wis., should not be abolished as well?

Here we are merely abolishing the office of receiver. It is an unusual occurrence in the history of legislation in the House to pass any act abolishing an office after it is once established. From the reading of the report I am led to believe that the office should be abolished entirely. I read from the report:

From the above it will be seen that under any circumstances the office should be closed within the next two or three years, and if the offices of register and receiver are not consolidated so as to make a living salary for one officer in charge the office had best be closed at once and its remaining business transferred to the General Land Office by operation of existing law.

Now, I am in sympathy with the recommendation of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior. There is very little public land in the State of Wisconsin. There is very little work for this receiver. It is purposed to abolish the office of receiver and to continue the office of register. Why not abolish the office entirely? In Wisconsin we are in favor of reform. The State of Wisconsin is known for the abolishment of useless offices.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. You do not want to throw the records out in the street.

Mr. STAFFORD. It could easily be transferred to the General Land Office here. I believe there is no use in the continuance of that office at Wausau.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. My understanding is that Mr. LENROOT and the gentlemen who represented this matter felt that it would be time enough to abolish the register a year or so from now. He could do all the work, and we could take two bites at this cherry.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw my reservation of the right to object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the maintenance of the office with one official costs only $500 a year, unless the fees of the office make the emoluments larger.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can ascertain, if he examines the report, that this official receives more than $1,000. According to the report, during the nine months ended March 31, 1918, the receipts were $1,657.60.

Mr. MONDELL. That was because there was business which brought in those receipts. But the maintenance of the office costs only $500 a year, that is, only $500 as a guaranty, and you can not abolish this office without legislation transferring the jurisdiction. This is the last land office remaining in Wisconsin, is it not?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is the only office.

Mr. MONDELL. And the ordinary procedure is to transfer the jurisdiction from that last official to the Surveyor General, and then, when the office is abolished, to transfer the whole thing to the department. But that requires additional legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the office of receiver of public moneys at Wausau, Wis., shall 10 days from and after the passage and approval of this act, be abolished and cease to exist; and that all the powers, duties, obligations, and penalties at that time lawfully imposed upon such receiver and upon the register of the land office at Wausau, Wis., shall, from and after that date, be exercised by and imposed upon such register; and such register shall, in addition to the duties thus imposed, have charge of and attend to the sale of public lands within the State of Wisconsin, as provided by law and official regulation, and shall be accountable under his official bond for the proceeds of such sales and for all fees, commissions, and other moneys received by him under any provision of law or official regulation: Provided, That all the fees and commissions now allowed by law to both such register and such receiver shall, 10 days after the passage and approval of this act, be paid to and accounted for by such register in the same manner and in like amounts in which they are now required to be paid to and accounted for by such receiver, but the salary, fees, and commissions of such register shall not exceed $3,000 per annum.

SEC. 2. That all official and public books, papers, plats, records, and property of every description found and remaining in the said land office 10 days from and after the approval of this act shall be delivered to the register of the said office, who shall become the custodian of the same, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

COOS BAY WAGON-ROAD GRANT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8625) to accept from the Southern Oregon Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Oregon, a reconveyance of the lands granted to the State of Oregon by the act approved March 3, 1869, entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, in said State," commonly known as the Coos Bay Wagon-Road grant, to provide for the disposition of said lands, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold it.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will not object to this measure. This measure promises the end of long litigation between the Government and this wagon-road company. It has been litigated for a number of years, and the Government and the wagon-road company have at last come to an agreement of settlement, which is incorporated into this law.

The Attorney General's office is very anxious to have this litigation out of the way. I have had several visits from representatives of the Attorney General's office urging that this matter be disposed of, and I have also been called up over the telephone a number of times. It is not only desirable from the standpoint of the Government, but it is desirable also from the standpoint of the State that this matter be disposed of.

Taxes have not been collected on this land for eight or nine years. The State should not be denied its taxes any longer. This settlement offers something like $1,500,000 or $2,500,000 of absolute "velvet" to the Government. The Government at one time absolutely disposed of this land, parted with its title to it. By virtue of this act this land, which is worth all the way from $2,000,000 to $4,000,000, will be returned. The lowest estimate of the value of the land was $2,000,000, and the highest estimate, a very conservative one, put upon the land by the county judge in one of the counties, placed the value at $4,000,000. The Government will have to advance only some $600,000 to secure the absolute title to this land. In addition to that, whatever payment the Government advances will be reimbursed out of the proceeds of the sale of the land. It will net the Government from $1,500,000 to $2,500,000. If this matter is allowed to run for another six months or a year many thousand dollars' worth of taxes will accrue that will have to be paid sooner or later.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman's very clear statement of the provisions of the bill makes it very evident that it is not the sort of legislation that can properly be considered by unanimous consent. I think the gentleman will agree with me on that in view of our usual practice. This bill is sufficiently important to justify the Committee on Rules bringing in a rule for its consideration.

Mr. SINNOTT. It is important legislation; but inasmuch as, in 1916, we thrashed out a similar proposition, it seems to me that the House might well take it up at this time. I believe most of the Members are very familiar with the subject matter of this legislation. It is very similar to the disposition of the Oregon & California Railroad grant which we had up in 1916.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is entirely too important a measure to be considered this afternoon, if we are to consider the rest of the calendar, and I therefore object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

CERTAIN CLAIMS OF THE CHEROKEE NATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 357) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine certain claims of the Cherokee Nation against the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have discussed this bill with the gentleman from Wisconsin a number of times. It only seeks to refer to the Court of Claims certain claims of the Cherokee Tribe of Indians. The affairs of this tribe have been completely wound up. The rolls have been made, the lands have all been allotted, every foot of them. All of their moneys have been paid out per capita, and provision has been made for the disposition of whatever little fragments of money they may yet have.

The Cherokees had a claim against the Government. After about 75 years it was referred to a court. Judgment was rendered by the Court of Claims. The case went to the Supreme Court and that judgment was there affirmed. The representatives of the Cherokee Tribe claimed that the interest was not paid in accordance with that judgment as to four items. All they ask now is to go into your own court to determine whether or not that is true. With reference to the two proposed amendments let me say that I am perfectly willing to accept the last amendment, providing that such fees shall be paid to the attorneys as the court shall allow.

As to the first amendment, services have been performed in this case for 25 or 30 years. The chief of the Cherokee Tribe is now dead. A contract was made before his death to prosecute this claim. No other contracts can be made, because there are no officers of the Cherokee Tribe now remaining. What difference does it make to the gentleman from Wisconsin who prosecutes the claim, provided the question as to the fee is fixed by the court?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. HASTINGS. With pleasure.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been some months since I have examined this bill and the report. There was a companion bill seeking some legislation as to some other items that had previously been adjudicated by the Court of Claims. At that time the matter was fresh in my mind. I remember that the bill as reported from the committee did not meet with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. For that reason I objected, thinking that these amendments recommended by the Secretary of the Interior would be adopted. I do not recall whether this is the bill that refers again to the Court of Claims the adjudication of the interest charged on the big amount of item 2.

Mr. HASTINGS. It refers them all to the court, but it does not make any direct appropriation. It refers to your own court the question whether or not the interest was properly calculated by your own officers.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall it, there was one of these bills to which no objection could be made, because the Secretary of the Interior admitted personally that an erroneous computation had been made, but he did object to having the attorney paid as provided in the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. This is not that bill. That bill went off the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is the bill which involves the readjudication of the question of interest on that large sum in item 2?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. When I read the bill and report a month or two ago I had strong opposition to it.

Mr. HASTINGS. It only refers the matter to the Court of Claims.

Mr. STAFFORD. You had an examination once and the Court of Claims adjudicated it, and the Department of the Interior does not make any strong recommendation now.

Mr. HASTINGS. It recommends this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. In a minor way.

Mr. HASTINGS. With the two amendments, one is to employ the attorney under contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and the other is for the court to fix the fee. We are willing to accept the amendment as to the fixing of the fee.

Mr. STAFFORD. From reading the report I recall that this bill has been rereferred to the Court of Claims. I think the gentleman had better ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. HASTINGS. We have had it up a number of times, and I brought it to the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin a number of times.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not this bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; this bill, and it only refers the claim to the Court of Claims. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RECONVEYANCE OF LANDS FROM SOUTHERN OREGON CO.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, before the next bill is called I want to ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 8625, and No. 176 on the House Calendar, be transferred to the Union Calendar, where it belongs, so that it will be on the proper calendar next time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 8625 be transferred to the Union Calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REGULATING THE PERSONNEL OF THE COAST GUARD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 6979, a bill to regulate the personnel of the Coast Guard.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I understood this bill was virtually covered in the naval appropriation act of this year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will say that some very material matter in this bill is covered by the legislation referred to by the gentleman. It is for that reason, desiring to make a further examination of it, that I ask that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS PEARL RIVER, MISS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11948) granting the consent of Congress to the Great Southern Lumber Co., a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania, doing business in the State of Mississippi, to construct a bridge across Pearl River, at or near the north line of section 22, township 8 north, range 21 west, west of the basis meridian, in the land district east of Pearl River, in the State of Mississippi.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Great Southern Lumber Co., a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania, doing business in the State of Mississippi, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Pearl River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the north line of section 22, in township 8 north, range 21 west, of the basis meridian, in the land district east of Pearl River, in the State of Mississippi, and in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the construction of such bridge shall be commenced within three years from the date of the passage of this act, and shall be completed within five years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The following committee amendments were read:

Strike out all of section 2.

Renumber section 3 to be section 2.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS PEARL RIVER, MISS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11949) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Pearl River, Miss., and the fourth ward of the parish of Washington, La., to construct a bridge across Pearl River, between Pearl River County, Miss., and Washington Parish, La.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county of Pearl River, Miss., and the fourth ward of the parish of Washington, La., and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Pearl River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the fourth ward of the parish of Washington, State of Louisiana, and in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 22, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the construction of such bridge shall be commenced within two years from the date of the passage of this act, and shall be completed within four years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The following committee amendments were read:

Strike out sections 1 and 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge, authorized by act of Congress approved February 27, 1917, to be built across the Pearl River, at or near the fourth ward of the parish of Washington, State of Louisiana, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from date of approval hereof."

Renumber section 3 to be section 2.

Amend the title so as to read: "To extend the time for the construction of a bridge across Pearl River, between Pearl River County, Miss., and Washington Parish, La."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMPENSATION FOR EMPLOYEES INJURED IN SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11999) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, this legislation is exceedingly important. In the main I think it is entirely sound and proper, but it is manifestly too important, it involves too many controverted questions, to be properly considered under unanimous consent.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I have no objection to the bill, but there are a number of questions involved in which there are a good many interested.

Mr. STEELE. It is an extremely important bill, intended to modify the employees' compensation act. It came before the Judiciary Committee and had the unanimous indorsement of that committee. It was carefully considered, and came to the House with the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the bill is sufficiently important to justify a rule for its consideration before we adjourn.

Mr. FIELDS. I would like to have it considered as early as possible because of its importance to the many employees of the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not objecting on account of any personal opposition to the measure, because I feel it is too important a matter to discuss in the brief time we have under unanimous consent. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming objects, and the bill goes off the calendar.

METALLIFEROUS MINING ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 385) to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. I want to remind the gentleman from Wisconsin that the House in the last Congress passed this bill by unanimous consent, that it was very thoroughly discussed and somewhat amended in accordance with his suggestions. The bill went to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs and was favorably reported to the Senate by that committee with an amendment or two suggested by friends of the Indians, notably the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Indian Rights Association, and the Board of Indian Commissioners. It has been thoroughly discussed. The bill was made up from applicable sections of the water-power bill and the coal and oil leasing bill, bills that have passed this House three different times. Every principle has been passed upon most carefully. This legislation is of great importance not only to my State but to all of the West.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. This is the identical measure that was placed upon the emergency Agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is.

Mr. MONDELL. And will go from that bill, I assume, with other legislation in conference.

Mr. HAYDEN. The House conferees think that this legislation does not properly belong upon that bill.

Mr. MONDELL. But the House has carefully considered this legislation in its present form?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; except some minor amendments made in the Senate at the suggestion of the friends of the Indians.

Mr. MONDELL. Therefore I trust the gentleman from Wisconsin will not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that the bill that passed the House originally merely applied to the Indian lands in the State of Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. As I originally introduced the bill it applied to Indian lands in the State of Arizona. At the suggestion of the Department of the Interior and of numerous Members of the House who were interested the bill was amended in the House to make it cover all of the United States. In the Senate the Senators from Utah and Colorado said they did not care to have their States included, so there was arranged this enumeration of States. When the bill reached the House, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] and at the suggestion of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] their two States were included.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the gentleman if the mining and mineral bill which we have passed here as a war measure would not permit of this territory being worked?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; there is absolutely no law of any kind whereby a pick may be stuck in the ground or any development done on any Indian reservation in the West. These metals are all locked up unless this legislation is passed.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman mean to say that under the mining and mineral bill which we passed if we needed platinum or some other mineral for the effective prosecution of this war and there happened to be a deposit of it upon the Indian lands we could not go in and take it?

Mr. HAYDEN. You could not.

Mr. WALSH. Why not?

Mr. HAYDEN. Because there is no authority to do so.

Mr. WALSH. Then why did we pass that bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. For the development of rare and unusual minerals on the public domain.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. These are Indian lands.

Mr. HAYDEN. Reserved for their exclusive use and benefit, and it is proposed in this bill that the Secretary of the Interior, having jurisdiction over Indian lands, shall make leases satisfactory to him and the Indians, the proceeds of the leases and the royalties to go into the Treasury to the credit of the Indians.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield further, for I see the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has risen. Could the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] state why Indian lands were not included in the general scheme of things?

Mr. FOSTER. Every foot of land in the United States is included. There is not any doubt about that.

Mr. WALSH. Then the gentleman disagrees with the gentleman from Arizona?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. I think the gentleman from Arizona is mistaken about that. If it is necessary to prosecute the war, the Government could go onto any land in the United States and get those minerals. I think the other bill has nothing to do with this bill. The war-minerals bill would only apply where there are some necessary minerals on the lands that the Government absolutely needs.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Which could not be developed until the mineral itself was developed.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, sure.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. This provides development that the other bill does not.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think this has anything to do with that at all.

Mr. WALSH. You would not contend that we ought to let private individuals come in here and develop this property for mineral and then turn around and sell it to the Government?

Mr. FOSTER. If they got the mineral, I would not care whether they sold it to the Government or not, for if the Government needs it, it ought to have it.

Mr. WALSH. If the Government needs it, it ought to get it itself.

Mr. MADDEN. We gave $50,000,000 to the Government with which to do it.

Mr. WALSH. Could the gentleman state whether this measure would in any way hinder the operation of the other?

Mr. FOSTER. Not a bit.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is admitted this is a very important bill and it is not safeguarded in the way the last bills that we passed through the House are safeguarded.

Mr. HAYDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; this bill has every safeguard contained in any of the leasing bills; its language was taken word for word from them.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may be in error, but when I read this bill I was under the impression it did not safeguard sufficiently the interests of the Indians.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman is mistaken. This bill has the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Secretary of the Interior, and the legal advisory board in the department which helped to draft the other leasing bills. They all assisted in the production of this bill, and every safeguard is thrown around the interests of the Indians. It is a carefully considered piece of legislation, every principle of which has been passed upon by this House four times.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The department is clearly satisfied that ample protection is given to all the rights of the Indians under this bill, and the situation is somewhat as stated by the gentleman from Arizona. While under the bill I understand it would be possible for the Government to go and commandeer any minerals discovered and developed, but minerals will not be developed by the Government. This will permit the development on Indian reservations, just as is now done on public lands of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. In these times, when nearly everybody has withdrawn from the prospecting field and only a few would profit at the expense of those who are in the service, perhaps——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. As the gentleman well knows, there can not be any mineral development anyway without some one profits unless the Government itself takes over all the mineral business of the country, which I doubt the advisability of its doing.

Mr. HAYDEN. The difference between the plan proposed in this bill and the ordinary development of mineral on public lands is that in the event of a mineral discovery off a reservation the prospector locates it and takes title, whereas in order to have development on a reservation he must first get a permit from the Secretary of the Interior to go upon the reservation, then apply for a lease after discovery, and by that lease agree to pay rentals and royalties to the Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will agree there are only a few persons at this time who will be able to take advantage of the opportunities of opening up these Indian reservations and prospecting for minerals?

Mr. HAYDEN. The things that are greatly needed to carry on this war are minerals, such as copper and other metals.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is all covered by the other bill in case the Government needs them. I ask to have the bill go over for future consideration.

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest this is on the House Calendar, and under the provision it belongs on the Union Calendar because it handles the money and becomes——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona that the bill be passed without prejudice? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. In order to give the bill its proper status, I ask that it be transferred from the House Calendar to the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. HAYDEN. Let it retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. FOSTER. This does not make a charge on the Treasury.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; it provides for making a charge on the Treasury, here in section 10 and section 11.

Mr. WALSH. Not section 10.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a question whether it is a Union Calendar bill, and I think it ought to remain as it is until further consideration is given to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw his request?

Mr. RAKER. All right.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE, DISTRICT OF ARIZONA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 714) providing for an additional judge for the district of Arizona.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

PROHIBITION OF USE OF PEYOTE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2614) to amend sections 2139 and 2140 of the Revised Statutes and the acts amendatory thereof, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will some gentleman of the Committee on Public Lands explain the necessity of this bill? Let the bill be again reported under the reservation of the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be read.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request, in order that some gentleman may give an explanation of the bill. I thought the bill was a short one, and I do not wish to impose upon the House. I did not happen to have the bill before me.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, this bill was prepared by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and is a general revision of the laws relating to the sale of liquors to Indians. It tightens up the various existing acts in places where they have been found difficult of enforcement. Among the other things, the bill includes within its provisions an inhibition against the sale to Indians of peyote, and this measure is therefore known as the "peyote bill." Peyote is being increasingly used by Indians in certain sections of the country. It is a habit-forming drug and is very deleterious and injurious to their health. The bill, as I said, is a general revision of the laws relating to the sale of liquors to Indians, including peyote and other drugs in the list of prohibited articles.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill, I understand, is solely for the further protecting and safeguarding the health of the Indians——

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. From liquor and the use of habit-forming drugs. I have no objection to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 2139 and 2140 of the Revised Statutes and the acts amendatory thereof be amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That any person who shall sell, give away, dispose of, exchange, barter, or otherwise furnish any malt, fermented, spirituous, or vinous liquor, including beer, ale, and wine, tulapai or tiswin, or any ardent or other intoxicating liquor of any kind whatsoever, or any essence, extract, bitters, preparation, compound, composition, or any article whatsoever, under any name, label, or brand, which produces intoxication, or cannabis indica or Indian hemp, or anhalonium, or peyote, to any Indian to whom allotment of land has been made while title to same shall be held in trust by the Government, to any Indian a ward of the Government under the charge of any Indian superintendent or agent, or to any Indian, including Pueblos and mixed bloods, over whom or over whose property the Government, through its departments, exercises guardianship or supervision, whether a citizen or not, and any person who shall introduce or attempt to introduce into or convey or transport through the Indian country, which term shall include all the lands embraced in what was formerly the Indian Territory and now a part of the State of Oklahoma, all of Osage County, in said State of Oklahoma, any Indian allotment while the title to same shall be held in trust by the Government, or while the same shall remain inalienable by the allottee with the consent of the United States, any Indian reservation, or any town site or tract of land, including any railroad right of way or part thereof, located wholly within the exterior limits of any Indian reservation or pueblo land grant, or any lands owned by Indians individually or as communities, whether allotted or not, Indian settlements, Indian school lands, and Indians pueblos, and any land to which by treaty or otherwise the Indian intercourse laws or other laws prohibiting the liquor traffic therein have been made applicable, and any other lands not herein described, which may be Indian country on or prior to the date of the passage of this act, or who shall have in possession, sell, give away, dispose of, exchange, barter, or manufacture any malt, fermented, spirituous, or vinous liquor, including beer, ale, and wine, tulapai or tiswin, or any ardent or intoxicating liquor of any kind whatsoever, or any essence, extract, bitters, preparation, compound, composition, or any article whatsoever, under any name, label, or brand which produces intoxication, or cannabis indica or Indian hemp, or anhalonium, or peyote, which the Indian country as hereinbefore described, shall be punished by imprisonment for more than 60 days, but less than one year, and by a fine of not less than $100 or more than $500 for the first offense: Provided, however, That the person convicted shall be committed until the fine and costs are paid. But it shall be a sufficient defense to any charge of introducing or attempting to introduce or having in possession any of the articles herein named that the acts charged were done by order of or under authority in writing from the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under such regulations as may be prescribed. Prosecutions under this section may be by information. Hereafter it shall not be unlawful to introduce and use wines solely for sacramental purposes under church authority at any place within the Indian country as hereinbefore described.

"SEC. 2. Any person having been convicted of a second or subsequent offense under section 1 of this act shall be punished by a fine of not less than $200 or more than $2,000 and by imprisonment for not less than six months or more than three years.

"SEC. 3. That if the chief special officer or any of his duly authorized deputies whose appointments have been affirmed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or any Indian superintendent or other person in the service of the United States whose appointment is made by the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or any United States marshal or his deputy, has reason to suspect or is informed that any of the intoxicants, drugs, or preparations enumerated in or coming within the purview of this act have been or are about to be introduced into or conveyed across any of the places mentioned herein in violation of law or that any such intoxicants, drugs, preparations, or articles are within any of such places in violation of law, it shall be the duty of such person to search the premises, conveyances, or places of deposit, and to take and destroy any of the aforesaid intoxicants, drugs, preparations, or articles found in any such place or places, except such as may be introduced therein by or under authority in writing of the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and to seize the places of deposit and all articles and goods found therewith or therein, the teams, wagons, sleds, boats, automobiles, or any other vehicles or conveyances used in the transportation of such intoxicants, drugs, or preparations, whether used by the owner thereof or other persons, and deliver them to the proper officer, and same shall be proceeded against by libel in the proper court, and if such person be a trader his license shall be revoked and his bond put in suit. In all cases arising under this or any other law Indians shall be competent witnesses.

"SEC. 4. That hereafter when any reservation or portion thereof is thrown open for settlement the lands allotted, those retained or reserved, and the surplus lands sold or otherwise disposed of shall be subject to all the laws of the United States relative to the introduction, possession, sale, or other disposal and seizure of intoxicants, drugs, and preparations until Congress shall otherwise provide.

"SEC. 5. The records of any common carrier, telegraph, or telephone company or wholesale or retail dealer in liquors or of any other individual, firm, or corporation shall be competent evidence in any case arising under this act. If any officer, agent, employee, or representative of any common carrier, corporation, or company, or any other person having knowledge of any violation of any of the provisions of this act shall withhold or conceal such information, books, or records, or who does not, as soon as may be, disclose or make known the same to one of the officers named in section 3 of this act, such person shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000 or imprisoned not less than 30 days nor more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 6. That any person hereafter committing against the person of the chief special officer for the suppression of the liquor traffic among Indians and duly authorized officers working under his supervision or other employees whose appointments are made or affirmed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior, against any United States marshal, deputy United States marshal, posse, posse comitatus, or guard, while lawfully engaged in the execution of any United States process or lawfully engaged in any other duty imposed upon such special officer or his duly authorized agent or other employee appointed as aforesaid, or marshal, deputy marshal, posse, posse comitatus, or guard, by the laws of the United States, any of the following crimes, namely: Murder, manslaughter, assault with intent to murder, assault, or assault and battery, or who shall in any manner obstruct by threats or violence any person who is engaged in the service of the United States in the discharge of any of his duties as such chief special officer or his duly authorized agent, or other officer aforesaid, or who shall hereafter commit any of the crimes aforesaid against any person who at the time of the commission of said crime, or at any time within three years previous thereto, belonged to any of the classes of officers hereinbefore named, shall be subject to the laws of the United States relating to such crimes and shall be tried by the district court of the United States exercising criminal jurisdiction where such offense was committed and shall be subject to the same penalties as are all other persons charged with the commission of said crimes, respectively, and such courts are hereby given jurisdiction of all such cases.

"SEC. 7. Whoever shall resist, oppose, prevent, impede, or interfere with any officer employed to suppress the traffic in intoxicants among the Indians, or his deputy, or any person assisting him in the execution of his duties, or any person authorized to make searches and seizures, in the execution of his duty, or shall rescue, attempt to rescue, or cause to be rescued, any prisoner or any property which has been seized by any person so authorized; or whoever before, at, or after such arrest or seizure, in order to prevent the arrest and confinement of such prisoner, or the seizure or securing of any liquor, drugs, or preparations, wagons, sleds, boats, automobiles, or other articles used in transporting, or places used in storing or keeping such liquors, drugs, or preparations, by any person so authorized, shall destroy or remove the same, or shall release, or attempt to secure the release, or prevent the confinement of any prisoner, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both; and whoever shall use any deadly or dangerous weapon in resisting any person authorized to make searches or seizures, in the execution of his duty, with intent to commit a bodily injury upon him or to deter or prevent him from discharging his duty, shall be imprisoned not more than 10 years.

"SEC. 8. In the defense of suits, either civil or criminal, other than by the United States, against those employed to enforce the provisions of this act arising out of their official acts, the United States attorney shall appear on behalf of such employee and the expense in connection with such suits shall be paid from the same appropriation from which the employee is paid.

"SEC. 9. Indian superintendents and officers designated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to enforce the provisions of this act are hereby authorized to administer oaths and take acknowledgments for general purposes.

"SEC. 10. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

The committee amendments were severally read and severally agreed to, as follows:

Page 2, line 22, after the word "railroad," insert the words "or other."

Page 3, line 24, after the word "Interior," strike out the words "or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs."

Page 3, line 25, after the word "as," insert the word "he."

Page 3, line 25, after the word "may," strike out the words "be prescribed" and insert the word "prescribed."

Page 4, line 22, strike out the word "intoxacants" and insert the word "intoxicants."

Page 5, line 4, after the word "Interior," strike out the words "or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs."

Page 5, line 8, after the word "the," insert the following: "introduction, attempted introduction, or."

In line 9, page 5, after the word "transportation," insert the following: "within or across any of the places mentioned herein."

Page 7, line 4, after the word "aforesaid," strike out the following: "or who shall hereafter commit any of the crimes aforesaid against any person who at the time of the commission of said crime, or at any time within three years previous thereto."

Page 8, line 1, after the word "other," strike out the word "articles" and insert in lieu thereof the word "vehicles."

Page 8, line 21, strike out the words "Commissioner of Indian Affairs" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of the Interior."

Page 8, line 23, after the word "oaths," strike out the following: "and take acknowledgments for general purposes."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 3, line 16, after the word "days," strike out the words "but less than one year and" and insert "or"; and, in line 17, strike out "less than $100 or."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] that we seldom enact legislation now providing for both a minimum and maximum penalty. We usually provide the maximum. This would read that they shall be punished by imprisonment of not more than 60 days or by a fine of not more than $500.

Mr. HAYDEN. I wanted to make it perfectly clear that the first offense shall be a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment for less than a year. The second offense becomes a felony, because the term of imprisonment may be for a year or more, and on the second offense to make it a heavier penalty.

Mr. WALSH. This would not make it any heavier penalty. You say here "by imprisonment for more than 60 days, but less than one year."

Mr. HAYDEN. "For more than 60 days or less than one year." The judge must sentence him for at least 60 days, but not more than a year. The minimum penalty is 60 days in jail and the maximum is one year.

Mr. WALSH. I see. I will withdraw the amendment in that case. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment on page 6.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 6, line 9, after the word "not," strike out "less than $100 nor," and in same line strike out, at the end of the line, "less than 30 days nor."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I think in this case the penalties are not for the first offense.

Mr. HAYDEN. I think it might just as well be left to the discretion of the court. I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to ask the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] one question.

On page 5, line 15, it says:

In all cases arising under this or any other law Indians shall be competent witnesses.

Mr. HAYDEN. This is a mere reenactment of the statute. This amounts to a revision of the law. It is in the present law.

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask if, prior to the enactment of the statute containing that language, were not Indians competent witnesses?

Mr. HAYDEN. The question was raised by some of the courts, and some of the courts held they were and some that they were not. That was a necessity for the passage of that law.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKEOWN: Page 2, line 5, strike out the words "anhalonium or peyote," and the same on page 3, line 14.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this question raises quite a controversy in dealing with the Indians. A great many of these Indian tribes use this peyote in religious ceremonies. It is a very acute question with the full-blood Indians in the Southwest. A great many of them use it in their church ceremonies, and upon that ground I am offering this amendment to strike these words out of this bill. As a matter of fact, I think this peyote is put in this bill with the liquor question in order to put the peyote proposition through. And if you examine the hearings you will find that a number of Indians use peyote in their religious ceremonies, as I have stated. If it is true they use it in that manner, I do not think it ought to be prohibited.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. In that case, then, why could not the gentleman revise his amendment so as not to affect the sale of it when used for religious purposes?

Mr. McKEOWN. I am willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman tell us what that is?

Mr. McKEOWN. Peyote?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. It is a little button or a little root that grows in the far Southwest. It has a very exhilarating effect, so the testimony before the committee shows, and I invite the gentleman's attention to that testimony, where he can find interesting information on that question.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, some six or eight years ago the matter of the use of peyote among Indians in my district belonging to the Winnebago Tribe was brought to my attention. I made an investigation at that time, confined not merely to the Winnebagos in my immediate section but to the members of the tribe scattered through Nebraska and elsewhere. I gathered a large amount of testimony in regard to its use. It is true, as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN] has stated, that they are using it in connection with their religious worship. But some of my investigation showed that that is largely a pretext to justify the use of it. The effects of it are at first exhilarating, and then there follows a period of profound depression and there are cases where it has resulted in crime. The evidence that I gathered came from missionaries who had labored among the Indians for years, and came also from intelligent members of the tribe. They were all of one accord in claiming that the use of the drug was deleterious, and that its spread was exceedingly rapid, and that some legislation ought to be enacted to entirely prohibit it. I believe that we should retain it in the bill.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I notice the gentleman's description of the effect, that it is about the same as that of the Kentucky article. Is it not?

Mr. ESCH. I am not familiar with the Kentucky product.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to be compelled to oppose the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. McKEOWN] to strike out peyote. I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs which investigated this subject. I am also a member of the subcommittee that investigated it. A great many of the Indians from these western tribes came before the subcommittee and protested against the inclusion of peyote in this bill. That is true. But the Indian Office is very insistent upon this legislation, and we had Dr. Wiley before us, and we had a good many other people before us, telling us of the very bad effects of the use of this drug. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] was right when he said that they used the religious ceremonies as an excuse for the use of this drug.

Now, it is a little button that grows on the top of the cactus plant down around the Mexican border, and it is gathered there and sent to the less civilized Indians, and they use it. The testimony before the committee is to the effect that it has a worse effect upon them than the use of whisky. I do not think there is a particle of doubt about it, and intelligent, highly intelligent, and the more civilized Indians who came before our committee were very insistent that the use of peyote ought to be suppressed, inasmuch as it was not for the best interests of the Indians that they should be permitted to use it.

None of the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes use the peyote. It is only the less civilized Indians that use it. We very carefully considered the matter. We took testimony day after day before a subcommittee, and the full committee considered it; and I think, as a member of that committee, that peyote ought to be suppressed, and that this amendment striking it out ought not to be agreed to.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I want to ask my colleague on the committee from Oklahoma if he could tell the House some of the effects that this drug has upon the Indians?

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, well, it is pretty difficult to explain. It is true that they call meetings and have gatherings in the evening lasting throughout the entire night, and they have these little buttons and distribute them around among the members present and they eat them. Its effect, I will say, is not exactly like that of opium, but somewhat similar. It is pretty difficult to describe. It makes the Indians see visions and dream dreams. It has a very bad effect upon the Indians, according to the testimony of those in the very best position to know. As I say, there is a class of Indians that want to continue the use of it, and a good many Indians came before us and protested against this legislation.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will ask the gentleman if there was not quite a bit of testimony taken before your committee to the effect that it was used in their religious ceremonies, and that Mr. SNYDER, one of the members of the committee, did not oppose it on the ground that it was used in connection with a religious ceremony?

Mr. HASTINGS. My colleague states correctly that there were statements of that kind made by certain Indians who appeared before the committee. But all the missionaries among the Indians, without any exception, and among all tribes of Indians are opposed to the use of peyote, without any exception whatever. Only those Indians who do not belong to the Protestant churches favor the use of peyote. All others are opposed to the use of peyote.

As I said a moment ago, the officials of the Indian Office have made a special study of this question, and the Indian agents throughout all these Indian tribes who have made reports on it have reported against the use of it and in favor of the enactment of this legislation. I am sorry that I can not agree with my colleague from Oklahoma.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will be glad to.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Do I understand the gentleman to say that after full investigation of this subject and of the use of this drug, the use that the Indians make of it in their religious ceremonies is merely a pretended use and a subterfuge, and therefore it should not be exempted even for that purpose?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is the conclusion the committee came to, after full investigation and after hearings for a number of days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of the Unanimous Consent Calendar it shall be in order for the Committee on Military Affairs to call up bills that are favorably reported from that committee and are now on the Calendar and that are not objected to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that after the completion of the call of the Unanimous Consent Calendar the Committee on Military Affairs be permitted to call up bills reported from that committee which are now on the Calendar, to which no objection is made. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will that be to-day or to-morrow?

Mr. DENT. I presume that will be to-morrow. I understand it will not be called until to-morrow.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the Unanimous Consent Calendar be called to-morrow under our agreement?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not include to-morrow.

Mr. LONGWORTH. My question is that under our agreement to take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar, would that be the unfinished business to-morrow after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. DENT. That was the understanding that I had. I ask unanimous consent that if the Unanimous Consent Calendar is not finished to-day, it be in order to-morrow, and that then this bill be the special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the request of the gentleman from Alabama to be that the Unanimous Consent Calendar shall be in order to-morrow——

Mr. DENT. If not finished to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If not finished to-day, and that after the completion of the Calendar for Unanimous Consent the bill to which he refers may be in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that the gentleman's request is that his bill shall follow the Unanimous Consent Calendar as it existed to-day, not the bills that have been considered to-day and passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DENT. Oh, of course.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman's request to be simply that the bill shall be in order, but not to exclude conference reports or reports from the Committee on Rules, and so on.

Mr. DENT. Yes; that was the understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request as modified, not to exclude conference reports or reports from the Committee on Rules?

There was no objection.

ROADS, TRAILS, AND BRIDGES WITHIN INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 269) to authorize the advancement of funds to survey, construct, and maintain roads, trails, and bridges within Indian reservations.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

USE OF SEIZED OPIUM, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9830) providing for the disposition of opium, its salts and derivatives, coca leaves, their salts and derivatives, and any other drugs seized by the United States Government in the enforcement of the provisions of the act of October 1, 1890, as amended by the acts of March 3, 1897, February 9, 1909, and January 17, 1914, or the act of December 17, 1914.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, that bill is contained in the revenue bill which is now pending in the Senate. I do not know what will be its fate there. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NOGALES, ARIZ.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 282) amending the public-buildings act approved March 4, 1913, providing for the purchase of a site for a public building at Nogales, Ariz.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask a question about this proposed legislation. It seems that the authorization is raised from $10,000 to $120,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Oh, no. The public-buildings act passed in 1913 authorized the purchase of a site for the post office in Nogales at $10,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object. This is not a war measure.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the gentleman will allow me to explain——

Mr. WALSH. I will be very glad if the gentleman will answer my question.

Mr. MADDEN. I have objected, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say to the gentleman that there are on this calendar three bills that have been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which bills were considered extremely urgent. This bill has passed the House heretofore. It straightens out a very tangled situation at Nogales, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Let it come up in the regular way.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman object to the others as well?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I will.

Subsequently,

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is willing to withdraw his objection to the Nogales bill (H. R. 282).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent to return to that bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent to return to it.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds if the committee has not reported out two other bills similar in effect, for which the Treasury Department is asking, to correct certain situations?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; that is true.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Then why would it not save time to have these three bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds considered together?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no; not three bills at one time.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. We will not get through with the calendar, and they are all similar——

Mr. STAFFORD. The understanding is that we will finish the Unanimous Consent Calendar either to-night or to-morrow.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. The agreement made at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs would bar out my bill to-morrow, because it is not on the calendar to-day, although it will be to-morrow.

Mr. WALSH. If it is not on the calendar, it ought not to be considered.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. It will be on the calendar to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it is on the calendar to-morrow, it can be called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to return to this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 4 of the public-buildings act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 873), as authorizes the acquisition of a site and the erection of a suitable building thereon for the United States customhouse at Nogales, Ariz., at a cost not exceeding $110,000, and so much of section 5 of said act (37 Stat., 877) as authorizes the acquisition of a site for the United States post office and other Government offices at Nogales, Ariz., at a cost not exceeding $10,000, be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, one site and to erect thereon one building for the accommodation of the United States post office, customhouse, and other Government offices in Nogales, Ariz., at a cost not exceeding $120,000, of which limit of cost not exceeding $15,000 shall be expended for such site; and that the appropriation of $16,000 made by the act of Congress approved July 29, 1914 (38 Stat., 563), in pursuance of said authorization of March 4, 1913, for a site and building for said customhouse, be, and the same is hereby, made available for the acquisition of the site and the commencement of the erection of the building hereinbefore authorized for said post office and customhouse.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asked if there was objection, and there was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. The Chair only asked if there was objection to returning.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is correct. I only asked to recur. The gentleman still has the right to make his inquiry.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman was about to make a statement about the authorization. I wish he would complete that.

Mr. HAYDEN. I want to say to the gentleman that in the public-building act of 1913 there was, first, an authorization for the purchase of a site for a post office at $10,000, and then, in another part of the bill, there was an authorization for the construction of a customhouse and purchase of a site at $110,000 for that building.

The Treasury Department was desirous of erecting a combined building on one site, but the legal advisers of the Secretary decided that he could not purchase with these two funds one site; that is, they could not consolidate the appropriation for the post office and the appropriation for the customhouse. The whole purpose of this bill is not to increase the appropriation but to authorize the purchase of one site for all purposes at a maximum cost of $15,000. As a matter of fact, under the original act $10,000 could be used for one site and $10,000 for the other. This is to consolidate them at a maximum of $15,000.

Mr. WALSH. From whom is the letter contained in the report on the bill?

Mr. HASTINGS. It has no signature, but it comes from the Secretary of the Treasury. I presume the clerk sent a carbon copy to the committee instead of the original.

Mr. WALSH. This does not make any increase in the original provision?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; and it does not intend that the building shall be constructed during the war. This is to straighten out the tangle and have the site ready when they do get ready to build.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 4 of the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stats., p. 873), as authorizes the acquisition of a site and the erection of a suitable building thereon for the United States customhouse at Nogales, Ariz., at a cost not exceeding $110,000, and so much of section 5 of said act (37 Stats., p. 877) as authorizes the acquisition of a site for the United States post office and other Government offices at Nogales, Ariz., at a cost not exceeding $10,000, be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, one site and to erect thereon one building for the accommodation of the United States post office, customhouse, and other Government offices in Nogales, Ariz., at a cost not exceeding $120,000, of which limit of cost not exceeding $15,000 shall be expended for such site; and that the appropriation of $16,000 made by the act of Congress approved July 29, 1914 (38 Stats., p. 563), in pursuance of said authorization of March 4, 1913, for a site and building for said customhouse, be, and the same is hereby, made available for the acquisition of the site and the commencement of the erection of the building hereinbefore authorized for said post office and customhouse.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 294) to provide for the appointment of an additional judge in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Missouri.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

RESTORATION OF BIRD RESERVATION IN CALIFORNIA AND OREGON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10612) to restore to the public domain certain lands heretofore reserved for a bird reservation in Siskiyou and Modoc Counties, Cal., and Klamath County, Oreg., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will, to accommodate the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been reported favorably by the Department of the Interior, the General Land Office, and the Department of Agriculture, and all the departments having charge of the matters involved, including the Biological Survey, the officer having charge of the reservation. Numerous conferences were held and they all believe that it was for the interest of the reservations, protection of them, and in addition to that it opens up in the neighborhood of 23,000 acres of land that is now swamp, puts it under cultivation for agricultural purposes, returns to the Government $180,000 that is now lost without this legislation.

If this legislation is enacted it will permit land to be completely drained, homesteaded, farmers to go in and utilize it, and commence to cut the hay that is there after the water is drained off, and it will become very beneficial at this time. I trust the gentleman from Wisconsin will see his way clear to let the House consider the bill at this time and let it go to the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill has received more than the ordinary attention on my part, particularly through the courtesy of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]. He favored me by having the gentleman who is directly interested in this matter as the representative of the Siskiyou Homesteaders' Association call upon me and explain the purposes of the bill. It gives a special preferential right of entry on these abandoned lands to members of the Siskiyou Homesteaders' Association, depriving the public generally of the right to homestead, and limiting it to members of this association, whose qualifications are the payment of a membership fee of a certain amount so as to qualify them to take up land on this abandoned, overflowed land. Mr. Speaker, when the full facts are disclosed about this bill I think the House will certainly vote the bill down, and I do not wish at this late hour to take up the time of the House in discussing the matter further.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman would not make any statement, I am sure, which the facts did not bear out, and the gentleman does not know all the facts in regard to it. It is in my district, a part of it in the county adjoining my home county, and I have been familiar with it for many years and been around it when I was a younger man. I want to call the committee's attention to the fact that the land on the Oregon side whereby a contract has been entered into by the swamp-land claimants was entered into solely by virtue of the preparation of this legislation. They are getting the benefit of the legislation before it is enacted, whereby they are to be permitted to drain their land. When the railroad came in, the Reclamation Service gave it permission to cross this land. They required the railroad to build an embankment so that they could shut the water from going into this particular tract of land. When this matter started six years ago the Government could not lower that water one inch under their contract with the Van Bremner people. These people went to work and the Van Bremner people waived their riparian rights so this land could be opened up for use.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Let me finish this statement. It is very important that this land be utilized for homestead purposes. These people secured the Van Bremner people and themselves to waive their riparian rights whereby they were to get the water to irrigate in the neighborhood of 5,000 acres of land. The Government entered into that contract when they first went into the project. The Van Bremner people waived their rights——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, without intending any discourtesy at all to the gentleman from California, I object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill remain upon the calendar and go to the foot thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill remain on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

WATER SUPPLY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12549) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission to investigate and report upon the available sources of water supply for the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is a short bill. Let it be reported first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a commission of five members, three of whom shall be selected from the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army and one from the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission and one from the engineering department of the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to make full investigation of the sources of water supply from rivers and streams in the proximity of the city of Washington, with the view to increasing the water supply of the District of Columbia, and to report their findings and recommendations to the Secretary of War at the earliest practicable time, said report to be accompanied by data and other information as to such sources of supply, together with estimates of the probable cost of a project or projects for the transmission of water sufficient to augment the present water supply of the District of Columbia commensurate with present and future needs, including the territory embraced within the jurisdiction of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission, and Federal military reservations contiguous to the District of Columbia. Such report shall be submitted to Congress by the Secretary of War with his recommendation. And for the purposes herein authorized there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended by and under the direction of said commission upon vouchers to be approved by the Secretary of War, and a detailed statement thereof shall accompany the commission's report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who reported the bill does not seem to be present. I am in sympathy with the purposes of the bill, but I am wondering about the language touching the appropriation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I should be very glad if some one from the committee or some one who is familiar with the bill could give us some information as to the appropriation that is contained it in—what is the purpose of it and what is it going to be used for in the investigation?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I am not on the committee, but I am aware of the almost desperate conditions here with respect to the water supply.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am also, and I am in entire sympathy with the bill. It is the best way I know to get at it, but I am not sure that that is the usual language carried in appropriations for commissions. I shall withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If I can give the gentleman any information, I shall.

Mr. SLOAN. I notice that the terms "District of Columbia" and "city of Washington" are used apparently interchangeably. Which is the correct legal term, and is there at this time a legal body or corporation known as the city of Washington?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have heard the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, state that there is no such legal entity as the city of Washington, but in the various laws that are passed the expressions "District of Columbia" and "city of Washington" are used interchangeably, as I understand it from the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa rose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire me to yield the floor or does he desire to ask me a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman can answer me what I desire to ask, I shall be very glad to propound him a question, and that is with reference to the expenditure. Does the gentleman know why we should make that $15,000? Would not $5,000 do just as well?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This provides $15,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; but my friend would not accept any less to be spent.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I rose to make the inquiry about that very matter myself, in respect to this appropriation, and as to whether it was in the usual language, whether the language that is used here has been construed when commissions have been appointed outside of Congress to be paid as the provision is here. I do not know about it.

Mr. SIMS. I will state that the Committee on the District of Columbia is very cautious.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I know that that is true, and the purposes of it are very worthy, and the necessity is so great that certainly there ought not to be any objection, and I shall make none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not want to prevent the bill going through.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I desire information on that point that the gentleman is asking me about. I do not know.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I wonder if unanimous consent could not be obtained to let the bill go over until to-morrow?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Unanimous consent has already been granted for its passage to-day.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I know it is going to be considered.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think it would better be passed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentlemen around me seem to be satisfied with the matter.

Mr. IGOE. It seems to be an advantage to have a bill come here that no one knows anything about.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That seems to be so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DIKE AT DEPOT SLOUGH, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7637) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a dike on Depot Slough, Lincoln County, Oreg.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Depot Slough Diking Association be, and hereby is, authorized to construct and maintain a dike across Depot Slough, in Lincoln County, Oreg., with a gate therein so constructed and maintained as to be readily opened and operated to permit the passage of logs, but arranged to automatically close for such times as may be necessary to prevent the overflowing by the tides of the lands above the said dike, all under such regulations as may be prescribed from time to time by the Secretary of War: Provided, however, That the work shall not be commenced until the plans therefor have been filed with and approved by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers United States Army.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "Army," insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That no dam nor dike constructed under the consent hereby granted shall be used to develop water power nor to generate electricity.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Is the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] quite certain that the passage of this bill will not place any responsibility upon the Federal Government for the overflow of the lands that may be overflowed by reason of the building of the dike?

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no such possibility. The lands are all owned privately. It is a narrow thread of water several miles from the sea, a branch of the Yaquina River, and the water rises about 4 feet at the highest tide. It spreads out level below the lands owned by private owners. They wish to put the dike across it to keep out the flood waters.

Mr. MONDELL. Those who are given authority to construct the dikes, are those owners of the land that will be flooded?

Mr. HAWLEY. They are the men who have formed this dike association whose lands will be flooded. There is no objection to it on the part of the locality at all.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT JUDGE, MIDDLE JUDICIAL DISTRICT, TENNESSEE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 1836, an act to provide for the appointment of a district judge in the middle judicial district of the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection.

Mr. WALSH. Yes, I will withhold if the gentleman desires to make a statement.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, the need for this additional judge in Tennessee is a very crying one to the interest of the people of the middle section of the State. The work in that district is behind from one to two years. Motions are pending now that have been argued before the court 12 to 18 months ago and have not been passed upon. This bill has passed the Senate at two different sessions. There is no expense attached to the creation of this judgeship whatever except the salary. We have got the judicial district already, we have got the court room and all the paraphernalia, we have the marshals, the clerks, and everything, and there is nothing involved in the way of public expenditure except the salary of the judge. The present judge is unable to do the work, and the judge for this new district, if he is appointed, will have more work to do by far than the average Federal district judge of the United States will have. I hope gentlemen will withdraw their objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 35 OF THE CRIMINAL CODE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 3470, a bill to amend section 35 of the Criminal Code of the United States.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, it is not a long bill, and I ask that it be read before the objection stage is passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 35 of the Criminal Code of the United States be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 35. And whoever shall purchase, or receive in pledge, from any person any arms, equipment, ammunition, clothing, military stores, or other property furnished by the United States, under a clothing allowance or otherwise, to any soldier, sailor, officer, cadet, or midshipman in the military or naval service of the United States or of the National Guard or Naval Militia, or to any person accompanying, serving, or retained with the land or naval forces and subject to military or naval law, shall be fined not more than $500 and imprisoned not more than two years."

The committe amendment was read, as follows:

On page 1, line 6, after section 35, insert:

"SEC. 35. Whoever shall make or cause to be made or present or cause to be presented, for payment or approval, to or by any person or officer in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, or any department thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder, any claim upon or against the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder, knowing such claim to be false, fictitious, or fraudulent; or whoever, for the purpose of obtaining or aiding to obtain the payment or approval of such claim, or for the purpose and with the intent of cheating and swindling or defrauding the Government of the United States, or any department thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder, shall knowingly and willfully falsify or conceal or cover up by any trick, scheme, or device a material fact, or make or cause to be made any false or fraudulent statements or representations, or make or use or cause to be made or used any false bill, receipt, voucher, roll, account, claim, certificate, affidavit, or deposition, knowing the same to contain any fraudulent or fictitious statement or entry; or whoever shall take and carry away or take for his own use, or for the use of another, with intent to steal or purloin, any personal property of the United States, or any branch or department thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder; or whoever shall enter into any agreement, combination, or conspiracy to defraud the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder, by obtaining or aiding to obtain the payment or allowance of any false or fraudulent claim; and whoever, having charge, possession, custody, or control of any money or other public property used or to be used in the military or naval service, with intent to defraud the United States, or any department thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder, or willfully to conceal such money or other property, shall deliver or cause to be delivered to any person having authority to receive the same any amount of such money or other property less than that for which he received a certificate or took a receipt; or whoever, being authorized to make or deliver any certificate, voucher, receipt, or other paper certifying the receipt of arms, ammunition, provisions, clothing, or other property so used or to be used, shall make or deliver the same to any other person without a full knowledge of the truth of the facts stated therein and with intent to defraud the United States, or any deparment thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both."

Page 4, line 5, after the word "law" insert the words "having knowledge or reason to believe that the property has been taken from the possession of the United States or furnished by the United States under such allowance."

Page 4, line 8, after the figures "$500" strike out the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the word "or."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, unless there is some one who can give some explanation of this bill, I shall object to it, because it seems to me to be very awkwardly worded.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee is not present, but the only amendments to the existing law are the extension of the penalty of this act to false and fraudulent claims that are presented against corporations in which the United States is a stockholder, and also the punishment of the disposal of the property belonging to the Army or Navy and pledging it or selling it or disposing of it wrongfully.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman say there was no change of the present law relative to the receiving or purchasing or pledging stores that had been received?

Mr. IGOE. I say that there is a provision, and the gentleman will find it in the printed bill on page 3, line 22:

And whoever shall purchase, or receive in pledge, from any person any arms, equipment, ammunition, clothing, military stores, or other property furnished by the United States, etc.

That, as I recall it, was all there was to this bill as it came from the Senate, and to it was subsequently attached the rest of section 35 as amended to extend the law to false and fraudulent claims made against a corporation in which the United States is a stockholder.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do I understand from what the gentleman has said that we had no such cases before?

Mr. IGOE. Of corporations in which the United States was a stockholder?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not so much that as the other additional matter.

Mr. IGOE. I do not believe the sale or pledge of such property was fully covered. This property is held under an allowance, and I do not believe it was fully covered by the present law.

Mr. MONDELL. In all these years have we had no legislation making it a felony to receive uniforms, arms, accouterments, or military material?

Mr. IGOE. The law as found in the present section 35 does not fully cover the situation. It does not include cadets and midshipmen. This amendment includes them and also the National Guard, Naval Militia, and persons accompanying, serving, or retained with the land or naval forces and subject to military or naval law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would say to the gentleman that I had supposed it was covered by existing law. But this, having been passed by the Senate, I suppose some one must have looked into that matter very carefully.

Mr. IGOE. That was my understanding.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Now, was this amendment that is on the last page put in by the Military Committee of the House or the Military Committee of the Senate?

Mr. IGOE. That was put on by the Judiciary Committee, so that to be punishable the purchaser must have knowledge or reason to believe that the property had been taken from the possession of the United States. In some cases it might reasonably be supposed that the property had rightfully come into the possession of the seller.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, Mr. Speaker, while the matter is not quite as clear as I would wish, I believe I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments. Is a separate vote demanded on any one amendment? If not, the vote will be taken en gross.

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. IGOE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the vote by which the House passed the bill H. R. 7637 be reconsidered and the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

UNLAWFUL ASSOCIATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 4471, an act to declare unlawful associations purposing by physical force, violence, or injury to bring about any governmental, social, industrial, or economic change in the United States, and prescribing punishment for persons engaged in the activities of such associations, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS ROCK RIVER, ILL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12631) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Winnebago, in the State of Illinois, and the town of Rockford, in said county and State, to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Camp Grant.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county of Winnebago, in the State of Illinois, and the town of Rockford, in said county and State, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rock River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Camp Grant, in the county of Winnebago, in the State of Illinois, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a correction will be made in the spelling of the word "approved" on page 2, line 2.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next one.

SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS AT YELLOWSTONE, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 41) to authorize the sale of certain lands at or near Yellowstone, Mont., for hotel and other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. The Clerk will report the next one.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY FOR THE DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4246) to increase the salary of the United States district attorney for the district of Connecticut.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman who introduced this bill—and I believe he is a member of the committee that reported it—whether the committee has given any consideration to a general increase in the salaries of the district attorneys throughout the country?

Mr. LONERGAN. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that that is a matter, of course, that should be answered by some member of the committee which considered this bill. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is present, and probably he can answer that question.

Mr. RAKER. There is a bill pending before this committee covering the matter suggested, but it has not yet been acted upon. That is my recollection. This is for the salary of marshals?

Mr. LONERGAN. No; the salaries of United States district attorneys.

Mr. RAKER. That is correct. A bill on that subject is pending before our committee, but it has not yet been acted upon.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if my memory serves me aright, the Attorney General has been asking to have some general legislation enacted whereby he would be granted authority to increase the salaries of the district attorneys throughout the country. I believe he has even asked the Committee on Appropriations to make some authorization whereby their salaries could be increased.

I dislike very much to oppose measures of this kind, but here we are singling out one for consideration—some one district attorney—where there may be many others who are equally entitled to consideration. Earlier in the day I objected to a bill, which was meritorious, providing for the increase of the salary of the district attorney in the district of Rhode Island, where the work is as large as that of the district attorney of Connecticut. That bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. In that case $5,000 was asked for, and the committee recommended only $3,500. In the case of this bill the amount carried as introduced is $5,000, but the committee reported in favor of $4,500. There is an obvious conflict. There is no question but that the work of the district attorneys has increased decidedly, and their salaries have not been increased for years. It is not fair to have this or that district attorney singled out for an increase. Only recently my attention has been called to the need of increasing the salary of the district attorney for the eastern district of Wisconsin. I am not acquainted with the salary that should be paid to that district attorney, and I do not feel that I should be called upon to introduce a special bill when the conditions are general throughout the country, requiring increases for all. I do not like this character of legislation. That is the reason I objected a moment ago to the bill providing for an increase in the salary of the district attorney of Rhode Island. Why not have general legislation? Why single out just certain district attorneys for preferment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold it.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, this case is almost in a class by itself. In the Sixty-third Congress a Senate bill was passed providing for compensation at the rate of $4,000 per year for the United States attorney for the district of Connecticut, and the reason why that bill did not pass the House in the Sixty-third Congress was that it was after the outbreak of the European war when the Judiciary Committee favored it, and legislation of that character was not then considered in the House.

A favorable report was made by the subcommittee that had the bill under consideration. The Attorney General of the United States wrote me a letter under date of March 16 last, approving an increase of salary for the district attorney for the State of Connecticut. Judge Thomas, of the district court for the district of Connecticut, wrote me a letter under date of March 21, 1918, calling to my attention the work which is being done by the United States district attorney for Connecticut. This letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT, CHAMBERS OF THE JUDGE,
New Haven, Conn., March 21, 1918.

Hon. AUGUSTINE LONERGAN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I note in the press that the committee having under consideration the matter of increasing the salary of the United States district attorney for the district of Connecticut has reported favorably the bill providing for this increase.

I intended to write you some time ago, but the stress of business in this district has prevented me from giving this important matter earlier attention, but I write now to advise you that I am in hearty accord with the increase as provided for in the bill. I think the Congress ought to be informed by the court that the business of this district is of such volume as to require the constant attendance of the district attorney to the affairs of the Government. This fact has been true practically ever since Mr. Spellacy became the incumbent, and from present indications it will continue to increase, so that the normal run of business in this district is alone sufficient to justify the increase, and much more so is this true during these strenuous days.

From the above statement you will see that the district attorney in Connecticut has absolutely no chance to attend to any private practice, and to limit the amount of salary for this office to $2,500 is simply ridiculous. I can not escape the conclusion that every Member of the Congress would agree with me if they understood the volume of business which the district attorney transacts. As above indicated, the increase has my hearty approval.

With kind personal regards, I am,
Sincerely, yours,
EDWIN S. THOMAS,
United States District Judge.

In the State of Connecticut we have a foreign population of approximately 37 per cent. Many questions have arisen involving alien citizenship. It takes all the time of the United States district attorney to attend to the business of the office. He informs me that he has been obliged to give up his private practice; and to say that a man should devote his time day in and day out, night after night, and Sunday, on many occasions, as he states, to the work of this office for the sum of $2,500 is decidedly unreasonable. I would like to quote from a statement made by the United States district attorney for Connecticut in a recent address in the city of New Haven, referring to the work of his office. This I have taken from one of the newspapers in the State of Connecticut. He stated that—since January 1, as an instance of the work of his office, 5,500 recorded investigations had been made, and in addition more than 6,000 complaints had been investigated that were not of sufficient importance to reach the recording stage. Those figures do not include draft investigations of which there have been more than 20,000.

I doubt very seriously if there is another case parallel to this in all the States of the Union.

The population of the different other New England States and the salaries paid the United States attorneys therein follow:

Maine, 742,371; salary $3,000.
New Hampshire, 430,572; salary, $2,000.
Vermont, 355,956; salary, $3,000.
Massachusetts, 3,366,416; salary $5,000.
Rhode Island, 542,610; salary, $2,500.

Mr. STEVENSON. Do I understand that the district attorney for the whole district of Connecticut gets only $2,500 a year?

Mr. LONERGAN. That is all; and, as the report shows, this salary was fixed many, many years ago, when the duties of the office did not interfere with the private practice of the district attorney, and when the population of the State was 600,000 less than it is to-day. In war time, with the extraordinary demands on the office of the district attorney and the increased cost of living, it is obvious that the bill should receive prompt and favorable consideration. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will withdraw his objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I can not see why we should single out this district attorney, when there are so many others similarly situated, whose salaries have not been increased, even though the gentleman makes a very good case for his district attorney. The way to bring this about is, as recommended by the Department of Justice, to allow the Department of Justice to fix the salaries.

Mr. BURNETT. Is it not true that the district attorneys usually get $4,500, and that this salary is extraordinarily low?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; the district attorney for Maine gets only $3,000; for Rhode Island, $2,500; for New Hampshire, $2,000. There ought to be a general revision of these salaries.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LONERGAN. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's proposition, but evidently there is going to be objection made. The gentleman from Connecticut has made a very fine statement of his case. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is going to insist on his objection in spite of the persuasive eloquence of my friend. May we not go on?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. EVANS was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD on war and politics.

POST OFFICE AT SACRAMENTO, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 204) to provide for the fitting up of quarters in the post-office building at the city of Sacramento, Cal., for the accommodation of the district court of the northern district of California and its officers, and making an appropriation therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I notice there is no report here from the Secretary of the Treasury or the Attorney General as to the need for this bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object. The gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY], as Members know, has been ill for quite a while. He could not give the bill personal attention. I reported the bill from the Public Buildings Committee, and after the statement of the gentleman himself in the following letter the committee felt that the case was so meritorious that it was useless to undertake to secure a report from the Treasury Department. Let me read an extract from the letter of the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY]:

There are two terms of the court held at Sacramento and about 25 per cent of the court business of the Northern Judicial District of California originates in Sacramento and in territory contiguous thereto. There is no place for the court to meet in the Federal building in Sacramento. It sometimes meets in one of the superior court rooms, sometimes in the State appellate court room, and it has met in a parlor of the hotel at which the judge stops. My bill provides for an addition to the Federal building, usually known as the post-office building, in Sacramento, to provide a court room and accommodations for the court officers and the jury.

You will remember that an attempt was made to blow up the governor's mansion in Sacramento some time ago, followed by an epidemic of I. W. W. crime in the Sacramento Valley. A great many I. W. W.'s were arrested and confined in the Sacramento County jail. A special session of the United States grand jury was called and 30 or 40 of these people were indicted.

There is absolutely no place for the United States grand jury or district court to meet in Sacramento, except through the courtesy of the county or State, and it seems to me that my bill should be made a matter of urgency and passed at this session. Certainly the United States courts should have a place in which to try offenders against the Government, and if punishment is meted out to malefactors expeditiously it may deter the I. W. W. and other organizations doing the work of Germany in the United States from continuing their career of crime.

Every one of us knows the high character of the gentleman from California, his reputation for truthfulness, and the committee felt when that letter had been received from this sick man, unable to attend the sittings of the committee, that the statement carried with it such conviction as made it unnecessary for anything further.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why was not the bill referred to the Treasury Department for an estimate as to the amount that would be needed to provide adequate quarters for the district judge?

Mr. BURNETT. The bill which the gentleman from California introduced at a previous session of Congress carried an authorization of $50,000; that is my recollection, although I am not positive, and I am sure it was referred to the Treasury Department. I am not sure whether this one was or not. Mr. CURRY states in his letter that this bill is for a little more than the other on account of the increased price of labor and material. Surely $60,000 is a very moderate amount, it seems to me, for the addition to a building that will contain adequate accommodations for a Federal court, a grand jury, and a petit jury.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this one of the buildings that, when the act was passed, they agreed to furnish the building?

Mr. BURNETT. No; I have heard nothing of the kind with relation to this.

Mr. FOSTER. They do usually agree to that provision.

Mr. RAKER. This district has been in with the San Francisco for many years.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a branch court?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no separate district.

Mr. BURNETT. It is a district within itself.

Mr. FOSTER. If it establishes a branch court, they usually make provision that the people shall furnish the quarters.

Mr. RAKER. They have a Federal building there, and the only question is as to remodeling the upper story. The statement by the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] covers the whole matter. I have been in the court room, and I am acquainted with the manner of doing business.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not objecting to the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give assurance that the only purpose of this appropriation is to make alterations in the existing building—rearranging the upper floor? It is unusual to consider a bill of this character without it first having been submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. RAKER. I have consulted the judges who hold the court, and they assure me that all they desire there is these repairs.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I would like to say that I am satisfied that the bill was referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, because I know that it is the policy of the committee not to report any bill until a report has been received upon it from the Secretary of the Treasury. Why it does not appear here I can not say.

Mr. STAFFORD. Upon the assurance of the gentleman that the only purpose of the appropriation is to make alterations in the upper part of the building, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to cause to be provided and constructed in the post-office building in the city of Sacramento, Cal., quarters such as he may deem necessary and proper for the district court of the northern district of California, and its officers, at a cost not to exceed the sum of $60,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used by the Secretary of the Treasury in carrying out the provisions of the act.

The following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, line 9, after the figures "$60,000," strike out the balance of the paragraph.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide for the fitting up of quarters in the post-office building at the city of Sacramento, Cal., for the accommodation of the district court of the northern district of California and its officers."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill S. 3470, amending the Criminal Code.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri.

There was no objection.

SALE OF LAND ON SHORES OF NAVIGABLE WATERS, ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12210) to amend the act of May 14, 1898, as amended by the act of March 3, 1903, entitled "An act to extend the homestead laws and to regulate the sale and entry of public lands along the shore of navigable waters in Alaska."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is a rather important bill, and I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice, to go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

MUNICIPAL WATER SUPPLY FOR SAN DIEGO, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10587) granting to the city of San Diego certain lands in the Cleveland National Forest and the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation for dam and reservoir purposes for the conservation of water, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object; but I have no objection to having it passed over without prejudice.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice, to go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS SUSQUEHANNA RIVER, NEAR HARRISBURG, PA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12786) to authorize the Philadelphia, Harrisburg & Pittsburgh Railroad Co., its lessees, successors, and assigns to construct a bridge across the Susquehanna River, from the city of Harrisburg, Dauphin County, Pa., to the borough of Lemoyne, Cumberland County, Pa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute at this time for this bill the bill S. 4871, of similar title, and identical in terms with the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 4871 be considered in lieu of House bill 12786. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Philadelphia, Harrisburg & Pittsburgh Railroad Co., its lessees, successors, and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Susquehanna River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or about 4,250 feet west of Philadelphia, Harrisburg & Pittsburgh Junction, city of Harrisburg, county of Dauphin, State of Pennsylvania, to a point in the borough of Lemoyne, county of Cumberland, State of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DEWALT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The bill H. R. 12786 was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, will the remainder of this calendar be the unfinished business to-morrow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products, and further insists upon its amendment numbered 28, still in disagreement.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 12402) to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, October 4, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WEBB: A bill (H. R. 13041) fixing a limitation of time for bringing suits against the United States in certain cases; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SINNOTT: A bill (H. R. 13042) providing for the extension of time for the reclamation of certain lands in the State of Oregon under the Carey Act; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. GRIFFIN: A bill (H. R. 13043) providing for the erection and completion of a public building in the Borough of the Bronx, New York City, in the State of New York; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DARROW: A bill (H. R. 13044) granting a pension to John C. Eckert; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FIELDS: A bill (H. R. 13045) granting an increase of pension to Ransom Forrest; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEAVER: A bill (H. R. 13046) granting an increase of pension to Levi Jones; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition from Lewis Benecke, commander Pinhart Post, No. 268, Department of Missouri, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the passage of Senate bill 130, providing for the granting of ex-officers of the Army and Navy, serving during the Civil War, pay as retired officers of the Army and Navy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also (by request), petition from Henry L. West, executive secretary of the National Security League of New York, favoring the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States embodied in the joint resolution that no person shall be qualified as an elector in any State who shall not be a citizen of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), petition of Miss Alva A. Busse, secretary of the Women's Committee of the Independence League of New York, N. Y., urging Congress to enact eight-hour laws for all industries and industrials in the United States; to the Committee on Labor.

Also (by request), petition of T. H. Farris, favoring the practice of osteopathy in the Medical Department of the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also (by request), petition from Montaville Flowers, president of the International Lyceum and Chautauqua, favoring absolute prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), petition from Ernest Bohn, secretary of the Manhattan Branch of the American Alliance for Democracy, denouncing the strike of the machinists at Bridgeport, Conn., and indorsing W. H. Johnson in ordering the men back to work and the pronunciamento of President Woodrow Wilson to them; to the Committee on Labor.

Also (by request), petition from John Fotzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, of Chicago, Ill., and C. E. Maxwell, president of the Federal Employees Union of Kansas City, Mo., urging the passage of the Nolan minimum wage bill; to the Committee on Labor.

Also (by request), petition from Luther C. Steward, president National Federation of Federal Employees; Agnes Nestor, chairman National Legislative Committee of the National Trade Union League of America; Thomas F. Flaherty, secretary and treasurer of the National Federation of Postal Employees; and Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, all of Washington, D. C., urging the passage of the Nolan bill (H. R. 152); to the Committee on Labor.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, October 4, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Draw near to us, O God, our heavenly Father, in the beauty of holiness, as we draw near to Thee for light to guide, strength to uphold and sustain us in this vale of tears through which we are passing.

> The air is full of farewells to the dying,
> And mourning for the dead;
> The heart of Rachel, for her children crying,
> Will not be comforted.

Strengthen our faith, make strong our hearts, that we may pursue the right as it is given us to see the right, until the star of hope shall illumine the world; love destroy hate and the ruling passion of every heart be peace; to the glory and honor of Thy holy name, in the spirit of Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. The name of "Ross" that appears in the Journal ought to be changed to "Rose," and, without objection, that change will be made.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Maine rise?

Mr. HERSEY. To ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD on war profits.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to extend his remarks on the subject of war profits. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following telegram:

SALISBURY, MD., October 3, 1918.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:
Please have me excused for 10 days, account illness in family.
JESSE D. PRICE.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent, Mr. SCHALL was granted indefinite leave of absence, on account of liberty-loan speeches.

Mr. HUDDLESTON was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of sickness in the family.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, it is very evident that while there is a respectable attendance of the House in town there is no quorum here, and it also appears to me that the usual stringent methods to get a quorum ought not to be resorted to at the present time. Members who are absent, it is to be assumed, are not absent for political reasons; politics has been adjourned until the liberty-loan drive is over. Most of them and perhaps all of them are engaged in the liberty-loan drive. They ought not to be arrested and brought back here, and it is not necessary to do it. The unfinished business this morning is the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and we ought to get through with that by 3 o'clock this afternoon. After that time the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] has the permission of the House to take up 8 or 10 bills which have received a favorable report from the Committee on Military Affairs, subject to objection that may be made. After that time the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL], from the Committee on Rules, will ask recognition for the purpose of presenting a rule to consider at this time the matter of the Dawson Springs Sanitarium in Kentucky. After that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] exepcts to attempt to bring up his public-health bill. It is apparent from statements made on the floor yesterday that it will be impossible to obtain unanimous consent for three-day recesses over next week, and we are proceeding here now with these war measures subject to the will of any Member of this House. But if as these matters proceed any Member of this House raises the point of no quorum I shall move to adjourn, and I shall move to adjourn after that every day after the reading of the Journal, until Monday, October 14—a week from next Monday—at which time it is expected the $8,000,000,000 appropriation bill will be ready for consideration by the House and, of course, it is necessary to have a quorum here then, and all Members will be notified to be here at that time, and if there is not a quorum here then, and the point is made, it will be necessary to bring them here. If that bill is not ready by the 14th of October, and if by the interposition of the point of no quorum the consideration of these war measures has been postponed, these war measures will be taken up then with a quorum. After the passage of the appropriation bill several days will elapse before the bill gets back from the Senate, and during that period of time we will endeavor to maintain a quorum here for the consideration of these war measures if they have not been completed before then and the point of no quorum forces me to move an adjournment. And in this program I ask the cooperation of the minority leader.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman did not mention among the bills which were to be considered a bill which was brought up on the Unanimous Consent Calendar yesterday which relates to proof of deaths in the service of men who are holding insurance. I had understood that request would be made for the consideration of that bill and I understand it is quite important in view of the situation.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I am not advised as to that bill, but I will say whoever is interested can ask unanimous consent to consider it after we have considered these other measures.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will.

Mr. ROGERS. There are many pages of bills on the Private Calendar. I wondered if the acting majority leader could indicate to the House what the program is with respect to all those bills?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Well, there is no present program with respect to bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman has no intention of setting apart a day at the present time for their consideration?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Not at the present time, unless there be some great demand for it, but a day may be set aside when we get a quorum here after the 14th of October.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will.

Mr. DENISON. Will my colleague state, if he can, what is the intention of the majority after we shall have passed the appropriation bill with reference to taking recesses until after the election and about how long would such recesses be for?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will state to my colleague from Illinois that we ought to pass the appropriation bill by the 21st or 22d of October in all probability; of course, this is only guesswork. I have just read in the paper this morning the statement as to the letter written by Secretary McAdoo to the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, and that makes it impossible for me at this time to make any suggestions with reference to recesses after we pass the appropriation bill. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] that I know something about the revenue bill. My committee worked on that bill every day from the 5th day of June until we passed it a few days ago, and I think there is no member of the Ways and Means Committee, and all of them know the tremendous labor involved in the consideration of that bill, who will expect it to be passed by the Senate before the election. But I see they are speeding up over there, and therefore it is impossible for me to make any suggestion as to what is going to happen after the appropriation bill is passed. It may be possible to make some statement when the Members come back here on Monday, the 14th.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I ask for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, five minutes more will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I take it from what the gentleman has said that all Members are expected to be in their seats a week from next Monday?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. So that if a person should go home now, it would be expected he would be back in his seat by a week from next Monday?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes, sir. That is the largest appropriation bill in the history of nations, and we ought to have a quorum here when it comes up.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the purpose is a very worthy one.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARNHART. For several Congresses there has been pending a bill from the Committee on Printing seeking to change the method of document distribution whereby there might be great saving in the expense of congressional printing and franking and saving in the use of paper, and yet enable the Members of Congress to have the documents they want and need for their districts. The bill as first drawn also carried the matter of salaries in the Government Printing Office and the general reorganization of that office, and it was passed by the House twice and by the Senate once, but never twice in the same session. The bill has been changed, as it is introduced now, to cover only the matter of the distribution of documents and economies in the use of paper. It would probably take half a day to pass the bill, and I know that every Member of Congress is interested in the conservation of paper at a time when it is so greatly needed; and if during this time we might have one day set apart for the consideration of this bill, while it is not a war measure, I believe it would be one of the most efficient steps that the Congress could take in the matter of creating a saving for the Government and also in contributing to the convenience and helpfulness of the Members in the distribution of public documents, and I am wondering if we might have time in the period mentioned to take the bill up. It is a privileged bill and could be called up at any time. It needs no rule.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will say to the gentleman that I am afraid not. It is not a war measure, and we are anxious to dispose first of these war measures, although I realize the importance of the bill and the gentleman has clearly stated its object. I hope it will be possible to bring it up, but I am afraid it will not be possible.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. There is another bill, now before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that I should like very much to have considered if it is possible to have it done. The various railroads of the country were given a kind of exemption under the power that has been granted to the Director General of Railroads, and the Atlantic Coast Line Co. and other railroads in my part of the country are taking advantage of it in a most outrageous way. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] has introduced a bill for the purpose of relieving that situation. The amendments which he proposes were included in the original bill, but were stricken out in the Senate.

Now, I would call attention to two cases as an evidence of what they are doing down there. Recently the Supreme Court of the United States dismissed a writ of certiorari in one of these cases in which final judgment had been rendered. The tax agent of the Atlantic Coast Line, Mr. Joseph, in a sworn statement filed in the auditor's office of Florence County, S. C., on February 22, 1918——

Mr. GILLETT. Has the bill been reported yet?

Mr. RAGSDALE. No.

Mr. GILLETT. Then what is the use of considering it now?

Mr. RAGSDALE. I simply wanted to learn if I can get this incorporated in this program.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will say to the gentleman that I am afraid not. If the gentleman gets it reported out by the committee——

Mr. RAGSDALE. At least I would like to ask the gentleman this question: The report of the tax agent of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, filed in the Florence County auditor's office, shows that this property, under the sworn statement of the tax agent, is not necessary for the daily running of the railroad. At the same time it is shown affirmatively here in letters to me that a large part of this property is utilized as farm land out there, planted in corn, and leased out by the Atlantic Coast Line Co. And yet Mr. Payne, counselor to the Director General of Railroads, has taken the position to-day that judgment should not be collected from this company; that this property is exempt from taxation on the ground it is necessary to run the railroads, although it is now and has been continuously planted in corn for years, fields of land that are lying inside and outside of the corporate limits of the town.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman means that it is exempt from levy.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I mean levy. I thank the gentleman. And it seems to me that before we take a recess of any kind, and before we are willing to agree to a recess of any kind, this ought to be corrected.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think the gentleman ought to have a report from his committee before he makes a threat like that to the House.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Representative STEVENSON has been in person to the chairman of this committee, and I have been in person to the chairman of this committee. We have been unable to get a report on this bill up to this time. The bill sleeps in the committee, where it has been sleeping peacefully since it was introduced.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman can not get the House to consider it until the committee has first reported on it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I know; but I would like to get the House to know of some of these things, and how things are being handled where we have delegated powers to the railroads.

Mr. SIMS. I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina that I am not opposed to the consideration of the bill he refers to.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Now, I decline to yield further. I will state to the gentleman from South Carolina that he has made a very excellent case for his bill, and I hope he will present it to the committee and get it done.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] referred to me, I wish to say, although I have not consulted with Members on this side, that personally I entirely concur with the wisdom of the suggestion which the gentleman from Illinois has made, and personally I assure him that I shall cooperate with him. I think his program is wise, and I approve and will support his motions to adjourn when he makes them. [Applause.]

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill in order on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

The first business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 156) to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the continuation of the war in which the United States is now engaged, and until midnight of December 31 of the year following that in which such war is concluded.

The title of the joint resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts withhold his objection a moment until I can make a statement?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I will withhold it.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, in the last Congress a bill was passed exempting owners of mining claims from doing $100 worth of assessment work during the years 1917 and 1918. This law will expire of itself on the 31st day of December this year.

Now, it has been thought by the Mining Committee, considering the Senate resolution, that this law ought to be continued throughout the duration of the war, and on account of the scarcity of labor. It has been asked by the mining men of the West. There is not a single, solitary man in the district I have the honor to represent who is interested in the least degree, so far as I know, in this resolution. I have tried to get this resolution up, because I believed it was to the interest of those who live in the West, and I have been importuned from time to time by those interested and asked that this resolution be passed.

Now, I think under those circumstances this law ought to be renewed until the close of the war. There is an amendment placed on the resolution to the effect that no mining claim located after the 1st day of January, 1919, shall have the benefits of this law, so as to exclude those who might go out and locate a large number of these claims.

I think this resolution ought to be passed at this time. The next session may be a very congested session, and as we all know, the closing session of a Congress usually is congested, and the coming one is likely to be particularly engaged with war measures. I do not know whether we can get consideration of the resolution at the next session. If the mining men of the West do not want it, then I have no desire on earth to press it for consideration. I want to accommodate those in the West where they believe, on account of the scarcity of labor, that they can not get men to do this work, which in many cases would be work thrown away, although the miner all the time goes forward in the hope that he may strike something, and he wants to hold his claim. As I said, I have no personal interest in it at all, but I want to accommodate that class of men throughout the West who go out with a little grubstake and work in order to find some metal of advantage to themselves and to the people of the country. That is the reason why I insist that this resolution be put through at this session now, so as to take care of that situation.

I realize that this would not have effect for some time to come, but here is the opportunity to do it. Now is the time that it ought to be done, when we have time to look after these things, and not wait until another session comes around, when we may not be able to take up this resolution and consider it.

Of course, if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has a serious objection to this resolution I will not press it further and will let it go. I do not know whether it will be possible to call it up or not. I want to help these people, these miners, who go out with a little grubstake, as I said, and dig in the hills in the hope of finding something, and at this time, when labor is so scarce, we should not require these men to perform the $100 worth of work.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

Mr. WALSH. I will withhold my objection so that the gentleman from Wyoming may proceed.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, as it is very evident that objection will be made to the consideration of the resolution, I do not care to take the time of the House further than to say that if the war continues it will be important and essential to extend the present law to cover at least the next fiscal year; that is, the year 1919. The claims are fully protected for this calendar year, but if the war continues it will be equally important, and even more important, as we send large numbers of men into the field, to have this exemption made during the year 1919.

As the resolution will not be considered, however, for some little time, I want to make this suggestion to the Members with regard to the resolution in order that they may have it in mind: The resolution provides that this exemption from the requirement of assessment work shall continue for one year succeeding the year in which the war terminates.

Mr. FOSTER. December 31 of the year in which the war terminates.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Until December 31 of the year following that in which the war terminates.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. December 31 of the year following that in which the war terminates. In other words, if the war were to terminate on the 1st day of January, or the 2d, or at any time thereafter, this relief from the necessity of doing assessment work would extend during that entire year and during the entire year following.

Mr. FOSTER. If that is all the objection that is made, we will strike it out.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has given notice that he will object to present consideration; I am simply suggesting a matter for consideration when the bill may be taken up later.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman from Wyoming, who comes from the West, where mining is a matter of great interest, wants to object to the bill, I have not the slightest objection to his doing so.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Illinois knows perfectly well my attitude in the matter. The bill can not be considered now on account of the opposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I think when we take it up later we should consider the feature I have referred to.

Mr. FOSTER. Why, certainly it can be considered.

Mr. MONDELL. And I will say to the gentleman that I have very grave doubts whether people from the West want exemption from the performance of assessment work for practically two years after the close of the war.

Mr. FOSTER. We will be glad to accept an amendment if the gentleman wants to offer it; and if the gentleman does not want the bill to be considered now, I have no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill. The objection is made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. FOSTER. I know; but the gentleman is not advocating the bill now.

Mr. MONDELL. As a matter of fact, I have very grave doubts as to the propriety of passing the bill in its present form.

Mr. FOSTER. Then let us amend it.

Mr. MONDELL. A great many people in the West are tremendously interested in oil placer claims. There is no relief as to those claims in this bill, but I make no quarrel with it.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman can offer an amendment to that part of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not quarrel with that provision of the bill, but I think there is a good deal of doubt as to whether it is wise to extend this relief for two years after the close of the war. When the war closes we are going to have a great many men coming back here who will be desirous of developing mineral claims, and we do not want thousands and tens of thousands of acres in the West tied up for two years after these boys come back.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me suggest to the gentleman that that can be very easily remedied in this bill now.

Mr. MONDELL. The objection is not mine at all.

Mr. FOSTER. I realize that.

Mr. MONDELL. I call the gentleman's attention to that feature of the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. I am trying to enlist the gentleman's help, for I know he is an able assistant in this matter.

Mr. MONDELL. My suggestion is that it would be very well indeed for the gentlemen from the West to consider that feature of the legislation carefully and have it in mind when it is brought up.

Mr. LOBECK. Why can not that be done to-day?

Mr. MONDELL. The objection is made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. FOSTER. It is very easy to put that in and pass the bill.

Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman from Wyoming is so familiar with matters pertaining to mining and to the West that it would be very easy for him to offer an amendment covering that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RUCKER). Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I objected when the original resolution came up, and this resolution only accords with the predictions I made at that time, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS LITTLE CALUMET RIVER, COOK COUNTY, ILL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12773) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Little Calumet River, in Cook County, State of Illinois, at or near the village of Riverdale, in said county.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I notice in the report that there is more than the customary report from the Secretary of War on this bill. The Acting Secretary directs attention to the fact that the Little Calumet River is not a stream used for commercial navigation, but merely for pleasure craft. I should like to inquire of some member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce as to the reason why they reported this bill, when the stream is only used by pleasure craft.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] reported this bill. He was here a few moments ago. I do not recall any of the facts connected with it, offhand.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over until the gentleman from Michigan returns.

Mr. ESCH. I can state the facts about it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw my request.

Mr. ESCH. We have already passed bills for the construction of bridges across the Calumet River. Evidently it is considered by the War Department as navigable. This provides for the crossing of the Calumet River by the Illinois Central Railroad Co. with an eight-track bridge, and evidently it is considered very necessary to be constructed at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. MONDELL. The Little Calumet River is not only navigable, but it is navigated for a considerable distance—a hundred miles.

Mr. ESCH. So that the whole stream is considered navigable, and they have come to Congress heretofore to get permission to build bridges over it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will not interpose any objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Illinois Central Railroad Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge across the Little Calumet River at or near the village of Riverdale, in Cook County, Ill., at a point where its right of way intersects said river, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable streams," approved March 23, 1906, which said bridge shall be of sufficient width for the construction of eight tracks thereon, with the necessary clearance between said tracks over and across said river, upon plans and specifications to be approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "construct," insert a comma and strike out the word "and."

Page 1, line 6, after the word "maintain," insert the words "and operate."

Page 1, line 6, after the word "bridge," insert the words "and approaches thereto."

Page 1, line 7, after the word "River," insert the words "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

Page 1, line 9, strike out the words "at a point where its right of way intersects said river."

Page 2, line 1, strike out the word "an," where it first occurs in the line, and insert in lieu thereof the word "the."

Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "streams," and insert in lieu thereof the word "waters."

Page 2, lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, strike out the words "which said bridge shall be of sufficient width for the construction of eight tracks thereon, with the necessary clearance between said tracks over and across said river, upon plans and specifications to be approved by the Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any of these amendments? If not, they will be put in gross.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RESERVATION OF LAND AS PART OF OREGON NATIONAL FOREST.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3225) to reserve as a part of the Oregon National Forest certain lands that were revested in the United States pursuant to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Oregon & California Railroad Co. against the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all of the land contained within the grant by the United States to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. that was revested in the United States pursuant to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Oregon & California Railroad Co. against United States (238 U. S., p. 393), and an act of Congress approved June 9, 1916, that lies within that part of the Oregon National Forest that is described in the proclamation of the President under date of June 17, 1892, and designated as Bull Run National Forest, be, and the same hereby is, reserved and set aside as a part of the Oregon National Forest.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MCARTHUR, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE NAVY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 10747, a bill for the better administration of justice in the Navy.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of bills on the calendar which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, desires to ask for the passage of to-day, but he is confined to his home by sickness. The bills were considered in committee during my absence on official business, and I will ask that the bills be passed over without prejudice until some time later in the day, in order that I may familiarize myself with the hearings before the committee. I make that request as to all bills relating to the Navy, namely, Calendar Nos. 188 to 194, inclusive, and also 199.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suggest that the gentleman's bills be considered after the bills that are called up by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think I can be ready in a short time.

Mr. STAFFORD. But that would give a regular order to them.

Mr. WALSH. Why not consider them now?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has said that he wishes to familiarize himself with the facts in relation to the bills; that the chairman of the Naval Committee is ill, and he wants a little time to look over the facts in relation to them.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I have just been informed of the chairman's illness.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman can do that by the time we have finished the calendar?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Would it not be better for the gentleman to state the hour, so that we can know when the bills are to be taken up?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Very well; I will say at half past 2 o'clock.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I suggest that instead of going to the foot of the calendar the bills referred to by the gentleman from Alabama be given priority at half past 2 o'clock.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, one of these bills I am interested in, and I would like to have some time stated when the bills come up. I do not object to any definite time.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will ask, then, Mr. Speaker, that the bills be passed over until half past 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that Calendar Nos. 188 to 194, inclusive, and also Calendar No. 199, be passed over without prejudice until half past 2 o'clock to-day. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. But we may be through with the calendar at that time.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will amend my request—until half past 2 or until the completion of the call of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ELDORADO, KANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12881) to increase the cost of the public building at Eldorado, Kans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Florida make a statement as to the urgency of this legislation?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I will state that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES], who has this bill in charge, is detained at the department on very important business and could not be here at this moment. He expected to be here. The report of the committee fully explains the situation. The public-building act of March 4, 1913, authorized the purchase of a site and the erection of a building at Eldorado, Kans., the limit of cost being $60,000. The Treasury Department, in pursuance of that authorization, advertised for bids three separate and distinct times. Each time the bids were higher than the authorization, and it was utterly impossible for them to enter into a contract. The Treasury Department stated, after purchasing a site and making reservation for lock boxes, equipment, and so forth, the balance available for the construction of the building was approximately $47,000. They state that the work had been advertised at three different times, and the last proposal received was in excess of the balance available. The last time it was advertised, the proposal received was in excess of the balance available by approximately $15,500. They say that there is no assurance that they can place the contract, and, of course, with the great increase in cost of labor and materials, it is very much more unlikely now than when the bids were advertised for.

I want to state that I am informed, and the committee was informed, that this town of Eldorado increased from a population of 3,500 in two years to 18,000 people. They discovered oil there, and there was a great influx of population, and it has grown enormously. Public business, as you might say, is hardly being conducted at all.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the facts are that Eldorado is in the center of one of the largest oil fields that have been discovered lately in the mid-continent field. The increased population has been out of all proportion to the capacity of the postal department to attend to the business.

Mr. HELVERING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. HELVERING. And this is not a flush-flow oil field; it is a general oil field.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; it is an oil field which is very substantial. The large oil folks have run permanent pipe lines in there, and it is as near a permanent oil field as you will find anywhere in the whole country. I know nothing whatever about the details with respect to this office. I do know that there have been unusual demands for increase in postal facilities there.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I happen to have in my district a town of about 40,000 which is in exactly the same condition about post-office facilities. That is the town of East Orange. I did not understand, and I want to know, whether it is the policy of the Committee on Public Buildings in each case, where they have made an appropriation for a post office and it can not be built on account of the rise in materials, to grant relief of this sort? I had not understood it before.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state to the gentleman that the committee has not adopted any general policy in that regard, but I think that where an authorization has been made heretofore and it is utterly impossible to get a building that will be within the limits of cost as authorized, where the department says it is urgently necessary that something be done, as, for instance, in a case like this, where, instead of having a population of 3,500 people, there are 18,000 people——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. In my case there are 40,000 people who have to be served.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not think the committee would hesitate to recommend a bill.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I had understood that during the war nothing of that sort was to be done.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is a sort of war measure.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I know that in my city the post-office facilities are frightfully overcrowded. That city has increased a great many more thousands of people than this, though, of course, not relatively so. The Secretary of the Treasury has sent to Congress, and it is before the gentleman's committee, a recommendation that the post-office facilities there be immediately increased.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. I have no doubt that there are a great many such cases. This case may be very much more imperative than any of the others, but I supposed they were not going to take up any of them.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I want to state to the gentleman that in the case of his city it is the purpose of the committee to report those bills, but here are the facts: The Secretary of the Treasury sent a letter to the Speaker in which he called attention to the conditions existing, I think, in about 45 cities throughout the country, and in which he and the Postmaster General urged that legislation be enacted which would relieve that congestion. They said it was urgently necessary in these particular cases. When the matter came before the committee to be considered it was suggested that these Cabinet officers had not stated that these were the only ones in that situation. In other words, they based it on the proposition that there ought to be at least 60 square feet of floor space to each employee working in the office.

Mr. GILLETT. There is nothing like that in my city.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understand that is true, and the committee decided that we ought not to "make flesh of one and fowl of another," and that we would call upon the Post Office Department to furnish us with the information as to whether or not these were all that were in that condition, because we did not want to report 45 to the House and have gentlemen get up on the floor and state that they had cities in their districts that were in as bad or worse condition. We have called on him for that information. He has not yet furnished it. I had a letter a day or two ago from him. He has called on the postmasters all over the country for detailed information, and he is collating that now. We will get that within a few days, and then I may say that it is the purpose of the committee to report a bill carrying all cities where there is less than 60 square feet of floor space to each employee.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Ought not this to wait until then?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. They have not any at all there; and it is utterly impossible to rent any in this town.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be a dog in the manger, and it may be that this is a much more pressing case than in my own city. Therefore I shall not object.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The committee is unanimously of the opinion that this is a case that is extremely pressing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire whether the committee made any inquiry as to the change in the drawings and specifications whereby the building could be erected for $80,000, rather than $95,000, as the limit of expense?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman will notice that they state that in order to construct a building in accordance with the original drawings, it will be necessary to increase the limit of cost in this project to $95,000, and to carry out the work in accordance with the revised drawings will require the limit of cost to be increased to $80,000. They revised the drawings, cutting down the space considerably in order to see if they could not get within the amount authorized.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was it a reduction of space or a reduction of material and ornamentation?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think it reduced the space.

Mr. STAFFORD. I had a similar case some years ago where the appropriation was not adequate to meet the original specifications, and upon a change of specifications, substituting brick for stone, we were able to have the building. This is a considerable increase. The department says the building can be erected according to the modified drawings for $85,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. An addition of $35,000, but the gentleman will understand that when this authorization was made of $60,000, it was in contemplation of a small city of 3,500 population, and the committee thought $35,000 increase was little enough, as they had a population of 18,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the Secretary of the Treasury particularly recommends, if the committee wishes to follow the modified drawings, $80,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The Secretary does not recommend that this plan be adopted. He states it can be built according to the revised plan for $80,000, and the committee thought while we were at it we should authorize them to build somewhat commensurate with the needs of the city.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If the gentleman will allow me, I had understood, and wish to know whether I was wrong in that understanding, that it was the policy of the Government, when so much absolutely necessary war work was needed and when not only money but masons, builders, and artisans were in such demand, that it was their policy not to do any building of this sort but to insist that we should get along with what we had.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I do not think it goes that far, and it seems to me absolutely necessary that the mails of this country should be maintained in some sort of fashion.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am talking of the use of masons and builders and the people who are so much needed in absolutely war work.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, they desire it, and I suppose they know where to get people to build it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. With the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has the floor.

Mr. MADDEN. The National Council of Defense and the War Industries Board have substantially directed that no public improvements of any kind shall be permitted in States or municipalities or counties throughout the States, not even public-school buildings, fire-department houses, street pavements, or sidewalks. They say that the public schools, if needed, shall consist of movable wooden buildings; and in the face of the recommendation of this Council of National Defense and the War Industries Board, how can the Congress of the United States justify itself in ordering the construction of a post-office building?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have even heard—I do not know of my own knowledge—that this War Industries Board stopped the building of certain churches.

Mr. MADDEN. Stopped everything everywhere. I would like to know how we can justify an appropriation for the construction of a building or addition to a building already constructed in the face of the dictum on the part of the Government authorities that under no circumstances will material be allowed to be transported for any improvements undertaken by a State, not even for the education of the children of the State. And even while this order is in existence we are building an addition to the Geodetic Survey over here; that is, we are seeming to put up an addition to it. I notice that they have been at work on the ground under the sidewalk, below the sidewalk, a long time, making very little, if any, progress, but spending the public money just the same for the purpose of doing work for the civil branches of the Government that have nothing to do with the war; and while we are doing this by the Government of the United States the Government itself is saying that the people all over the Nation within the States shall have no right to do the same thing. Now, I do not see how we can justify what the gentleman from Florida is advocating.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, certainly the gentleman does not think all the functions of the Government ought to cease because we are in a war. I do not believe we ought to be extravagant, but here is a place where 18,000 American people are located and where they have practically no mail facilities and can not rent a foot of space for love or money, and it does seem to me it is a case——

Mr. MADDEN. And I come from a city with a population of 2,500,000 where the order of the Government of the United States has been literally obeyed not to construct any building of a public character or private character unless it has to do with war work. The construction of schools is stopped, the building of sidewalks is stopped, the paving of streets is stopped, everything has been stopped, and as a result of all that we have had over 50,000 idle builders, men engaged in the building trades, walking the streets of that city looking for employment and can not find it. The war activities have taken men away from that city and imported them into congested districts where war munitions are being made, and that has resulted in emptying over 11,000 houses in one congressional district that I happen to know about; 11,000 houses. Of course, I do not know how many more houses have been emptied throughout the city, whereas if the war activities had been carried on in the city where these men are and where the housing facilities are adequate we would not have had the emptying of houses, we would not have had the idle men, we would not have had the congested districts of other places, and we would not have been compelled to build houses somewhere else at fabulous expense to the Treasury of the United States. I believe that if the policy adopted by the Government on account of the war is to be carried to its logical conclusion that there is no justification whatever for the enactment of the law pending before the House at this time and recommended by the committee of which the distinguished gentleman from Florida is the chairman. I do not want to object, and I thought that perhaps if I would state the facts that existed throughout the country that the gentleman himself will see the propriety of withdrawing the recommendation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HARDY. It seems to me we are just having a little experience meeting here, that the facts the gentleman from Illinois states are good reasons for permitting some improvements to be made. The fact is if we cut down all improvements we are going to have idle men in many places in spite of all that can be done and men who can not be transported to the centers of activities and who ought not to be so transported and who would but add to the confusion if they could get there.

The difficulty is to continue the legitimate construction of Government buildings and carrying on governmental activities without one project interfering unwarrantably with the other. Certainly unnecessary work ought to be stopped. I have many times within the last few months wondered what was the necessity for the improvement that is going on right across the street from the apartments I occupy on Sixteenth Street, where they are digging down the Meridian Hill. They have a number of laborers, and the work which is cutting down the side of that hill is preparatory, I suppose, to the erection of some monument. But how much labor has been utilized there that has been strongly needed elsewhere I do not know. But it seems to me that badly needed public buildings for State or city ought to be allowed, and the very facts the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] gives, the vacant houses and idle men in his own city, because there is no work for the workmen there, shows there must and ought to be some qualification to the order or orders forbidding the erection of various structures. I think all over this country now we have laboring men who could be utilized in local enterprises and on local structures, and that it will be absolutely necessary to modify orders forbidding the erection of private or public buildings when absolutely needed.

I think, while we are on that subject, we ought to have it understood that war work must go on; but that does not mean that all other work must stop.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. I have no doubt that the gentleman has received, as I have, appeals from men who are out of work, and can not get work, because they can not be transferred to other localities.

Mr. HARDY. I have not had such appeals, but there are communities from which they come because local work is forbidden, and I think that is what ought to be considered.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a short statement. At Eldorado, Kans., as Mr. CAMPBELL was saying, we have a building that was rented when this city was a town of less than 3,000 people. The facilities were wholly inadequate for carrying on the mail service even before this big boom came several years ago. I have been in Eldorado, and I know it is an actual fact that every available foot of space is taken up. We are trying to get a building there in which to handle the mail, because 15,000 people have come in there since this original building was rented. And I want to make this statement not because this is in my district but because I know the conditions there: That this is a progressive growth of a city that will continue and will need these facilities.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HELVERING. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is Eldorado still increasing in population?

Mr. HELVERING. Why, yes.

Mr. WALSH. And from all indications probably will continue to do so after the war?

Mr. HELVERING. Undoubtedly. The oil field there is considered one of the greatest oil fields in this country.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit a moment, I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] that that was one of the reasons the committee had in mind when they undertook to authorize the $95,000 instead of the $80,000, in order that they might build for the future in order to take care of the population at least for some years.

Mr. WALSH. I assume that all post-office buildings are built for the future.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope this item may go through, because I personally know of the absolute need for that facility there, and also know of the condition that prevents even the Post Office Department, no matter how industrious they may be from securing proper facilities, and makes them unable to do so under the present conditions.

Mr. WALSH. What is the character of the building that is now occupied?

Mr. HELVERING. The building that they now occupy is a building which was considered of sufficient capacity for the purpose of the post office when there were less than 3,000 people.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, if this building was authorized, it would not go up over night?

Mr. HELVERING. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. And it will be several months before any relief would not go up overnight?

Mr. HELVERING. Yes. There is no doubt about that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have listened very carefully to the statements that have been made here. Congress is not responsible for the suspension of work. Fortunately, we have authorized other parties and branches of the Government to suspend this work. And I do not think, in view of having granted that authorization, we ought to listen to other departments of the Government who come in here and ask for particular exceptions to be made.

Now, this town is growing, and it may be that when the war is over they will need a building which will cost $125,000 or $150,000. I think inasmuch as they have put up with this inconvenience so long, that a few months longer, or possibly a year or so longer, will not interfere with the growth of the place. And therefore I object.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go to the foot of the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL CREDIT TO THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12998) to amend section 3528 of the Revised Statutes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RUCKER). Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3528 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3528. For the purchase of metal for the minor coinage, authorized by this act, a sum not exceeding $400,000 in lawful money of the United States shall, upon the recommendation of the Director of the Mint and in such sums as he may designate, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be transferred to the credit of the superintendents of the mints at Philadelphia, San Francisco, and Denver, at which establishments, until otherwise provided by law, such coinage shall be carried on. The superintendents, with the approval of the Director of the Mint as to price, terms, and quantity shall purchase the metal required for such coinage by public advertisement, and the lowest and best bid shall be accepted, the fineness of the metals to be determined on the mint assay. The gain arising from the coinage of such metals into coin of a nominal value, exceeding the cost thereof, shall be credited to the special fund denominated the minor coinage profit fund; and this fund shall be charged with the wastage incurred in such coinage, and with the cost of distributing said coins, as hereinafter provided. The balance remaining to the credit of this fund, and any balance of the profits accrued from minor coinage under former acts, shall be, from time to time, and at least twice a year, covered into the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do so for the purpose of securing some information about this bill. I have read the report. Will the gentleman from Ohio kindly explain the purpose of the bill? I yield the floor to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend section 3528 of the Revised Statutes by increasing the amount of the minor coinage mint fund from $200,000 to $400,000. This fund was $50,000 until 1906, when it was increased to $200,000. Since then it has been continued at that same amount, $200,000.

As the Members well know, the demand for minor coinage has been greatly increased recently. Previous to 1906 the minor coinage was not in excess of 90,000 pieces per annum. During the past year there has been more minor coinage in one month than there was in any year previous to 1906. In addition to that, the cost of these metals has greatly increased.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; I will be very glad to yield.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The necessity for the increase in the minor coinage has resulted largely, has it not, from the imposition of revenue taxes, where small change must be given?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes. There is no doubt but that that is the cause of the great demand to increase the coinage of pennies and nickels.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I may call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is no such thing now, ordinarily, as a 5-cent cigar on the market.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes. It is now 6 or 7 cents, and admissions to the theaters require the extra payment of a few pennies, and 5-cent and 10-cent articles have increased 1 or 2 cents each, brought about by the provisions of the last revenue act.

This is not an appropriation. It is simply a credit fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury for the Director of the Mint for the purchase of the metals used in minor coinage.

Now, if any other gentleman wishes to ask me a question about the bill, I will be glad to answer if I can.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. With pleasure.

Mr. WALSH. The report says that the Director of the Mint is embarrassed by lack of funds to pay for a sufficient amount of metal, and has been for more than a year.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. Then they do pay out this money. It is an appropriation of money.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman will understand that it provides only for a book credit to be placed to the credit of the Director of the Mint by the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of buying the metals from which these minor coins are made, but does not appropriate money. The increase has been great, and, of course, as the demand has increased, the Director of the Mint is compelled to buy the metals in larger quantities. The metals are all bought in carload lots. This $200,000 is apportioned to the three mints; $100,000 to the mint in Philadelphia, $50,000 to the mint at Denver, and $50,000 to the mint at San Francisco.

The Director of the Mint appeared before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures and stated to the committee that he had been greatly handicapped by reason of the fact that this sum was not sufficient for him to buy the metals in as large quantities as are now needed. He is compelled to buy them in advance now in order to insure their shipment and receipt in time to meet the demands.

Mr. WALSH. But as soon as he has bought them and they are coined and turned over to the Treasury, his credit goes back again?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is true. It is a revolving fund. As soon as the metal is purchased and minted and turned into the Treasury he gets the credit for the metal and his fund is restored. But with the great increase——

Mr. WALSH. You do not think $200,000 is a large enough fund to work on?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is what the Director of the Mint informed the committee. I would like to have a letter read here from the Secretary of the Treasury. I will ask the Clerk to read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, September 25, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,
Chairman of Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures,
House of Representatives.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ASHBROOK: I beg to refer to the proposed amendment of section 3528, Revised Statutes, embodied in H. R. 12998, referred to your committee on September 24.

The minor coinage metal fund is not, as you are aware, an appropriation of a sum of money which is disposed of, but a revolving fund, which is restored as coinage is completed. The fund is the capital with which we keep the three coinage mints supplied with minor coinage metal.

The proposed amendment, if enacted into law, would have the effect of increasing the metal fund from $200,000 to $400,000. The amount was fixed at $200,000 when the yearly coinage was approximately 141,000,000 pieces of minor coin; the coinage for the last fiscal year amounted to 528,000,000 pieces, and the cost of copper has nearly doubled.

The amount expended for metal the year following the fixing of the fund at $200,000 was $369,844.06; the amount expended during the fiscal year 1918 was $1,031,262.75.

It is obvious that we are seriously handicapped by want of adequate funds for the purchase of metal required to meet the tremendous demand for minor coins, and I can not urge too strongly the necessity for early action upon the measure now before your committee for the relief of the mint establishments in the matter of procuring the required amount of copper, tin, and zinc for the manufacture of minor coins to meet the demands of the public.

Respectfully,
W. G. MCADOO,
Secretary.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. With pleasure.

Mr. LONGWORTH. With the gentleman's permission, I may say that at the time of the preparation of the revenue bill I had several conversations with Treasury officials and since then with the Director of the Mint, and I am convinced that the gentleman is absolutely right in urging that this bill be passed at once.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ASHBROOK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next one.

PROHIBITION OF EXPORTS TO THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12801) to amend section 1 of Title VII of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire of some member of the committee why they did not follow out the suggestion of the counsel of the War Trade Board and also control imports from the Philippines?

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, this measure is in the charge of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE]. I was present at the hearing, and I am informed by a gentleman named Kelliher that they are able to control the imports from the Philippine Islands, but they need authority to control the exports. I am sure after that explanation, little of which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has heard, I fear, he will have no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Still reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection whatsoever to the bill in its present form, because I can see the urgency of some such measure to control the shipping situation between this country and the Philippines. I directed an inquiry to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], but he stated that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE], who is temporarily out of the Chamber, was in charge of the bill and would explain it more in detail.

Mr. WALSH. No; I did not state that. I did not say anything about that. The gentleman is mistaken. I appreciate the fact that the gentleman was in consultation with the gentleman from Oklahoma, and had I noticed that sooner I would have deferred until he had concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be very glad to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I first made the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and he kindly consented to enlighten me upon a question regarding the punishment of espionage. Soon after the breaking out of the war we passed an espionage act providing a very heavy penalty.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to inquire what improvement this bill will be over the one we have already passed, inflicting a penalty of $10,000 and 20 years' imprisonment?

Mr. WALSH. I will state to the gentleman that the so-called espionage act was a measure made up, I think, of 12 different titles. The first title related solely to espionage. The other titles related to shipping, exports, to the use of the mails, the issuance of search warrants, and various other subjects. This measure is to amend one of the titles of the espionage act.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is not a new bill, then?

Mr. WALSH. It is not a new bill. It is to amend existing law. In drafting Title VII we did not make any provision for controlling exports to the Philippine Islands. This measure is for the purpose of providing authority to do that.

Now, to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] I will say that the representatives of the War Trade Board stated that they were able to control the imports from the Philippine Islands under existing law, but that they were not able to control the exports to the Philippine Islands, because the greater portion of the exportation was done from the Pacific coast and upon foreign vessels, and that while they might be able to refuse clearance to those vessels, they felt that the law which was passed in June, 1917, ought to be amended and made to include the Philippines specifically within its provision.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of Title VII of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, be amended by adding at the end of said section 1 the following:

"SECTION 1a. Whenever during the present war the President shall find that the public safety so requires and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export from or ship from or take out of the United States or possessions lying within the American Continent, to the Philippine Islands, any article or articles mentioned in such proclamation, except at such time or times and under such regulations and orders and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress: Provided, however, That no preference shall be given to the ports of one State over those of another."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, lines 12, 13, and 14, after the word "Congress," strike out the words "Provided, however, That no preference shall be given to the ports of one State over those of another."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE], who has charge of this bill, is detained temporarily, so I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the latter motion will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

PURCHASE OF DRY DOCK FROM MASSACHUSETTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 12982) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to purchase from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts a large dry dock and appurtenant lands.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill take the same order as that previously made concerning bills reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WALSH. That was included in the order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I withdraw the request.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3438) to prevent corrupt practices in the election of Senators, Representatives, or Delegates in Congress.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. STAFFORD. This is a short bill. Let it be read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever shall promise, offer, or give, or cause to be promised, offered, or given, any money or other things of value, or shall make or tender any contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value to any person or persons, either to vote or withhold their vote or to vote for or against any candidate, or whoever solicits, accepts, or receives any money or other thing of value in consideration of his vote for or against any candidate for Senator or Representative or Delegate in Congress at any primary or general or special election, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the word "things" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thing."

Page 1, line 8, after the word "person," strike out the words "or persons."

Page 1, line 8, after the word "withhold," strike out the word "their" and insert the word "his."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Delaware, who has this matter in charge, if we have gone along all these years without any law punishing the offense attempted to be described in this act?

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I understand that until 1896 there was a Federal statute covering this matter. This bill has been reported unanimously by the committee, after having passed the Senate unanimously. It merely confers upon the Federal courts jurisdiction in cases of bribery at elections for the election of Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. WALSH. I am asking the gentleman if there has been heretofore no Federal statute punishing the offenses here set forth?

Mr. POLK. I understand there was up until 1896.

Mr. WALSH. And then it was repealed?

Mr. POLK. That is my understanding.

Mr. WALSH. And what is the emergency, or what have been the instances of the commission of these offenses, prompting the passage of this bill at this time?

Mr. POLK. I understand there have been some prosecutions in the Middle West, where they have had to use the subterfuge of a prosecution for conspiracy. Instead of having a Federal statute covering this matter, they made prosecutions under the law against conspiracy. That is my understanding from Senator GERRY, who introduced the bill in the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman convinced that for this most serious offense—attempting by the payment of money to influence the vote of a person for or against a candidate—a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year is sufficient?

Mr. POLK. Personally I would make the penalty greater, but that was the feeling of the committee and of the Senate, and we did not change that amount in the committee.

Mr. RUCKER. These are maximum penalties, not minimum?

Mr. WALSH. The penalty ought to be a fine of $10,000.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman can offer an amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am not sure that I understand the exact change made by this bill.

Mr. POLK. It only confers upon the Federal court jurisdiction in bribery cases where they do not have jurisdiction at this time.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. Is there any Federal law which makes it unlawful to do these various things specified in this bill for the election of President and Vice President or presidential electors?

Mr. POLK. There is not, as I understand it.

Mr. DENISON. Did the committee consider the question of including in this bill bribery in the case of the election of President, Vice President, and presidential electors?

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman from Delaware will permit, I will be glad to answer. I say frankly to the gentleman that this is a Senate act and came to the House not long ago. On account of the condition of the calendar in the Senate, the friends of this measure thought it would be ill-advised to amend it in any important particular and send it back to be concurred in. For that reason it was not amended, except in minor particulars.

Mr. DENISON. Does not the gentleman think it is important to prevent bribery in the case of the election of President, Vice President, and presidential electors?

Mr. RUCKER. Absolutely.

Mr. DENISON. Does not the gentleman think that there ought to be an amendment to the bill to that effect?

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman, speaking for myself, yes; but, believing that it is essential that this legislation shall pass, I would not take the responsibility at this time of suggesting that amendment, because I think any amendment of magnitude would mean the defeat of the bill.

Mr. DENISON. If I should offer an amendment it might relieve the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. I hope the gentleman will not offer an amendment of that kind. Speaking individually, I am fully in accord with the views the gentleman has expressed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, still further reserving an objection, I think the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, who has come to be an expert on legislation of this character by reason of his service on that committee, might give us some reason why this measure is now urged and why it does not include the officers referred to by the gentleman from Illinois. If he does not, why we may not pass a comprehensive statute on the subject.

Mr. RUCKER. I have answered the gentleman from Illinois, and that ought to answer the gentleman from Massachusetts. This is a Senate bill, and the provisions mentioned by the gentleman were not in it. The House committee thought that it would be ill-advised to amend the bill in important matters, so we hesitated to make anything but purely verbal amendments.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman does not think that another body within walking distance from here is in favor of corruption and bribery in the election of these other officers?

Mr. RUCKER. No; I would say that they are not.

Mr. WALSH. Why does the gentleman fear that that sort of an amendment would defeat the passage of the measure?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not think the principle would be contended against in the other body, but it would be for want of consideration.

Mr. WALSH. They would have an opportunity to consider it if it went back amended.

Mr. RUCKER. These amendments that have been suggested are purely verbal; they neither add to nor take from the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to this fact.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman will pardon me, in further answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], let me say if the bill is considered, of course it is subject to amendment, and gentlemen can offer any amendments they choose.

Mr. WALSH. In view of the gentleman's attitude, I am afraid an amendment would not have much chance.

Mr. RUCKER. And in view of the surroundings, I am afraid my suggestions will not have much binding force on the committee.

Mr. GOOD. There is need in another direction of an amendment to the corrupt-practices act. I put in a letter the other day, showing that the Iowa Democratic Club was levying an assessment against the postmasters in violation of the criminal code, and they say they are turning it over to the National Democratic Committee. Now, the gentleman can see that by the organization of the State clubs that are not interested in the election of Members of Congress in any more than one State, they do not come within the purview of the act at all, but you use it as a cat's paw to reach out and gather in your tainted money; there is no report on it to any place, and then you bring this sort of a camouflage.

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, ought to be a little careful in his remarks; he is violating the rules of the House—I suppose, jocularly—in referring to me——

Mr. GOOD. I did not mean the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman can not suggest anything that will tend to purify elections that I will not subscribe to. I do think that some gentlemen talk in a careless way for the entertainment of the people at home and say things that ought not to be said on this floor.

Mr. GOOD. I do not know who is responsible for the resolution——

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman said, and I assume it is true, if the correspondence he read the other day is genuine, that offenses have been committed which the Department of Justice, it seems to me, ought to take cognizance of and bring these parties to the bar of justice.

Mr. GOOD. While amending the law, does not the gentleman from Missouri think that we should also consider the persons who contribute to these local State organizations and they to the National organization, and that these State organizations should make known all the contributors to their fund?

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman, a wise and good legislator, would think carefully upon the principles and the issues involved in such legislation he would find some difficulties in his way. I want to say to the gentleman that I have labored pretty hard to present to this House and the Congress a corrupt-practices act which would be effective, and, as it is sometimes said, "have teeth in it." I realize the imperfections in existing law quite as well as does the gentleman, but I have had serious difficulty in securing cooperation and I am making no criticisms against anyone on either side of the House. However, gentlemen have their views, just as the gentleman from Iowa has his and I have mine, and we can not harmonize at all times and on all matters.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman that no one has worked harder than has the gentleman from Missouri for this statute and the amendments to it.

Mr. RUCKER. Permit me to finish. At the very last meeting of the committee over which I have the honor to preside we had an agreement in a tentative form which will go quite as far as the gentleman would want us to go, and if we can agree on phraseology will enable us to present to Congress a bill drastic enough for anyone.

It is in contemplation to report a bill which will absolutely prohibit the use of money in connection with any election at which Senators and Representatives are elected, except for specified purposes which could not by any possibility result in degrading or debauching any man. That is a long step, I admit, and I suggest to the gentleman that our pathway has been strewn with many difficulties, possibly some of them constitutional. I am sure a good many provisions would be objected to, or at least might be objected to, on the ground of the administration of such a law. Difficulties surround us at every step, almost, in this legislation. I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and to other gentlemen who have engaged in this debate, I believe the pending bill ought to pass—not that it is sufficient or that it covers all of the ground that it ought to cover; I quite agree that it does not; but if gentlemen will let us go this far and pave the way for another step, I think before the Sixty-fifth Congress shall have ended its duties our committee will present legislation along the lines which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] will all agree to unless they become alarmed at it. I do not mean to question the integrity of any gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have followed the gentleman from Missouri, I think, in all of this corrupt-practices legislation. No one has done more than he; but I want to state to him that if he thinks it would be unconstitutional to require the local organizations in the various States, who are collecting money and turning it over to national committees, to make reports, I doubt then——

Mr. RUCKER. I have not said that.

Mr. GOOD. I thought the gentleman suggested that a minute ago.

Mr. RUCKER. I said there might be, going to the length we hope to go, some constitutional troubles, not in that respect; but I will say to the gentleman that there are some questions of administration that are serious, too.

Mr. GOOD. I understand that; and there are some questions of administration that are serious here.

Mr. RUCKER. If the Federal law would take cognizance of the activities of such committees as the gentleman has suggested and of other committees which the genius of man might organize, and we were to require them to report, we would have such a volume of reports that we would have no place to put them and nobody with time enough to read them. There is such a thing as overdoing the matter of reporting campaign expenses, I will say to the gentleman, and when you consider it and think about the various localities all over the United States that would have to report under such a provision as has been suggested, the gentleman would find such a multiplicity of reports that the very presence of them would make them wholly unimportant and of no material value to anyone.

Mr. GOOD. I suppose there are localities in the United States where votes are being purchased outright by candidates or parties, but I will say to the gentleman that in my State I never heard of a single case, never saw it stated in the newspapers, and never heard of a man there selling his vote.

Mr. RUCKER. I congratulate the gentleman, and the people of Iowa, and I want to say, to be entirely frank, that some of the men who have disappeared from the State of Missouri evidently did not go to Iowa, because I have heard of such things—not common by any means, but there are cases in which such things have occurred. I disclaim personal knowledge of the fact that any man has received money for his vote.

Mr. GOOD. And I have heard of and know of organizations, and I put the letter in the RECORD the other day to show how the Democratic committee of my State——

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, I heard the gentleman read the letter into the RECORD and heard his comments upon it, and I unhesitatingly concur in his denunciation of that practice. If what the gentleman stated is true in fact—and I put my reply in this form because the gentleman simply has information that it is true and does not personally know of it—if it is true, then those people are violating the law, and the postmasters who gave the contributions are violating existing law; and that leads me to think that possibly some of those fourth-class postmasters have not been changed, because I heard a long time ago, when nearly every fourth-class postmaster in the United States voted the Republican ticket, that there was a custom——

Mr. GOOD. There was a good deal to commend their actions in that regard.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman think it is any less reprehensible for a Republican to violate the law than for a Democrat?

Mr. GOOD. Not at all. If there is a Republican organization in any State in this Union that is doing what this Democratic club is doing—and I put in the RECORD the original letter, stating what it was doing, and I have it in my possession and will turn it over to the United States District Attorney to prosecute, and have said so, but they have never called upon me for that letter and never will——

Mr. RUCKER. Did the gentleman call upon the Department of Justice and impart the information he had?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. RUCKER. The Department of Justice can not take cognizance of everything that transpires here or in Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. But I put into the RECORD at the same time the report of the Civil Service Commission to show that the Department of Justice was not prosecuting violations of the law in this respect.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman has put so much in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD upon hearsay that I dare say the Department of Justice has not had a chance to read it.

Mr. GOOD. I quoted from the Civil Service Commission's published report. Why, the Civil Service Commission goes so far as to say there are heads of departments here in Washington to-day who are collecting money from persons under them, and they are threatened that if those persons do not respond they will discharge them from the service, and when the department's attention is called to it they not only refuse to prosecute but they refuse to remove that kind of person from the service.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not know about the truth or falsity of that statement, and I say candidly I doubt the correctness of it.

Mr. GOOD. It is——

Mr. RUCKER. I do not care where it is, I can not believe that is true.

Mr. GOOD. All I know, that is what the Civil Service Commission reports, and two members are Democrats and one a Republican, and they make their report unqualifiedly and unanimously. That is all.

Mr. RUCKER. On rumor.

Mr. GOOD. If we are not going to enforce the laws we have on the statute books to keep the election pure, what is the use of putting this kind of camouflage on the statute when we need other laws that are more important?

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman is opposed to passing a law to stop buying votes, I will let him object and I demand the regular order.

Mr. GOOD. I am opposed to camouflage——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. FOSTER. Then let us pass this bill.

Mr. GOOD. I am opposed to camouflage——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman will have to be opposed to himself if that is the case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma demands the regular order, and the regular order is, Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "other," strike out the word "things" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thing."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Page 1, line 8, after the word "person," strike out the words "or persons."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Page 1, line 8, after the word "withhold," strike out the word "their" and insert in lieu thereof the word "his."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WALSH. To offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Send it up.

Mr. WALSH. I move, in line 3, page 2, to strike out "1,000" and insert "5,000," and to strike out "one year" and insert "five years."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, strike out "1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "5,000," and after the word "than" strike out the words "one year" and insert in lieu thereof "five years."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this amendment proposes simply to increase the penalty in order that it may fit the crime. Now, if we are going to pass legislation to punish this very serious offense, for which there is no provision of law or has been no provision of law since 1896, it seems to me that we ought to start out with a statute that will look as though it meant to punish persons who have been convicted of doing what this prohibits. Now, it has been stated that this does not contain the offices of President and Vice President for the reason that it might endanger its passage in another body some 700 or more feet away from here. I do not think, as I recall the statement of the gentleman from Missouri, the gentleman did not make that statement because he felt that the other body was not interested in the election of the President and Vice President, but that if we attempted to amend this in any material way it might interfere with its consideration there. I submit to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri that this amendment would not fall within the class which he objected to considering when the question was asked him heretofore with reference to including the offices of President and Vice President, and if a person in certain sections of the country, a judicial officer, who might be more or less interested in politics or be beholden to one or more political leaders or perhaps may have before his elevation to the bench been actively engaged in politics, could, under the provisions of the law as it is now written, impose a fine of $1,000 for the infraction of this law, it seems to me we ought not to limit him to that imposition of pecuniary punishment. I contend if we write this law so that the only punishment that could be inflicted was a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment for five years, without leaving any discretion in the hands of the judge, that it would not be making the law any too stringent.

I trust that the amendment will be agreed to. I still contend that it is a little singular this measure should have passed the Senate upon the calendar day of July 6 and should have come over to the House and rested here until the 20th of September when practically all primary elections for the coming fall elections have been held and when the contest for nomination for these important offices are in many States at an end, because there are sections of the country where the only contest and the only opportunity to infringe this law will be at the primary election and after the primaries are over there will be no opportunities to violate the provisions of this act because after the nominations are made there are no further contests. As the chairman of the committee has stated that this seeks to punish acts for which there is no punishment now and seeks to insist that that is a sufficient reason for the passage of the law, still I believe we could find a great many things that are being done for which there is no punishment and for which no laws are proposed to provide punishment. There must be some other reason for this particular legislation which the other body that initiated it has not transferred to the distinguished committee that has this measure in charge. I have listened attentively to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri and I regret that the measure which he intends to bring out to cover not only cases of this sort but all other cases is to be deferred until some time in the future. I should have wished that the gentleman had taken the opportunity to amend this measure so as to include in it the bill or the act which contains all sorts of punishment for all sorts of offenses and put on the general corrupt-practice act as an amendment. If it had been offered as an amendment to this bill, I question very seriously whether there would have been any disposition not to consider it. We ought to pass that kind of an act and I am sure when it is reported from the committee of the gentleman it will be in such shape as to appeal to a large number of the Members on both sides of the House.

But I do still insist that this measure, now that we have it up here, ought to provide for a serious punishment for very serious offenses.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. SLOAN. I just have had this bill before me a moment. Does it provide for any punishment for the interference with voters anywhere in casting their vote or does it confine itself only to inducement for casting votes, corruption, and bribery? In other words, is there anything in the bill which would really reach perhaps the most important election consideration in this country, which is the improper prevention of men casting freely their votes, instead of granting inducements for improper casting their votes?

Mr. WALSH. I am sure I do not know what the gentleman has in mind, and I have not heard of any such cases as the gentleman states. But if there be, probably they ought to be punished. I suppose that the proper way would be, perhaps, not only to punish the person who uses improper inducement, or unduly interferes, but also punish the voter who would permit such to occur.

Mr. SLOAN. For instance, in the old Commonwealth of Massachusetts we find a vote for every four or five persons. In other States than the old Commonwealth we find only a vote for 1 out of 25 or 50, which, of course, is an extraordinary situation and can only be predicated on the assumption that somebody is preventing votes from being cast. Now, does this bill provide for or look toward remedying that situation or condition?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think this measure will act as a remedy for that situation, nor do I think any of its terms will "penetrate," to use the language of the advertisement of a famous liniment, into conditions which make possible what the gentleman has described.

I trust the amendment will be agreed to. I think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] has no serious objection to it.

Mr. GILLETT. Everybody here—at least, most everybody—is against the purchasing of votes. We would all of us vote for a bill which we really thought would prevent bribery at the polls. Perhaps this is as good a way to reach it as any other, but we all know that one of the most difficult things to prevent is the purchase of votes, and I have my doubts as to whether this will accomplish anything. At the same time, of course, nobody will vote against it. But it does seem to me extraordinary that a committee presided over by the very intelligent gentleman from Missouri, in really trying to reach a remedy for a vicious practice, has not brought in a more far-reaching bill than this.

Some of the States have found by experience that the only way to stop it is by a general corrupt-practices bill. And I am very sorry that this committee, instead of telling us, as the gentleman does, that they hope in the near future to bring in some bill which will reach it, and a bill which, of course, he knows will not be acted on by this Congress, because Congress will be so busy after this session it will not be possible to act on it—I think it is very much to be regretted that when this subject came before them and they seriously considered it, they just brought forth this miserable little bill which is only placing a penalty on the purchase of votes and not aiming to stop general political corruption. I think such a bill is very much needed.

The gentleman from Iowa has introduced one illustration, where an election bill with teeth in it is required. Some of the States have them, and I know in some of the States it has very much purified elections. I regret very much that the gentleman from Missouri has deferred it. I was going to say that I hope they will bring it in, but there is no use of indulging that hope, because we all know that any bill he brings in in the future will not have any chance of consideration. While, of course, we will vote for this I shall vote for it without feeling that it accomplishes much and with much regret that we do not really have a bill that will accomplish what is needed.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman answered his own criticisms and strictures upon the Committee on the Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress before he took his seat. After indulging in remarks more or less caustic and severe, he said he was satisfied that the committee could not bring in a bill now, at least, could not secure action on it at this session of Congress, because of existing conditions. Let me ask the gentleman how long those conditions have prevailed? What time has this Congress had since its first——

Mr. GILLETT. We had about a month from July 19 to August 19.

Mr. RUCKER. We had about a month, and the gentleman knows that on either side of this Hall there were not men enough to make a quorum.

Mr. GILLETT. You could have had it. There was not anything from the gentleman's committee for the House to look at.

Mr. RUCKER. I think the gentleman wants to be fair, and he knows that every effort that I might have put forth would have been beaten down by the cry that we have gotten along so well up to date, that we have been here so long engaged in war legislation we ought to have the privilege of retiring to our homes for a few days during the midsummer, and that such appeal would have prevented consideration of a bill of that importance, which had no relation to the winning of the war.

Let me say seriously I do not care whether the gentleman would have done so or not. I think I am forecasting what his duty would have been. Let me say to the gentleman frankly the committee in charge of this legislation has been inactive during this session for the reason that we knew in the condition of the public mind, in view of the sentiment which permeates the heart and mind of every Member of this House, we could not pass legislation which required deliberation and thought, probably several days of consideration and thought, while these great war measures were pending. For that reason, and that reason only, the committee has not come to the House with a bill.

Let me say to the gentleman that, just before this war Congress convened, your committee, in response to its duty to the membership of this House and the country, did bring in a bill very much improving the existing law, very much better legislation than is now provided. I want to say to the credit of this House, that bill was passed by the House after being patched up somewhat, but not seriously damaged; it ran the gantlet of the House in fairly good shape. But it met a horrible death at the other end of the Capitol. I am not making any political criticism or critizing any political party, because I really believe that if I could use the term "assassin" in connection with the slaughter of that bill in the other body I would have to prefer charges against some distinguished Democrats as well as, perhaps, some distinguished Republicans. But we passed a bill through the House which was vastly better than the existing law. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], does he mean to condemn the committee for not presenting a bill here since the war Congress convened, since we have been compelled to enter this vortex of war, when the entire thought of the country is on war legislation? When could we have considered it?

Mr. GILLETT. I will be frank with the gentleman, and I will admit that the gentleman's argument has a good deal of sense and justice in it.

Mr. RUCKER. I am glad the gentleman admits the wisdom of my suggestion, although he did that with hesitation.

Mr. GILLETT. I think they might have reported a bill and have given us something to do, even if the House could not take it up.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me say to the gentleman in response to that suggestion—and I speak seriously, believing that the membership of the House wants wise and effective legislation—within the last few months deliberations over those great questions have proven of value to some gentlemen.

To-day gentlemen charged with responsibility can offer suggestions which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and others will accept, which six months ago or three months ago would not have been offered and would not have been agreed to if offered. Much of the wisdom of legislation is derived or springs from a conscious knowledge or observation of those things which call legislation into action; and by reason of occurrences, or what are alleged to have been occurrences, in the country, I think that those charged with responsibility are now in better shape to legislate than they would have been some time back.

I hope in due course to be able to satisfy the gentleman and all gentlemen at least of one proposition, and that is that the Committee on the Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress is seriously anxious and desirous of enacting law which will accomplish the great purpose which it is hoped to accomplish in the purification of elections.

Now, the other gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who sometimes assumes the rôle of critic, also ventured the suggestion here a while ago that it was significant that the House committee which reported this bill did not see fit to do it until after the primaries had been held. I quote only the substance of the gentleman's statement. There is an implication in the gentleman's statement that ought not to pass unchallenged. Let me say to the gentleman, notwithstanding the fact that the RECORD shows this bill was referred to the House committee, I believe, on July 8, as a matter of fact the bill was not transmitted to the committee until long after that date, and, as a matter of fact, I did not know of its existence at that time. The gentleman may say I do not read the RECORD closely. That is true. I did not see it. I did not know that this bill had passed the Senate. I never knew of its passage in the Senate until a Senator came to my office and called my attention to it.

Now, if my position is open to criticism, criticism can be made; but let me say, in further response to the gentleman, I had no purpose in withholding it. I would have been glad to have given it passage through this House at the earliest possible hour, as I am anxious to have it passed to-day. There has been no delay or reluctance, so far as the House committee is concerned, in reporting a complete corrupt-practices bill from any mercenary or personal or improper reason or cause.

Let me say again, in response to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], who addressed the committee last, that even when this bill was considered and after a report had been made I announced to my friend and colleague, the ranking member of that committee, Mr. MAPES, of Michigan, that I believed I would appeal to the gentleman who was directed to report the bill not to report it until we could bring in an amendment to it which would have been much more far-reaching than the terms of this bill. I would have pursued that course if it had not been for the insistence of gentlemen who were interested and desired this legislation passed at this session of this Congress.

Now, with reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], it is well known by gentlemen who have had experience in connection with the enforcement of criminal laws that about the most unwise thing that can be done, the thing that sacrifices public interest more than anything else in connection with the enactment or enforcement of a criminal law, is the severity of the penalties imposed. A penalty which impresses the minds of jurors and courts as being unreasonable or unconscionable has the effect of chloroforming to death otherwise good legislation. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], in support of his motion to amend, somewhat criticizes the thought that a thousand dollars or one year's imprisonment is considered adequate punishment for the crime of bribery. I do not quite agree with him.

It is certainly not excessive. But let me remind the gentleman that there are more convictions where the juries have wide margins to impose penalties than there are in cases where juries are required to impose penalties which are excessive in the judgment of the jury, or a part of the jury. I think the most disastrous thing, so far as society is concerned, that can be done by a legislative body is the enactment of too severe penalties for a breach of the law.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman speaks of juries imposing penalties. In some jurisdictions the juries have nothing to do with the imposition of penalties and do not even know what the penalties may be.

Mr. RUCKER. I realize that; but in some jurisdictions they do have to do with it.

Mr. WALSH. I was not aware that in the Federal courts they had.

Mr. RUCKER. I think in the Federal courts probably the jury does not. I think it simply finds the defendant guilty or not guilty, and the court fixes the punishment. I am not sure that is true, but I think so. In some State jurisdictions the jury does fix the penalty.

Mr. DENISON. I was going to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question that was asked a while ago of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. POLK] as to whether or not there is any Federal law upon this subject at this time, and if so, what it is?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not want to commit myself, because my answer must be founded more upon information than knowledge; but in my judgment there is none.

Mr. DENISON. It was stated a while ago by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. POLK] that there was formerly a law upon this subject which was repealed in 1896. Does the gentleman from Missouri happen to know anything about that?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not know anything about its repeal, or any reason assigned for its repeal; but just speaking offhand, my opinion is that it was a part and parcel of a general scheme of legislation with reference to elections that was repealed, and this criminal provision, of course, went with the balance of it. I do not care to say that which might provoke gentlemen to discuss matters that pertain to locality, but there was once a bill which, whether rightfully or wrongfully, was called the Force bill, and when that law was repealed the statute against bribery was also repealed, as I think.

Now, with reference to this pending amendment I will say I shall vote against it; not because I think $1,000 or one year's imprisonment adequate punishment for the man who deliberately goes out and debauches his neighbor, but because another legislative body has placed this limitation in the bill, and I know that so far as the integrity and honor of the people and the purity of elections are concerned, a law providing a penalty of $1,000 fine, with one year in jail, one or both, is better than no law. Therefore I hope the bill will not be amended, but that it will be enacted as it passed the Senate in order that we may have this legislation at this session.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the election of President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives in Congress is a very important function which devolves upon the American people and one in which every citizen of the United States, if he is otherwise qualified, should have the unrestricted right to participate. It is frequently said, and I think the record would prove the statement to be true, that many of the citizens of the United States who are otherwise called upon to bear the obligations of citizenship are not permitted to exercise the franchise. To-day we are engaged in a great war, in which there seems to be no distinction as to those upon whom the responsibility of engaging in the conflict shall fall. We have not discriminated in any way against any citizen of America in calling upon men who are to fight the battles of the Nation. We have called upon all freely. We have insisted that each man having the rights of citizenship shall assume the responsible burden of citizenship by shouldering a rifle and going to the front or doing such other war duty as may be imposed upon him by the law. It may seem important to report and enact a law imposing a fine of $1,000 and imprisonment for a year on anyone who may accept or pay a bribe to induce a vote in favor of or against some candidate for office; but it seems to me it is still more important that the committee having jurisdiction of bills of this sort should also report some bill which would give to the citizens of the United States who are fighting its battles the right to vote. [Applause.] How many hundreds of thousands of those men there are who are denied the right to vote in America I am unable to say, but there are hundreds of thousands of them, and in certain States of the Union if a man happens perchance to have a black skin he is restricted in his right to exercise his privileges as a citizen when it comes to election day, but when it comes to fighting the battles of the Nation and spilling his blood upon the fields of France, or elsewhere, there is no restriction. These men are loyal citizens of America——

Mr. RUCKER. Is it not true that in many jurisdictions there is also a property qualification?

Mr. MADDEN. There ought not to be any qualification that will prevent a citizen of the United States, a man entitled to citizenship, exercising his right to vote. We have 350,000 black soldiers in the Army to-day, 10 per cent of all the men in the Army, yet I undertake to say, without fear of successful contradiction, that not 35,000 of those 350,000 are permitted to vote either for President or for Members of the Senate or House in certain States of the Union.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I just want to say, speaking for the State of Texas, that there is absolutely no discrimination at all there. They are all on an equality in my State.

Mr. MADDEN. I undertake to say that if they were all on an equality in all States, and all permitted to exercise the same rights of citizenship that all other citizens, of any other color or birth, are permitted to exercise, there would be a good many Republicans in this House where there are to-day Democrats.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to say to the gentleman that in the State of Missouri, from which I come, there is no limitation whatever on the right to vote. Every black man votes if he wants to.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not making any complaint about Missouri. I say that these men who are to-day fighting for the freedom of America, for the honor of its flag, for the preservation of its institutions, ought to have the same privilege to exercise their political rights that every other man has. I say that, and to the extent of my ability I shall insist that in the future they shall have it; and if this Committee on the Election of President and Vice President and Senators and Representatives in Congress would devote itself to the preparation and presentation of a law that would place the citizenship of America, with respect to the exercise of their political rights, on the basis of equality, they would be doing a much greater work than by the presentation of a bill that imposes a fine of a thousand dollars or imprisonment of a year on those who bribe a voter or who accept a bribe, though I am heartily in favor of the pending bill. To-day it takes 50,000 men to elect the average Member of Congress from a northern State, and the average number of votes cast in the Southern States for Members of Congress is 2,500.

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, no.

Mr. MADDEN. You may have more votes at the primary, but you do not have them at the election. The primary there is the election. I say that the primary in the South ought not to be any different from the primary in the North. The oligarchy ought not to continue to control America when it prevents the exercise of the franchise by the men who are willing to give their blood for the preservation of the Nation.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Take a district like the one I represent, and there is no one in it that belongs to the gentleman's party.

Mr. MADDEN. They would if all the citizens were allowed to vote.

Mr. RAYBURN. They are allowed to vote the same as white people.

Mr. MADDEN. But they are not counted. Of course, everybody votes the Democratic ticket because they know that there is no chance to get the ballots counted if they vote for anybody else.

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, that is entirely untrue.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Do I understand that the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois are to be construed as an indication that if his party succeeds in getting control of Congress we may expect a force bill?

Mr. MADDEN. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Louisiana, the representation in Congress should be based upon the citizenship of the various States who are permitted to vote and not upon the population without respect as to whether they are allowed to vote or not. That is the position I take, and that is the legitimate position to take.

Before the Civil War, of course, they counted the negroes in the representation without any right to vote. Now they count them in the representation and do not give them the right to vote, notwithstanding the laws of the land require them to accept every responsibility that every other citizen in the United States must assume. I hope the gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of this great Committee on the Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress, will use the great genius he possesses and formulate a bill which will give every man in the Union, without regard to color, his full rights. I can assure him it would be promptly enacted into law if the Democrats would but cooperate with the Republicans in the Congress.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that my name has been called frequently and that the longer this is debated the more harmony and felicity we have, I think we had better take up something else, and I move the previous question.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman withhold that? I want to speak for five minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. No; I think we had better take up something else.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman withhold that? I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the bill. I will say to the gentleman that if he is going to try and crowd this bill through without giving a chance to perfect it and make a real publicity bill of it, he will have to have a quorum.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me say to the gentleman there are no terrors in that for me; if the gentleman wants to do it, do it. I do not propose to be bluffed by the gentleman from Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. GOOD. I make the point of order that no quorum is present. If the gentleman is afraid of a little publicity bill——

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, the gentleman is camouflaging.

The SPEAKER. All this talk is out of order. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point that no quorum is present, and the Chair will count.

Mr. GILLETT. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. GOOD. I will withdraw it if the gentleman from Missouri will withdraw his motion for the previous question. I have an amendment with real merit in it.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman can offer his amendment, and I will consider it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri withdraw his motion for the previous question?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not.

Mr. GOOD. I am willing to withdraw the point of no quorum if the gentleman will withdraw his motion and allow me to offer the amendment.

Mr. RUCKER. How long a time does the gentleman want?

Mr. GOOD. I want only five minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. Well, Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that I will be recognized at the end of five minutes, I will withdraw the motion of the previous question.

Mr. GOOD. I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. MAPES. Why does not the gentleman from Missouri ask unanimous consent to limit debate?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I will do that. I ask unanimous consent to limit debate on this bill to 17 minutes—5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, and 5 minutes to myself—and at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that debate on this bill and all amendments thereto close in 17 minutes, at the end of which time the previous question shall be ordered on the bill and amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment already pending and has to be disposed of first.

The SPEAKER. We will have to dispose of the Walsh amendment first, but the gentleman can send his amendment up for information.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not vote on the other amendment first?

The SPEAKER. We will vote on it first. The Clerk will report the Good amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new section the following:

"That any local or State committee, club, or organization that collects funds for political purposes and which contributes any part of its funds for the election of any Member of Congress, or to any political club, committee, or organization which shall influence the result, or attempt to influence the result, of an election of Representative in Congress shall be included within the term 'political committee' as defined in the act of June 25, 1910, and acts amendatory thereof, and any such local or State committee, club, or organization shall hereafter be required to make and file statements as required of other political committees as provided by the act of June 25, 1910, and acts amendatory thereof."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am going to say a few words simply on the bill itself. It is stated here that this bill gives jurisdiction to the United States courts over the conduct of elections with reference to bribery by any person, and bribery is the one essential question as to the conduct of elections. It is a question whether the amount being paid a man as a watcher is a bribe or not, and whether the men who carry messages and the wagon used to transport people to the polls are sometimes hidden forms of bribery. This bill gives jurisdiction to the United States courts to have indictments found as to the conduct of elections wherever any practice of bribery may be averred. Some years ago we had what is called the force bill, and it has been referred to to-day. That bill, besides giving jurisdiction to the United States courts over United States congressional elections, authorized a lot of inspectors. This bill does not authorize inspectors, but it may be pointed out to the House that we have now what we had not then—a most tremendous Department of Justice, with an intelligence department annexed, so that any administration—and I am talking of a hundred years hence—that chooses to use that vast machinery to find out whether anything has been or is being done against United States statutes by their opponents can exert the same power over and influence upon State elections which was so strongly objected to at the time of the so-called force bill. The number of people employed as Government agents is far greater than anything thought of then.

Section 4 of Article I of the Constitution provides:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulation, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is the first, and a very long step, toward the United States making regulations as provided in this section as to the manner of electing Representatives and Senators heretofore controlled by the States. If the United States takes jurisdiction of all, or concurrent jurisdiction over the conduct of elections, then with the powers in the hands of the United States Department of Justice it may be possible in some cases in the future that the administration may persecute men who are running at the polls by attacking their methods and friends, as has often been done in autocratic governments. I do not fear this now. We have honest Presidents and a republican form of government. But centralizing of power and of jurisdiction are only too common tendencies. As a Republican I have for years been pointing out to what an extent they are going on in this country, and I stand where I have stood always, wherever it was proper, for local self-government and for State rights and State control of local matters under the general Constitution and Union of the United States of America. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago in a speech in this Chamber I read from an original letter written by the Secretary of the Iowa Democratic Club to a postmistress in my district. The letter was delivered to her in the post office, so I am informed. The letter said in so many words, "You owe us $33, and you must pay." That was in violation of the criminal code, which imposes a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment or a term of one or two years, or both, for such an offense. That letter is in my possession. It is open to the Department of Justice to bring criminal proceedings against the bunch of fellows in my State who are going up and down the State collecting a 5 per cent assessment against postmasters and other public officials, in violation of law, for the Democratic committee. That letter states that that committee is turning over to the Democratic national committee $13,000 a year, and no report is made anywhere by the Iowa Democratic Club. No one can know where it gets its money. There have been no prosecutions of the wholesale violation of the criminal code by this administration. The Civil Service Commission, a nonpartisan commission, makes an indictment against the present administration that smells to high heaven, so far as the violation of election laws are concerned, and you not only fail to indict your officials but you encourage them to go to the Government employees under them and collect political assessments from them, and if those people fail to pay them your officials and your administration fail to remove that kind of an official from office. That is the indictment, and it stands in black and white on page 15 of the Civil Service Commission's last report. I think we are laboring to-day all in vain when we attempt to place on the statute books a law which is meant to be enforced against Republicans, but is to be winked at when it is violated by Democrats.

The amendment that I have offered will put a stop to this violation of the spirit of the law if the law is to be enforced. This wholesale violation of the spirit of the law by the great Democratic Party, in organizing State clubs in order to get around and under the provisions of the corrupt-practices law, is most contemptible.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. And you bring in here now a little bill that is designed to prohibit the purchase of votes. Of course, the purchase of votes ought to be prohibited; it ought to be prohibited by the local authorities. It is prohibited by local authorities in all well-regulated communities. I said a few moments ago—and I repeat it now—I have had some experience with elections for the last 25 years in my State. During all of that time I have never heard of a single man in my State purchasing a single vote, and I have never heard of a man there selling a vote in my State. I have heard, however, and I have furnished positive proof of how you are violating the corrupt-practices law, and it seems to me that until you show some disposition, and the party in power shows some disposition to enforce the laws we now have, it is vain and idle for us to talk about putting on the statute books additional legislation along this line, but if we are to amend this law, let us amend the law so it will have some teeth in it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I wanted first to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not care to ask the gentleman any question now.

Mr. GOOD. I yield.

Mr. CALDWELL. I wanted to know if the gentleman had heard of the wholesale Republican purchase of votes in Ohio here a little while ago?

Mr. GOOD. I saw something in the newspapers about violations in Adams County by both parties, but I know nothing about it personally, and I read in the newspapers that in Indiana they have a whole lot of Democratic politicians in the State prison for that offense.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Is not that about all that the Department of Justice knows about the charges of the gentleman?

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe it is. As I have said before, the local authorities ought to put every man in jail who will even offer to sell a vote and ought to put every man in jail who goes around during election and attempts to buy votes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer an amendment. On page 2, after the word "Congress," in line 1, insert "or any candidate for elector for President or Vice President."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "Congress" insert the words "or any candidate for elector for President or Vice President.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the amendment simply is to enlarge the scope of the law so as to make it unlawful to buy votes for President or Vice President, or for their electors. Now, I think, while we are enacting this legislation we might as well make it a little more comprehensive. Of course, this law will not be enacted in time to do any good or reach anyone violating any of its provisions at this election, but it will perhaps be of value at the election two years from now; and while we are making it applicable to elections of Senators and Representatives, why not make it applicable to President and Vice President? I am sure that all Members of the House are in favor of the provisions of this bill as it is now framed, and I am sure that all of us do not want bribery in the election of President and Vice President; then why not let this bill be comprehensive enough to do that when we can do it in a simple provision by these half a dozen words in the bill. I hope this amendment will carry. I am sure the Senate will accept it and it will become part of the law.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I repeat, I hope all of these amendments will be voted down. I do not believe the gentleman from Iowa would want his amendment adopted if he thought it could be adopted. It looks to me that on certain occasions the gentleman throws himself into fits and deals largely in invective for political purposes. I think his conduct suggests that somebody is trespassing upon his ancient rights.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Why not call his bluff?

Mr. RUCKER. Way back years and years ago there was a national scandal in this country about certain officeholders, all of whom were Republicans, levying tribute upon civil-service or the departmental clerks, all of whom were Republicans, until the country finally arose in its righteousness and forced the adoption of the civil-service law and in effect said, "You should not do this any more." Now, I rather think it is possible that somewhere Democrats who have been afflicted with Republican association have occasionally followed the Republican ancient practice of levying tribute on those people, but if they have done so at times I am sure it is "a custom more honored in the breach than in the observance." Very few Democrats ever did a thing like that. But let me suggest that the gentleman's amendment if adopted would require to be sent to the National Capital after every election, every two years, somewhere from 10,000 to 50,000 reports. Did you know it? We would have piled up here somewhere in some basement room, some disused and abandoned space, some space only fit for mice and owls to infest—we would have here somewhere from 25,000 to 75,000 reports. In fact, there is absolutely no limit to the number, but it is safe to say that we would necessarily have 25,000, and might have any number of thousands. Now, who would read them, let me ask? What does it concern the good people of the old pine State of Maine that some irregularity in an election has occurred maybe in the gentleman's district in Iowa? What does it concern the people in the grand old Commonwealth of Texas if something goes wrong in the old Commonwealth of Massachusetts? What does it signify to the general public if something is wrong in some one community? Who would ever hear of it unless we could send the gentleman from Iowa to pry into it and come back here and make a political speech on it? I say that with all respect to the gentleman, I have traveled the path suggested by him but I quit it because it proved to be such an absurd proposition.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. How are you going to touch these committees, such as I have described?

Mr. RUCKER. I suggested awhile ago if you are in as good faith as I am, help me pass this law. I am willing to go on record in an attempt to stop the expenditure of a single dollar except for purposes specified in the law, each and every one of which is lawful, and——

Mr. GOOD. Amend that so it will do that.

Mr. RUCKER. Give me a chance. The gentleman's amendment would defeat this law.

Mr. GOOD. Let us do it before election, not after.

Mr. RUCKER. Would the gentleman favor turning the bribe giver loose to despoil and demoralize the citizens of his State and every other State in the Union?

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I will.

Mr. HASTINGS. This bill the gentleman has in mind would prevent the expenditure of $176,000 to secure a nomination for United States Senator in any State in the Union?

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] I may not be able to write a bill that will prevent such expenditure, but I can write one that will send the scoundrels to the penitentiary if the law is enforced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSTER). The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 30, noes 31.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers—I withdraw the demand.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next amendment is the one offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GOOD) there were—ayes 19, noes 36.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. I am going to withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, it has been called to my attention that presidential electors are not officers or agents in any sense of the Federal Government. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] mentioned the matter to me first, and afterwards a decision of the Supreme Court was presented to me by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES], which seems to hold that presidential electors are not officers of the United States but are strictly State officers, although they are provided for in the Constitution. And therefore, if that decision states the law, it would seem not to be proper to pass a law providing for a penalty of this kind for bribery in connection with the election of electors.

Mr. RUCKER. Notwithstanding that position, which is wholly true, still I think Congress has a perfect right to legislate with reference to everything that pertains to a presidential election, for the reason that electors are elected at an election at which Members of Congress and Senators are elected.

Mr. DENISON. Now, I will ask the gentleman this question: Do you think, then, a State would have that right?

Mr. RUCKER. Unquestionably.

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman is of that opinion, I will not withdraw the amendment. I have great respect for the opinion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. I understood the gentleman to withdraw it. It is immaterial to me, however.

Mr. DENISON. I will not withdraw it, then, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 36.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RUCKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BETTER ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN NAVY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the first bill on the calendar relating to the Naval Affairs Committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10747) providing for the better administration of justice in the Navy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some statement as to the reason why the Navy Department seeks jurisdiction to punish a former seaman or officer beyond the term of his original enlistment for a crime committed while serving a sentence of imprisonment?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Perhaps the Navy Department now has that authority. Some doubt, however, has been expressed, and it was thought well by this bill to clear up all doubt. This condition might occur: That a month before the expiration of one's term of enlistment and while serving a prison sentence, the prisoner may commit a very grave offense or he might commit such offense the next day after his term of enlistment had terminated, serving a prison sentence. There certainly should be no question as to the right of the Navy to punish for such an offense. And this bill simply removes all question of doubt on that subject. In reference to officers who are serving a prison sentence, it is the practice of the Navy to always dismiss them from the service as soon as the sentence has been imposed. And if after their dismissal they commit while in prison another offense, this bill makes certain the naval authority to punish for such offense. That is the whole purpose of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the authority of this bill the officials of the Navy Department would be permitted to punish an enlisted man even if the offense committed was not really committed against the discipline or good order or rules of the Navy Department.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. While he is serving a prison sentence.

Mr. STAFFORD. They can keep on punishing him and punishing him, ad infinitum.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Of course, that is predicated on the assumption that he is duly convicted for some offense charged while serving a prison sentence.

Mr. STAFFORD. Originally duly convicted, he commits a minor offense which is not regarded favorably by some naval official and he is punished again, and maybe for some minor prison offense.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. To maintain discipline I think the gentleman will readily recognize that the Navy should unquestionably be given authority to punish for an offense committed by one serving a prison sentence. I think the authority already exists, but it was thought well to clear up any possible doubt by passing this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, I can see where this might be abused. I can see also where there is need of vesting authority in the naval officers to punish an enlisted man who has been sentenced, when he is guilty of a further infraction of the rules or infraction of discipline.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Of course, there is opportunity for any authority to be abused. I do not think it would be in instances of this kind, however.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons serving in confinement pursuant to a duly approved sentence of a naval court-martial shall, until discharged from confinement, remain subject in all respects to the articles for the government of the Navy and all other laws for the administration of justice in the Navy, and shall be liable to trial by courts-martial under said articles and laws for offenses committed while under any sentence imposed pursuant to the first or any subsequent trial by court-martial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OLIVER of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next one.

EXTENSION OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12934) to extend certain provisions of the war-risk insurance act of September 2, 1914, as amended to cadets at the United States Military Academy and midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RAYBURN rose.

Mr. WALSH. I object to the consideration of the bill, but I will withhold the right to object for a moment.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill may be placed on the calendar at a subsequent time. It would be better to have it stricken off now. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes off the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have had placed on the calendar two bills, one known as the maimed soldiers' bill and the other known as the Army nurse bill. I want to inquire of the Chair why it is that they can not be taken up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule for unanimous consent these bills must have been placed on the calendar three days in advance.

Mr. LANGLEY. I thought the rule required that they must be on the other calendar for three days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No. They must have been on the Unanimous Consent Calendar for three days.

Mr. LANGLEY. They must be on that calendar three days before they can be considered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

PURCHASE OF UNIFORMS BY NAVAL OFFICERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12945) providing for the purchase of uniforms, accouterments, and equipment by officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, and midshipmen at the Naval Academy from the Government at cost.

The title was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if the omission of the Coast Guard Cadets from this legislation was inadvertent or intentional? The Coast Guard, as the gentleman knows, maintains an academy at New London, Conn., where they give a course of instruction to young men who desire to become officers in that branch of the service, and those men have to procure uniforms, and so forth. They are not covered by the provisions of this measure.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. They were not included in the original bill when it was before the committee, and the question of extending this right was not considered.

Mr. WALSH. Would the gentleman see any serious objection to incorporating an amendment for midshipmen at the Naval Academy and cadets at the Coast Guard Academy?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I would not like to assent to that offhand, because we have had no hearings on the subject. Personally I have no objection to it.

Mr. WALSH. In the absence of definite information, I do not think we should pass this legislation, and I will therefore object.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I think that the reason is perhaps because the Coast Guard is under the Treasury Department. But it has been temporarily placed under the Navy Department during the period of the war.

Mr. WALSH. You take care of the officers of the Coast Guard, and you take care of the midshipmen at the Naval Academy.

Mr. ESCH. It obtains only while they are operating with the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. The Coast Guard Academy is under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department.

Mr. ESCH. Only during the war emergency, since the Coast Guard was taken over by the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman does not get my point. We are going to provide that the officers of the Coast Guard, while they are operating with the Navy——

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will interpose no objection if the gentleman will offer an amendment to that effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a Union Calendar bill. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to ask that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes; Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter uniforms, accouterments, and equipment shall, upon the request of any officer of the Navy or any officer of the Marine Corps or any officer of the Coast Guard while operating with the Navy or any midshipman at the Naval Academy, be furnished by the Government at cost, subject to such restrictions and regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 1, line 7, after the word "Academy," insert the words "or cadets at the Coast Guard Academy."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OLIVER of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PROMOTION OF MARINE OFFICERS SERVING WITH THE ARMY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12916) to provide for the temporary promotion of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps serving with the Army.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object, and before objection is waived I would like to have the gentleman from Alabama explain what positions are open to the commissioned officers of the Marine Corps to which they are not privileged at present under existing law?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Under the existing law the Marine officers now serving under Gen. Pershing can not be promoted as the Army officers are, and this bill simply serves to remove that restriction, and provides that while they are serving with the Army they can be promoted as Army officers are. The promotions are only temporary and to continue during their service with the Army.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that the officers of the Marine Corps serving with the Army may be promoted to additional rank in the Marine Corps.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. They can not be promoted while serving with the Army. It seems to have been an inadvertent omission. This bill simply gives them the same opportunity that Regular Army officers have while they are serving with the Army. It is a temporary promotion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSTER). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, detached for duty with the Army under the provisions of section 1621, Revised Statutes, shall be eligible, in the same manner as officers of the Regular Army, for temporary promotion to higher grades in any of the forces provided by the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917: Provided, That officers of the Marine Corps temporarily promoted to higher grades in any of the forces of the Army under the provisions of this act shall not thereby vacate their permanent appointments or commissions, or be prejudiced in their relative lineal standing in the Marine Corps: Provided further, That temporary vacancies in the Marine Corps caused by the appointment of officers to higher grades in the Army shall be temporarily filled in the same manner as is now prescribed by law: And provided further, That the temporary promotions herein authorized shall continue only while such officers are detached for duty with the Army.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. OLIVER of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL PAY FOR WARRANT OFFICERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12915) to provide additional pay for warrant officers on shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire of the gentleman having charge of this bill why warrant officers of the Navy on shore duty—for instance, on the Isthmus of Panama—should receive higher pay than warrant officers on shore duty in continental United States of America?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The Chief of the Bureau of Navigation reported that the expenses of those on shore duty abroad are now very heavy, and, since the chief warrant officers and the commissioned officers of the Navy are entitled to this increase, it was thought but just that warrant officers should be entitled to the increase while performing foreign-shore service. The department has recommended that the same increase be extended to the warrant officers now enjoyed by the chief warrant officers and the commissioned officers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are not the expenses of these warrant officers on shore duty in the United States just as heavy as the expenses of these warrant officers performing duty down in the Virgin Islands or in Porto Rico or the Philippines or on the Isthmus of Panama?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. As the gentleman knows, a great many of these warrant officers are in France, in Ireland, in England, and some in Italy.

Mr. STAFFORD. And a great many down in Porto Rico and Santo Domingo and on the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Some of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. And yet the cost of living down there is less than in the United States.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. It includes those.

Mr. STAFFORD. Surely.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The chief of the bureau stated that, in view of the heavy expense now incident to foreign service, he felt the same increase enjoyed by the chief warrant officers for foreign service should be given to warrant officers. The gentleman will understand that the pay of warrant officers as compared with that of the chief warrant officers and that of commissioned officers is small.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand we have increased their pay within the past few years to meet the increased cost of living. For the time being, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman consent that this be passed without prejudice?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will have an opportunity of putting it on the calendar again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MEDALS OF HONOR.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12194) to provide for the award of medals of honor, distinguished-service medals, and Navy crosses, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is rather an important bill and a lengthy bill. We passed in the Army appropriation act of this year a bill very extensive in its scope, granting to the War Department the privilege of awarding medals of honor similar to what is intended by this bill for the naval service. I wish to inquire of the gentleman having the bill in charge whether this is identical in its phraseology with that bill?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Absolutely, except so as to make it conform to the Navy.

Mr. STAFFORD. In all particulars?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. In all particulars, I think.

Mr. DENT. As I recollect, we had the Navy included in the medal-of-honor bill, but the Secretary of the Navy objected to its going in there, and so we struck the Navy out. Has he changed his mind on that subject?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think the Secretary of the Navy in a letter to the committee recommended that this bill pass.

Mr. DENT. There is one other point in there that has been called to my attention.

Mr. STAFFORD. One moment. There is nothing in the report to show that the Secretary of the Navy has changed his mind. There is nothing in the report to show any letter from the Secretary of the Navy, as is customary on bills affecting the naval service. The Secretary of the Navy is not inclined to change his mind on these matters overnight.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I was in error in stating that the Secretary had written a letter; but Admiral Palmer, the head of the Bureau of Navigation, appeared before the committee and strongly urged the passage of this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think we ought to hear from the Secretary of the Navy, in view of the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that he opposed the awarding of these medals of honor to members of the Navy. I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am not sure that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] is correct in his recollection. I have no recollection myself of the Secretary having written a letter in opposition to it.

Mr. DENT. I am going to make a statement which, I think, will clear up this matter. All I can say is that when the medal bill, which was one reported by the Military Affairs Committee of the House, was called up on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, I do not remember whether by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] or the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], the chairman of the Naval Committee [Mr. PADGETT] objected and made the statement that the Secretary of the Navy did not want the Navy included in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to confirm the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], that when the bill was presented the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] stated that the Secretary of the Navy was opposed to bills of that character. I thought perhaps he had changed his mind, but now I find there is no evidence of his having changed his mind.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. There may have been at that time reasons for the Secretary making such request, but I hope the gentleman will not interpose an objection simply because it is reported that some time in the past the Secretary of the Navy may have said that he was not insisting that the Army bill include the Navy.

I feel sure there is no objection by the Navy Department to this legislation and certainly no one can now suggest any reason why young men serving in the Navy should not be accorded the same rights as those in the Army, whether the Secretary ever objected to it or not. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will not interpose an objection.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I did not intend to raise any objection; I was simply recalling what I thought had occurred on a previous occasion. The main purpose that I had in interrupting the gentleman was to make this suggestion: In the medal-of-honor bill which was incorporated in the act of July 19, 1918, we provided for some sort of legislation for those who served in the Spanish-American War and those who had served on the Mexican border. The Adjutant General's office has ruled that both must be tacked together under the language in the bill. That was not intended. It was intended to separate the two and give the veterans of the Spanish-American War some recognition, and also those who served on the Mexican border a separate recognition. A measure before the Military Committee will undertake to correct by amendment that bill. If the Naval Committee has followed the language of that bill, they may find themselves in the same situation.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Is there any objection on the part of the gentleman from Alabama to the passage of this bill?

Mr. DENT. Oh, no; I have no objection to it.

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. McARTHUR. Is it not true that we can give medals of honor to the soldiers in the Army, but not to the marines who fight by the side of them?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Wisconsin will not interpose the objection, especially on the ground of demanding proof of the change of mind of the department. A good deal of time has elapsed and may we not indulge in the presumption that he has already changed his mind?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in justice to the Secretary of the Navy that the only objection I recall ever offered of this kind related to medals offered or given by foreign governments. I do not recall, and I find no member of the committee present who recalls, that the Secretary ever made an objection to a bill of this kind. The confusion may have arisen altogether from the fact that it was said at one time that he objected to foreign governments conferring medals on officers and men of the Navy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to present, in the name of Congress, a medal of honor to any person who, while in the naval service of the United States, shall, in action involving actual conflict with the enemy, distinguish himself conspicuously by gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty and without detriment to the mission of his command or the command to which attached.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he hereby is, further authorized to present, but not in the name of Congress, a distinguished-service medal of appropriate design and a ribbon, together with a rosette or other device to be worn in lieu thereof, to any person who, while in the naval service of the United States, since the 6th day of April, 1917, has distinguished, or who hereafter shall distinguish, himself by exceptionally meritorious service to the Government in a duty of great responsibility.

SEC. 3. That the President be, and he hereby is, further authorized to present, but not in the name of Congress, a Navy cross of appropriate design and a ribbon, together with a rosette or other device to be worn in lieu thereof, to any person who, while in the naval service of the United States, since the 6th day of April, 1917, has distinguished, or who shall hereafter distinguish, himself by extraordinary heroism or distinguished service in the line of his profession, such heroism or service not being sufficient to justify the award of a medal of honor or a distinguished-service medal.

SEC. 4. That each enlisted or enrolled person of the naval service to whom is awarded a medal of honor, distinguished-service medal, or a Navy cross shall, for each such award, be entitled to additional pay at the rate of $2 per month from the date of the distinguished act or service on which the award is based, and each bar, or other suitable emblem or insignia, in lieu of a medal of honor, distinguished-service medal, or Navy cross, as hereinafter provided for, shall entitle him to further additional pay at the rate of $2 per month from the date of the distinguished act or service for which the bar is awarded, and such additional pay shall continue throughout his active service, whether such service shall or shall not be continuous.

SEC. 5. That no more than one medal of honor or one distinguished-service medal or one Navy cross shall be issued to any one person; but for each succeeding deed or service sufficient to justify the award of a medal of honor or a distinguished-service medal or Navy cross, respectively, the President may award a suitable bar, or other suitable emblem or insignia, to be worn with the decoration and the corresponding rosette or other device.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to expend from the appropriation "Pay of the Navy," of the Navy Department, so much as may be necessary to defray the cost of the medals of honor, distinguished-service medals, and Navy crosses, and bars, emblems, or insignia herein provided for, and so much as may be necessary to replace any medals, crosses, bars, emblems, or insignia as are herein or may heretofore have been provided for: Provided, That such replacement shall be made only in those cases where the medal of honor, distinguished-service medal, or Navy cross, or bar, emblem, or insignia presented under the provisions of this or any other act shall have been lost, destroyed, or rendered unfit for use without fault or neglect on the part of the person to whom it was awarded, and shall be made without charge therefor.

SEC. 7. That, except as otherwise prescribed herein, no medal of honor, distinguished-service medal, Navy cross, or bar or other suitable emblem or insignia in lieu of either of said medals or of said cross, shall be issued to any person after more than five years from the date of the act or service justifying the award thereof, nor unless a specific statement or report distinctly setting forth the act or distinguished service and suggesting or recommending official recognition thereof shall have been made by his naval superior through official channels at the time of the act or service or within three years thereafter.

SEC. 8. That in case an individual who shall distinguish himself dies before the making of the award to which he may be entitled the award may nevertheless be made and the medal or cross or the bar or other emblem or insignia presented within five years from the date of the act or service justifying the award thereof to such representative of the deceased as the President may designate: Provided, That no medal or cross or no bar or other emblem or insignia shall be awarded or presented to any individual or to the representative of any individual whose entire service subsequent to the time he distinguished himself shall not have been honorable: Provided further, That in cases of persons now in the naval service for whom the award of the medal of honor has been recommended in full compliance with then existing regulations, but on account of services which, though insufficient fully to justify the award of the medal of honor, appears to have been such as to justify the award of the distinguished-service medal or Navy cross hereinbefore provided for, such cases may be considered and acted upon under the provisions of this act authorizing the award of the distinguished-service medal and Navy cross notwithstanding that said services may have been rendered more than five years before said cases shall have been considered as authorized by this proviso, but all consideration or any action upon any of said cases shall be based exclusively upon official records now on file in the Navy Department.

SEC. 9. That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to delegate, under such conditions, regulations, and limitations as he shall prescribe, to flag officers who are commanders in chief or commanding on important independent duty the power conferred upon him by this act to award the Navy cross; and he is further authorized to make from time to time any and all rules, regulations, and orders which he shall deem necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act and to execute the full purpose and intention thereof.

SEC. 10. That all acts or parts of acts relating to the award of medals of honor, as such, in so far as rights thereunder have not already accrued, are hereby repealed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman who has charge of this measure if section 10 is not rather a dangerous section to include in this act. It provides that all awards relating to medals of honor, in so far as rights thereunder have not accrued, are hereby repealed. There is an act relating to the award of medals of honor to members in the military service. The rights thereunder have not accrued and may accrue in the future, if this section is left in this bill, conferring the right to award these medals is to be repealed.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I assume that that matter was looked into by the committee, and it was thought that by the repeal of other laws relating to the Navy we would be doing no injustice to anyone in the naval service.

Mr. WALSH. But this is not confined to the naval service.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The bill relates only to those in the naval service. If the gentleman thinks that this would interfere in the slightest with the bill in relation to the Army—I do not think it does—he can offer an amendment. It certainly is not intended to repeal any act relating to the Army.

Mr. WALSH. But it says "that all acts or parts of acts relating to the award of medals of honor, as such, in so far as rights thereunder have not already accrued, are hereby repealed." It does not say to members of the naval service.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. If the gentleman will offer an amendment——

Mr. WALSH. I do not care to offer an amendment until I learn why it is necessary to have it in there. I understood by the colloquy that took place before consent was given to take the bill up, that an intimation was made that at present the Congress had provided that medals of honor might be awarded to soldiers and marines, and that there was no provision for medals of honor for members in the naval service. If that be so, section 10 would not apply to any law relating to the Navy, because there is no law providing for medals of honor for the Navy.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman understands that this bill was heard by the committee when I was away, and I am not as familiar with the hearings as I would otherwise be. I will offer an amendment to limit it absolutely to the Navy since the question has been raised.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman would agree that the validity or purpose of the act would not be seriously affected if section 10 were eliminated in toto.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. So far as my information goes I do not think it would be, but I would prefer that it remain in and go to conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is aware that the whole purpose of the bill is framed with the idea that this shall take the place of any other award of medals of honor, and I think there is no need whatever of section 10, because by the very phraseology it supersedes the existing law.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 10.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, strike out section 10.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OLIVER of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CERTAIN NEW RATINGS IN THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10849) to establish certain new ratings in the United States Navy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object on any of these that are new.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. All of the ratings provided for in this bill are new ratings. The bill provides new ratings for gunners' mates, quartermasters, and electricians who have been performing these duties. In view of the large increase in Navy personnel, the Bureau of Navigation recommends that these new ratings be given. They think it will tend to greater efficiency. The gentleman will understand how important the torpedo work now is, and this bill will give ratings to those doing such work, thus permitting them to specialize in such work.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate the importance of the work, of course, and I assume that the work is being performed and that activities are being carried on in the absence of this legislation, and that this is only to give effect to a plan that has been inaugurated.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes; they are now being carried on by those with ratings as gunners' mates, electricians, and quartermasters, and it was thought they should be given special ratings. It will not add new men nor increase the pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I direct the gentleman's attention to the phraseology in section 2:

That the aforesaid rates of pay shall be subject to such increases of pay and allowances as are or may hereafter be authorized by law for enlisted men of the Navy.

Of course, that intends that they shall be the recipients of additional pay in the future. What is the necessity for these new classifications? Frequently we have had bills brought in here from the Committee on Naval Affairs providing for new classifications, with higher pay, with the statement that it does not lay any additional burden on the Treasury; but there must be some purpose in providing these ratings. These men are not receiving these salaries as prescribed in this bill to-day.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. They are if they are rated as chief gunners or electricians. The statement is made by Admiral Palmer, or by some one from the department, in the hearings, that there will be no increase in pay or numbers, and that the bill simply gives ratings to chief gunners, electricians, or quartermasters now performing these special duties.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following new ratings, with the specified rates of base pay per month, be, and they are hereby, established in the United States Navy:

Seaman branch: Chief torpedoman, $50 acting appointment, and $70 permanent appointment; torpedoman, first class, $40; torpedoman, second class, $35; torpedoman, third class, $30; chief signalman, $50 acting appointment, and $70 permanent appointment; signalman, first class, $40; signalman, second class, $35; signalman, third class, $30.

Artificer branch: Chief radioman, $60 acting appointment, and $70 permanent appointment; radioman, first class, $50; radioman, second class, $40; radioman, third class, $30.

SEC. 2. That the aforesaid rates of pay shall be subject to such increases of pay and allowances as are, or may hereafter be, authorized by law for enlisted men of the Navy: Provided, That appointments or enlistments in the said ratings may be made from enlisted men in the Navy or from civil life, respectively, and the qualifications of the candidates for any of said ratings shall be determined in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 1, insert: "signal apprentice, first class, $27; signal apprentice, second class, $26; signal apprentice, third class, $25."

Page 2, line 14, after the word "prescribe," strike out the rest of the paragraph.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OLIVER of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PURCHASE OF DRY DOCK FROM MASSACHUSETTS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12982) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to purchase from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts a large dry dock and appurtenant lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman having the bill in charge acquaint the House with the arrangement that was made some years ago in the naval appropriation bill whereby the Government was to be privileged to use under certain terms this dry dock, and what is the exigency that requires the expenditure of four and a half million dollars at the present time for the purchase by the Government?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. This dry dock was under construction by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and an agreement entered into under authority of Congress for the Navy to lease the dock for six years after its final completion for $50,000 a year. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts undertook the construction of the dry dock with this understanding. The Legislature of Massachusetts seems to have limited the amount that the commission on waterways and public lands could expend in the completion of it. Contracts have been made covering a large part of the work, but the commission has no funds with which to expedite the work, and the act of the Legislature of Massachusetts only authorizes the construction within a specified sum and forbids expressly the expenditure of any additional sum. The Navy now finds it is in great need of this dock, and by expending something like $350,000 its completion can be hastened by probably seven or eight months, and the Secretary of the Navy has advised the purchase of the dock not only because it will expedite its completion but because the Navy needs a large dock of this type north of Philadelphia. The purchase price is considered by the Secretary to be fair and reasonable. The Commission on Waterways and Public Lands of Massachusetts made the contract for the construction of the dock sometime before we entered the war and at prices considerably less than the prices would be now. The purchase gives the Government the benefit of these prewar contracts. We have no dry dock north of Philadelphia large enough to accommodate some of the ships we now have, and the passage of this bill is of urgent importance, so the Navy Department advises.

Mr. ROGERS. Is it not also true that time is of the essence in this matter, because the Navy Department is anxious to expedite the completion of the dock so that it may be put into use by the new year?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Absolutely.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not this a proposition that the State of Massachusetts suggested it would carry to completion on condition that the Government of the United States would pay $50,000 a year as rental for the dock, the condition being we would be permitted to have first right to the use of the dock for our battleships, and did not the State of Massachusetts guarantee that the Government of the United States would not be called upon to pay any part of the cost of the construction of the dock?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman probably was absent when I gave information in reference to the former lease——

Mr. MADDEN. I was here when this was authorized, so I know what the facts are.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The lease for six years at $50,000 per annum is correct. The dock, of course, is not now complete and will not be until the fall of next year unless its construction is hastened, as proposed by this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not the State obliged to construct the dock under the original agreement?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The amount appropriated by the Legislature of Massachusetts may be sufficient to complete it by next fall, but no funds are available to expedite the work.

Mr. MADDEN. Who is going to own the dock when they get through?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The Government will own the dock.

Mr. MADDEN. There will not be any rights left in the State of Massachusetts?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. No. The State of Massachusetts will complete this dock and turn it over to the Navy Department free of all incumbrances.

Mr. MADDEN. Will complete it?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The Commission of Waterways and Public Lands of Massachusetts will continue the work. The $350,000 which this bill authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to expend will expedite the work and will be expended by the Secretary of the Navy for that purpose only. The reason for that is this: The Commission on Waterways and Public Lands of Massachusetts, if this fund was turned over to them, would have to pay it into the treasury of Massachusetts and could not use it to expedite the work. With this fund it is estimated that the Secretary of the Navy can secure the completion of the dock early in 1919.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, what has become of the $50,000-a-year leasing proposition we had with the State of Massachusetts?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That will be annulled.

Mr. MADDEN. Do we get credit for the amount already paid?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. We have paid nothing. We were simply to have the right to lease for six years at a yearly rental of $50,000 when the dock was completed.

Mr. MADDEN. When was the lease to begin?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Upon completion.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, how much money has been expended on it by the State of Massachusetts up to now?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will have to refer to the hearings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is sufficiently important that this House should take the time to elicit this information, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. One million one hundred and forty-four thousand eight hundred and eighty-three dollars is approximately the amount.

Mr. MADDEN. And how much is proposed to be expended to complete it?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. It is estimated it will take about $3,107,000 plus the $350,000 for expediting the work.

Mr. MADDEN. That makes about $4,000,000.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. About $4,550,000, including the price of the land.

Mr. MADDEN. What does the price of the land amount to?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. They are selling 49 acres of the high land, which they have improved, at exactly the price they paid for it 70 years ago, plus the improvements placed on it within the last 12 years.

Mr. MADDEN. Of what do the improvements consist?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The improvements consist in some filling and permanent improvements placed on the filled portion.

Mr. MADDEN. As a matter of fact, they are not selling the land at the price they paid for it, but they are selling the land at the price they paid for it and then they are charging for the material that has been hauled in since.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. How much would it amount to?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. All improvements have been placed on there within the last 12 years.

Mr ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am not prepared to state exactly what the amount is that has been expended for the improvements, but it is set out in the hearings.

Mr. MADDEN. We ought not to consider the bill until we have all the facts before us.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if I can not have opportunity to ascertain certain facts I will be constrained to object. It is a very important bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I ask the gentleman to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. STAFFORD. The regular order has been demanded; it is not my doing.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will ask the gentleman to withhold his objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was the gentleman from Minnesota who demanded the regular order. I will be very glad to withhold the objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to pursue my inquiry if there is no objection to it, because I think it is very important for us to secure this information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Minnesota insist on his demand for the regular order?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not insist upon it if gentlemen want to debate this proposition all afternoon and then have somebody object.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, I am not taking up the time of the House merely for the purpose of wasting time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Minnesota withdraw his demand for the regular order?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I wish to apologize to the House for not having all of these facts at my fingers' ends, but I was not present when it was being considered by the committee, and was not aware that the chairman of the committee was sick until a few minutes ago, and that I would have charge of the bill on its passage.

Mr. MADDEN. Why not postpone the further consideration until to-morrow, so that we may be able to get the information? This is too important a bill involving the finances of the Government——

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I would be glad to pass it over until to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object to that. There is not going to be any meeting to-morrow, or not any meeting at which any of these unanimous-consent matters will be considered.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is there any very great need for such docking facilities as these?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I want to make this statement to the House. The Navy Department says there is urgent need for the passage of this bill. We have one ship performing very important service for the Army at this time that can not be docked at any dock now on the Atlantic.

Mr. MADDEN. Can you dock it here?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. We can dock it at Boston when this dock is completed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Leaving out the question of the exact sum, which the gentleman has not at his fingers' ends, is it or is it not a fact that the Government can acquire this dock much more speedily and at a much cheaper price than they could build a new dock?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The testimony before the committee shows a considerably cheaper price.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I do not think we ought to haggle.

Mr. STAFFORD. The question is not whether the State of Massachusetts is willing to do this for us, but whether we should spend four millions and a half dollars ourselves. We are pressed for money. We ought to have full information about this matter.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no objection to the passage of the bill at all. On the contrary, I think everything we can do should be done; but I think we ought to do it after we have information that will lead us to intelligent action. And I was anxious to find out——

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will state this to the gentleman, that the average price of the improved land, the lands that have been improved in the last 12 years, is about 49 cents per square foot.

Mr. MADDEN. A square foot?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes; 49 cents per square foot, as compared with 70 cents paid by the Army for similar land in that neighborhood recently. And the Commonwealth of Massachusetts is donating free of charge about 52 acres of land, now under water, which will be of great service to the Navy.

Mr. MADDEN. How much water is there on the land?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. From 5 to 8 feet.

Mr. MADDEN. What is proposed to be done with that?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. They will build piers there.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me the State of Massachusetts ought to sell us this land without having the cost of the filling which we will be called upon to make.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will state to the gentleman that this land was purchased by the State of Massachusetts 70 years ago, and at that time they paid 25 cents per square foot for it, and they are now asking that same price for it, with no interest on purchase price whatever, plus the cost of the improvements placed on the land within the last 12 years. The Navy Department feels that the offer is extremely fair and liberal and that a large saving to the Government will accrue from the purchase at price offered. The Secretary of the Navy appeared before the committee and strongly urged that the bill be passed, and pointed out the urgent needs by the Navy for this dock.

Mr. McARTHUR. Is it not true that time is the essence of this whole thing? With seven months' delay already, if this bill goes through, the Government can go ahead and complete this work in the immediate future.

Mr. STAFFORD. You can not libel the State of Massachusetts as not being patriotic in not completing this dock.

Mr. McARTHUR. I am not doing that at all.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that if he will read the hearings he will find that the State of Massachusetts has made a most liberal offer to the Government, and no criticism can be directed at the State of Massachusetts relative to this matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume they will do all in their power and right up to the limit in getting this dock ready for use by the Government, if it is necessary in the carrying out of the war program; but four and a half million dollars is some sum of money for the Government to spend at this time, especially when we have already got the use of the dock when the State of Massachusetts completes it.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Allow me just there to say that it is pointed out in the hearings how under the authority given by the Legislature of Massachusetts the commission that has this construction work in charge is not authorized to speed up the work by expending money for that purpose.

The Navy Department feels that the Government should own this dock, and the reasons are well stated in the hearings by the Secretary of the Navy. He feels that the Government is getting it at a low price, and for much less than they would have to expend for one if the Government started now to build one. In the next place, the Navy will probably have this dock by January 1 if permitted to complete it in the manner provided by the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the contract of purchase that has been entered into between the Navy Department and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, is there any reservation on the part of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for shipping interests to use the dock?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. None whatever.

Mr. STAFFORD. It means the complete taking over and control?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes; when completed.

Mr. STAFFORD. What dry-dock facilities have they now at the Charlestown Navy Yard?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. We have no dry-dock on the Atlantic coast now complete or that will be completed at any time in the very near future large enough to accommodate some of our larger ships, and it is thought there may soon be very urgent need of this particular dry dock. That is why the Navy Department is so insistent that they be permitted to hurry up the work and take it over.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, although it involves a large burden on the National Treasury, nevertheless I do not think I will take the responsibility of objecting to the measure.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to contract with the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for the purchase of the dry dock, with its equipment, now under construction at Boston by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, together with the land adjacent thereto necessary for the proper utilization of said dock, and there is hereby appropriated for said purpose the sum of $4,550,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, in order to expedite the completion of the construction of said dry dock, may expend out of the sum above appropriated an amount not exceeding $350,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OLIVER of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEGISLATION RELATING TO THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous arrangement of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] is recognized to call up bills from the Committee on Military Affairs that are unobjected to.

APPOINTMENTS IN STAFF CORPS AND DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 12872) making certain officers of the Army eligible for appointment as chief of staff corps and departments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12872) making certain officers of the Army eligible for appointment as chief of staff corps and departments.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter, during the present emergency, whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of the chief of any staff corps or department subject to the detail system provided by section 26 of the act approved February 2, 1901 (31 Stats., p. 755), any officer of the Army who shall be serving or shall have served creditably in said corps or department under detail thereto by authority of said section 26 of the act aforesaid, shall, in addition to officers otherwise eligible, be eligible to appointment to fill said vacancy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—and I do not intend to object—I merely wish to inquire why the committee in the amendment used the phraseology "during the present emergency" instead of "during the existence of the present war."

Mr. DENT. I would state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that that is the language that the Committee on Military Affairs has been using all along in legislation of this kind, because the present emergency may last beyond the conclusion of the treaty of peace.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 3, after the word "hereafter," insert "during the present emergency."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PAY AND ALLOWANCE OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 12936.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12936) to prescribe the pay and allowance of any officer of the Army while holding a brevet grade.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter any officer of the Army holding a brevet grade shall be entitled to the pay and allowance of such grade while on duty thereunder by order of the President, and any officer who has been so serving during the present war shall be entitled to the pay and allowance of his brevet grade for such service already rendered.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That during the existing emergency any officer of the Army holding a brevet grade while serving as a member of the Supreme War Council, under order of the President, shall be entitled to the pay and allowance of such grade."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended in accordance with the text.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next one.

PAY FOR ARMY AND NAVY NURSE CORPS DURING INVOLUNTARY CAPTIVITY.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 12860.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12860) granting to members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and Navy Nurse Corps (female) pay and allowances during any period of involuntary captivity by the enemy of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if this includes now, in the language of the bill as amended by the committee amendment, all other employees or noncommissioned officers of the Army that may be captured by the enemy?

Mr. DENT. It includes clerks in the Quartermaster Corps and civilian employees, upon the recommendation of the War Department.

Mr. WALSH. I know the War Department has recommended it, but does it include them all? Is there any class of Army attachés—if that is the correct word—that is not included?

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that it includes them all, so far as we are advised. We put in everybody. It includes Army field clerks, field clerks of the Quartermaster Corps, and civilian employees of the Army. I can not imagine that the language could be more comprehensive.

Mr. BLACK. Does it include enlisted men?

Mr. DENT. Enlisted men are taken care of already.

Mr. BLACK. Under existing law?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does it include the Nurse Corps and ambulance drivers?

Mr. DENT. I think so. They are civil employees.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I notice it is limited to females as nurses, although the Secretary of War says that any member of the Army Nurse Corps should have this pay. I do not know whether it includes civilian employees. In line 8 the bill says, "her right to such full pay and allowances." I thought you might want to strike out the word "female."

Mr. DENT. I think the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] can answer that question.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. All the male nurses in the Army are enlisted men, so that they are taken care of under the law as it now is.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How about the Army field nurses?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They are all taken care of under this bill.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I know; but you say the Army field nurse shall be allowed the full pay and allowances during captivity by the enemy, and you refer to "her right."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Commitee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) shall be entitled to full pay and allowances during any period of involuntary captivity by the enemy of the United States; and her right to such full pay and allowances shall not be abridged or lost by reason of absence from duty when that absence is caused by involuntary captivity by the enemy of the United States. Any captivity by the enemy shall be construed to be involuntary until the contrary shall be affirmatively established.

All rights and privileges hereunder shall be in force from April 6, 1917, to the end of the existing war.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "female," insert the following: "Army field clerks, field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and civil employees of the Army."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. As the committee amendment is in the plural, would it not be better to harmonize the reference to the Army Nurse Corps, and also make that plural, to provide that members of the Army Nurse Corps, and so forth?

Mr. DENT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. And then, following the suggestion of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], strike out the word "her" and substitute "their."

Mr. DENT. I have no objection to those two amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the committee amendment will first be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 1, line 3, strike out the article "a," and strike out the word "number" and insert in lieu the word "numbers." Page 1, line 8, after the word "and," strike out the word "her" and insert in lieu thereof the word "their."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The title ought to be amended.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that the title be amended in accordance with the text.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended in accordance with the text.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHIEF NURSES.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13035) to amend section 4 of Chapter V of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, and to make said amendment retroactive.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I had some difficulty in understanding the report as to how the chief nurses had their salaries reduced, or did not receive the benefit of the increase that was heretofore voted to nurses in general. Will the chairman of the committee explain why it is necessary to change the increase of salary so as to make it $360 instead of $120 for chief nurses?

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that this bill was really worked out in conference on the Army appropriation bill, and the conferees intended to give an increase to each one of the classes of nurses, and we thought we were giving an increase to the chief nurses; but the claim is made that instead of giving an increase to the chief nurses we really reduced their pay $10 a month.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the purpose of this bill is to conform to the intention of the conferees?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of chapter 5 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, be, and the same hereby is, amended, to be effective as of and from July 9, 1918, by changing the clause "chief nurses, $120, in addition to the pay of a nurse," to "chief nurses, $360, in addition to the pay of a nurse."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE FIFTIETH ARTICLE OF WAR.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 13037, to amend the fiftieth article of war.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I ask that the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That article 50 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the Act entitled "An Act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"ART. 50. MITIGATION OR REMISSION OF SENTENCE.—The power to order the execution of the sentence adjudged by a court-martial shall be held to include, inter alia, the power to mitigate or remit the whole or any part of the sentence.

"Any unexecuted portion of a sentence adjudged by a court-martial may be mitigated or remitted by the military authority competent to appoint, for the command, exclusive of penitentiaries and the United States Disciplinary Barracks, in which the person under sentence is held, a court of the kind that imposed the sentence, and the same power may be exercised by superior military authority; but no sentence approved or confirmed by the President shall be remitted or mitigated by any other authority, and no approved sentence of loss of files by an officer shall be remitted or mitigated by any authority inferior to the President, except as provided in the fifty-second article.

"When empowered by the President so to do, the commanding general of the Army in the field or the commanding general of the territorial department or division may mitigate or remit, and order executed as mitigated or remitted, any sentence which under these articles requires the confirmation of the President before the same may be executed.

"The power of remission and mitigation shall extend to all uncollected forfeitures adjudged by sentence of a court-martial."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. WALSH. I renew it for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question. Would the effect of this be to prevent an appeal on the part of the soldier, or somebody interested in him, to the President for the mitigation of sentence after the commanding general had refused to mitigate it?

Mr. DENT. Not at all. I certainly would not favor it if I thought it did.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if this bill deprives the President of the right to mitigate or change any punishment inflicted by the court-martial?

Mr. DENT. Not at all; it gives the commanding officer the right to remit the sentence and, pending that, an appeal to the President. In other words, it gives the man two chances.

Mr. BOOHER. That is what I want to know, whether or not the President is deprived of any right to mitigate the punishment.

Mr. DENT. Not at all.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SOUTHERN BRANCH, NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13036) transferring jurisdiction and control for the period of the war over the Southern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the Secretary of War for use for Army hospital purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction and control over the Southern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, located at Hampton Roads, Va., be, and the same hereby is, transferred for the period of the war from the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the Secretary of War for use by the Medical Department of the Army for hospital purposes.

SEC. 2. That upon the close of the war or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, the Secretary of War shall cause said home to be vacated by the Medical Department of the Army, and thereupon jurisdiction and control over said home shall revert to said Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

SEC. 3. That the various items of appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for the support, maintenance, and other necessary expenses of said Southern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, be, and they hereby are, made available for payment of the cost of the transfer of the members of said home to other branches of the national home, and for the transfer of any property found to be necessary to transfer therefrom to other branches of the national home and for the support of the branches to which said members are transferred to the extent of the allotments thereof made by the said board of managers in consideration of and in the amount of and extra expense incurred by reason of said transfers and for the retransfer from said branches to said southern branch of the persons and property transferred as aforesaid at such time as jurisdiction and control over said southern branch shall be reinvested in said board of managers in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of this act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I certainly approve of the bill under consideration allowing one of the many branches of the homes for Volunteer soldiers to be utilized for hospital services under the jurisdiction of the War Department. I wish it included more of such branch homes.

Yesterday there was about to be presented for the consideration of the House a bill to provide for the expenditure of nearly $2,000,000 for the erection of a hospital at Dawson Springs, Ky. It was claimed that there were no facilities in the country where discharged soldiers who return to a civilian capacity could be placed. And yet the hearings before the Appropriation Committee show that in one of these branch homes, in the neighborhood of Dawson City, in Johnson City, Tenn., there have been for years three barracks that had never been occupied by any soldiers whatever. That home at Johnson City, Tenn., could well be utilized for the benefit of persons who have tubercular trouble, who have been discharged from the Army, and not go to the extravagant expenditure of millions of dollars in building a sanatorium that will not be available for months and months. There is an instance where there are accommodations at Johnson City, Tenn., especially intended and adapted for tubercular patients.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Why does the gentleman say that the home in Johnson City is specially intended for tubercular patients?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because I have been so informed that those who have been troubled with tubercular afflictions have been sent to this home in Tennessee. I remember some years ago that that question came up in legislative work, and that was my information.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. From what source did the gentleman obtain the information?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not recall, but I know positively from the testimony disclosed by the hearings last year before the Committee on Appropriations that there were three barracks at this home that have never been used at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Hospital barracks?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the gentleman ever been at this home at Johnson City?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I undertake to say to the gentleman that the Johnson City soldiers' home could not be prepared as a place for the treatment of tubercular patients at a cost less than that which is provided in this Dawson Springs bill. I am not an expert.

Mr. STAFFORD. No one except the present occupant of the chair [Mr. FOSTER] pretends to be an expert on tubercular trouble, but I have made some little observation of tubercular hospitals. We have one maintained at the expense of Milwaukee County in the suburbs of Milwaukee. We have another one maintained at the expense of the State at Wales, Wis., and from the character of buildings there it does not require any great change to utilize the barracks and buildings of present branch homes to fit them for those afflicted with tubercular trouble.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The distinction between this bill and the bill seeking to establish a sanatorium at Dawson Springs is that this seeks to make room for tubercular patients who have not been discharged from the military service. The one at Dawson Springs is for those already discharged, not any longer under the jurisdiction of the Army or Navy, but under the jurisdiction and liability of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes, Mr. Speaker, and our State recognizes the obligations it owes to its own citizens who have tubercular trouble by providing separate institutions for their care and treatment. Our own county of Milwaukee recognizes its obligations to such civilians by establishing an institution which is carried on at its own expense, and when the war is over we will have all of these cantonments, which could be readily utilized, where we have expended millions of dollars, where they could be transformed very easily for tubercular units rather than going down to Dawson Springs in the wilderness and spending very nearly $2,000,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, was laid on the table.

FEES FOR CLAIM AGENTS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 12769, relative to fees for claim agents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama calls up the bill H. R. 12769. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, without the objection being waived, to have the bill read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized in the presentation or adjudication of claims for the collection of any pay or allowance due on account of services rendered by persons in the service of the Army or Navy of the United States.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall directly or indirectly solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, or who shall attempt to solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, any fee or compensation from any relative or next of kin, or the estate of any person in the service of the Army or Navy of the United States, for the alleged purpose of securing or of aiding in securing from the United States Government any pay or allowance due such person for any purpose whatever shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and for each and every offense shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

"Provided, That if after the expiration of one year the Government of the United States has failed to act upon such claim, or if within such period the Government of the United States has rejected any such claim, then the provisions of the act shall not apply."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to direct especial attention to the language of the first section, and inquire whether it is the intention of the committee to forbid any attorney from presenting any claim whatsoever to the attention of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance for the collection of any allotments that may be due, as, for example, a divorced wife by reason of marriage to an enlisted soldier. In the past two weeks an attorney has written me in behalf of a matter where he had presented the claim of a wife who was engaged in divorce proceedings against her husband, who wished to receive the necessary allotment that was accorded her. I take it, under this phraseology, that the wife would be without the relief of counsel to obtain her rights from the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance. I have no objection to the second section, which forbids solicitation of these services, but I question seriously whether an attorney should be deprived of the right of presenting a legitimate claim to the attention of bureaus here.

Mr. DENT. That would be true unless it came within the proviso which we have added on in the nature of a committee amendment:

Provided, That if after the expiration of one year the Government of the United States has failed to act upon such claim, or if within such period the Government of the United States has rejected any such claim, then the provisions of this act shall not apply.

Mr. STAFFORD. I question whether the rights of citizens of the United States will not be impaired by the passage of the first section of this bill. Here is a wife who has had trouble with her husband. He enters the service in order to avoid legal proceedings, perhaps. That wife will not be able to employ counsel, under the language of the first section of this bill, to get her allotment that is owing to her. The second section forbids the solicitation on the part of an attorney, and I have no objection to that.

Mr. BLACK. And it also forbids even a contract, though he might not solicit at all.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think this bill applies to matters pertaining to war-risk insurance at all. The particular case brought to the attention of the committee was by Mr. TREADWAY, of Massachusetts, where a soldier had lost his life and some claim agent had made application to his next of kin for an order to collect that money due him from the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit right there?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will stop and read the first section he will see that it is so broad it does apply directly to the collection of allowances under the war-risk insurance. The allotment is the result of services rendered by the soldier in the service of the United States Army. Let us read it.

Mr. DENT. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Is the gentleman's point this, that if we strike out the first section he has no objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Texas reminds me that even the second section would forbid entering into a contract.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think this bill ought to go over for future consideration, because none of us wish to forbid——

Mr. DENT. That is the clear object of the bill. Let me call attention to a letter of the Secretary of War on the subject.

My attention has been called to some very serious abuses which are growing up in the country, illustrated by a letter which I inclose from a Washington solicitor or lawyer which, if you use, I will be glad to have you suppress the name of the person to whom it was sent. It seems to me a very unfortunate thing to have the people of the country plagued and set upon by solicitation of this kind in the hours of their fresh distress, and as the casualty lists are daily coming in, I am anxious to procure immediate protection for the relatives of deceased soldiers. A bill introduced by Representative TREADWAY, entitled "A bill relative to fees for claim agents," is aimed at the breaking up of this evil, and I am writing this letter to urge that Mr. TREADWAY'S bill be given as early consideration as is consistent with the convenience of the committee.

Cordially, yours, ——— ———.

Now, the letter that he inclosed without divulging the name of the attorney is a letter to the father of the soldier in North Carolina.

The soldier or sailor having died during his Army or naval service, there was probably due him from the United States Government at the time of his death some arrears of pay or allowances, and to obtain the same a proper application must be filed by the legal heirs.

I am therefore taking the liberty of sending herewith a suitable application, and if the person entitled to the money wishes me to assist her or him in the matter, and upon the terms mentioned in the application, all that she, or he, need now do is to have the application filled, then sign it in the presence of two persons, and swear to it, and return it to me for filing.

Upon the return of the application I will promptly assist in obtaining and filing the necessary proofs in support of the case.

If anything is found due the check therefor will be sent to the claimant direct from the Treasury Department, and upon its receipt by the claimant, she, or he, should then promptly send me the amount of my fee, as specified in the application.

I specialize in this class of claims, and as to my standing and responsibility I can refer you to any bank or financial institution here.

Hoping that you may give the matter prompt attention, I am——

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit I can answer the gentleman further. After reviewing again section 2 I find that will amply cover the instance of the case cited by the gentleman and that if you will eliminate section 1 you will obviate the difficulty which I a moment ago presented.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, still further reserving the right to object, I am thoroughly in sympathy with the idea of prohibiting the soliciting of any claims of this kind, but as I understand section 2 it would be broad enough absolutely to forbid any lawyer from receiving any compensation of any kind for services of this kind.

Mr. DENT. That is what it is intended to do.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The law already passed by this House takes care of the matter of war-risk insurance. That is absolutely covered by another act. This act applies only to the money due a man for his service as sailor or soldier and automatically that money comes to him without any action whatever by any one and the object of this bill was to prevent a claim agent from securing pay for something for which he rendered no service, and the idea of allowing a year to expire was to cover maybe a possible case whereby some sort of a complication which we might not foresee there should be a valid claim existing against the Government, and the man would be entitled then to secure an attorney. We might have put it six months, or whatever time, but this is established at one year's time.

Mr. ROGERS. Of course the gentleman understands that as the war-risk insurance law is now being administered a part of the enlisted man's pay may go to his family via the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance and a part via the finance division of the Quartermaster General's Office?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROGERS. If I understand this bill correctly, it would apply only to the second method of payment, would it not?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It would apply only to that portion of the man's pay that was due him at the time of his being separated from the service of the United States on the rolls of the United States Army and the United States Navy.

Mr. ROGERS. Would not that apply to any payments made while he was in the service, provided those payments were made through the Quartermaster General's Office of the War Department?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They would be payments due, not payments made him.

Mr. ROGERS. Let me ask how the gentleman deduces that from the language of the bill?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Because that is the language of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. It says:

That no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized in the presentation or adjudication of claims for the collection of any pay or allowance due on account of services rendered.

Now, is not the payment made through the Quartermaster General on behalf of a soldier who makes an allotment to his family at home in the nature of pay or of an allowance, so as to come within that language?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Well, that may be true. The law as to the War-Risk Insurance Bureau and the administration of that law I have not before me, but the language of this act was drafted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], and his idea is to reach this other class of cases.

Mr. ROGERS. I am in entire sympathy with the purposes of this bill. But the gentleman will remember that in the war-risk law as amended there is allowed an attorney a maximum of $3 for the presentation of a case handled by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, whereas if it happens that the same case is handled through the Quartermaster General's Department under this bill he would not be allowed one cent for the presentation of the case.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the money comes from the Quartermaster General's Department, as we were informed, it comes to the soldier automatically, and does not require in any sense the attention of an attorney. Therefore the committee was of the opinion that an attorney should not be allowed any fee.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. In the last few days I have received a letter from a constituent of mine who is the grandfather of a sailor that was on the collier Cyclops, that was lost and never heard from. Now, that young man had some pay due at the time of his death.

The grandfather wants to know whether or not he can collect it. I took the matter up with the Auditor of the Navy Department, and he says that an administrator will have to be appointed before that money can be collected. Would not the language you have in this bill be broad enough to absolutely forbid any money out of the pay that is coming to that soldier to be used as a fee to the lawyer for securing the administration papers?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think it would.

Mr. BLACK. I think the thing you want to strike at and prevent is the direct or indirect solicitation of contracts. And permit me to suggest the following language that would accomplish that purpose:

That any person who shall directly or indirectly solicit a contract—

Put the word "a" between "solicit" and "contract"—

for—

And strike out "charge or receive"— or who shall attempt to solicit and contract for—

And strike out "charge or receive," so that it would read—

That any person who shall directly or indirectly solicit and contract for or who shall attempt to solicit and contract for any fee or compensation—

And so on.

Mr. DENT. I think the gentleman's amendment is a good one.

Mr. STAFFORD. And strike out section 1.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to strike out section 1, and I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROGERS. Permit me a further question. Will the gentleman turn to the first part of the proviso, on page 2:

Provided, That if after the expiration of one year the Government of the United States has failed to act upon such claim—

And so forth.

I think that might be construed to accomplish the meaning sought by the committee, but I suggest that the insertion of the words "after presentation," after the words "one year," would be much clearer and much better adapted to accomplishing the purpose sought.

The proviso then would read:

Provided, That if after the expiration of one year after presentation the Government of the United States has failed to act upon such claim.

As the language now stands the bill might be construed to be entirely void one year after the date of its enactment, which, of course, is not what the committee has in mind. The committee evidently has in mind the idea that if the payment is not made within one year after the claim accrues, at whatever date this may be, an attorney may then be employed.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is, if the settlement of the claim shall not have been made by the Government within one year?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes. Not, as the bill now reads, within one year of the date of the law but within one year after the presentation of the claim.

Mr. DENT. I do not know whether I can agree with that or not. The object of the committee was to give one year from the time the claim matured, whether it was presented or not. The gentleman's amendment, I think, would make it more rigid than the committee intended.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman gets my point, does he not, that as the law now stands it amounts to nothing after one year from the time of its enactment?

Mr. DENT. I think that is all right. If the Government does not pay it within one year, I think he ought to have a lawyer.

Mr. ROGERS. But the claim may not be presented within a year after enactment of this law. The claim may not even come into being until after the expiration of the year mentioned in this proviso.

Mr. DENT. I do not follow the gentleman's reasoning.

Mr. BLACK. I suggest that at the expiration of one year from the time of the accrual of the claim. That would perhaps accomplish the purpose intended.

Mr. ROGERS. That is precisely the equivalent of what I had in mind.

Mr. BLACK. I suggest that the gentleman offer that amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. I will offer that, but I do not wish to offer an amendment unless the committee thinks it is necessary. But it strikes me that that change would be necessary and desirable.

Mr. DENT. I rather think that the gentleman's amendment would make it a little more rigid than the committee intended. I think the present language covers the idea now.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. It seems to me that any person who had a claim, or thought he had a claim under the law for compensation, should have a lawyer. But the solicitation of these attorneys for fees when they are not necessary ought not to be allowed. But it seems to me that many cases might arise in the experience of uneducated claimants who are entitled to something and who would not know how to proceed. I think they ought to be allowed to go to a lawyer in whom they have confidence, and it seems to me if we were to leave the amount of the fee open, to be determined by the department that pays the claim, after examining into the services rendered, that ought to be the standard on which these claims ought to be paid. In other words, every claim for compensation ought to be submitted to the department that makes the payment when the amount is adjusted and fixed, so that the lawyer should not be made to feel that he comes within the clutches of the law if he gives advice to a client. I have done enough work as a Congressman to entitle me to a fee if I had been a private individual, but——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What has a Congressman to do except to make inquiries?

Mr. HARDY. I can not say in detail all he has to do. When you destroy the right of a private individual to employ the counsel of a lawyer, you are going to put a lot of labor on Members of Congress. When the department is allowed to say how much the payment is to be, it seems that would secure justice. I think every fee ought to be regulated by the department of the Government that pays the claim.

Mr. DENT. The entire object of this bill was to prevent the solicitation by the Washington attorneys of people who really were going to get their money without the payment of a fee. I know the gentleman has sympathy with that. I believe that by adopting the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], by striking out section 1, that would accomplish what is desired.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. What is the object of striking out section 1? Why should it be stricken out? It means that the department shall not recognize any claim agent or attorney.

Mr. DENT. The object in striking that out is not absolutely to prohibit the department from recognizing an attorney who makes a valid legal contract.

Mr. BOOHER. If you leave that in, then where is the opportunity for preventing claim agents from getting in?

Mr. DENT. The second section will take care of that.

Mr. BOOHER. I do not think the second section will take care of it at all. The department can not recognize a claim coming from a claim agent or attorney under the first section. Let us see. It provides—

That no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized in the presentation or adjudication of claims for the collection of any pay or allowance due on account of services rendered by persons in the service of the Army or Navy of the United States.

The department can not recognize a claim that comes from a claim agent or attorney if that is left in. It has no authority.

Mr. BLACK. It was recommended that that be stricken out.

Mr. BOOHER. Why do you want to strike that out?

Mr. BLACK. For the reason that the gentleman has just stated, that it might become very necessary for a claimant to be represented by an attorney, as in the case I cited, where an administrator has to be appointed, and where not a nickel can be collected without administration.

Mr. BOOHER. That does not require the services of an attorney.

Mr. BLACK. I should like to know how you can get an administrator appointed without the services of an attorney.

Mr. BOOHER. Anybody can go into the probate court and have an administrator appointed, and if the probate judge knows his business an attorney is not needed. One-half the estates that go through probate do not have any lawyer connected with them in my State.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman's State must be an exception, because in most cases they are represented by attorneys.

Mr. BOOHER. We elect probate judges who know their business. I think on reflection the gentleman will see that it is not best to strike out section 1.

Mr. DENT. I really do not care one way or the other about section 1, except that it does look to me after a rereading of it that it is rather stringent. But in view of the proviso that has been put in there I think it makes very little difference whether it is stricken out or left in.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. If the chairman please, I wish he would speak loud enough to be heard on this side of the House.

Mr. DENT. I thought I was speaking loud enough to be heard. I said that in view of the proviso put in by the committee I did not think it made very much difference whether we left in section 1 or struck it out.

Mr. ROGERS. I submit to the chairman of the committee that the teeth are entirely removed from this bill if the House accepts the second part of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas. If that amendment were adopted there would be nothing left of the bill, unless you could prove a solicitation. And, after all, with the cunning of professional claim attorneys it might be pretty hard to prove a solicitation. It strikes me that if we are going to have this legislation at all we ought to have legislation that will absolutely grasp these fellows and make sure that they can not have their own way.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. NORTON. I am very much interested in this legislation, and I quite agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] that the legislation should be prohibitive of the receiving of any fee within the year, and not merely prohibitive of soliciting or attempting to solicit a contract. There are in Washington and in some of the other large cities of the country claim agents who are as ravenous wolves in soliciting contracts and in concocting schemes to obtain easy fees from people who are unacquainted with the workings of the departments of the Government. These fees they secure through misrepresentations and without rendering any real service other than the service of soliciting these fees and devising schemes for separating honest and credulous people from their money. I do not believe that the prohibition in the law can be too strict as to this class of claims. It seems to me that the legislation proposed is very good as it stands in the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman want to deny to a litigant or claimant the services of a lawyer in a legitimate case; for instance, in a case where an administrator is absolutely necessary? Does the gentleman want to pass an act saying that he can not employ an attorney in a legitimate way?

Mr. NORTON. No; I do not; and I do not think the legislation would prevent that. If the estate was administered a mere letter to the United States Government or to the Navy Department or to the War Department would bring to the administrator the amount of the claim.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I believe that we ought to have some legislation of this character, and I think if we leave the bill just as it is, strike out in the proviso "one year" and insert "six months," that it will meet every objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will recognize that, as far as presenting claims before the War-Risk Bureau is concerned, we recognize the right of an attorney to present a claim. Now you are going to deny the right so as to prevent a claim before the Quartermaster Corps, and there is no consistency in that.

Mr. DENT. The Government will pay the claim without an attorney, and there is no reason why people should pay attorneys when the Government will pay without them.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have in mind an instance where a reputable attorney representing the wife of a husband who enlisted so as to evade the service in a divorce suit. He is trying to bluff the payment of an allowance to her, and yet you are going to prevent any representation by an attorney to reach cases of that kind.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. The objection which I voiced a moment ago to the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas related only to his suggested amendment to section 2. I think his point as to section 1 is entirely sound. Let me instance this case: The Red Cross throughout the country has very elaborate machinery for providing bureaus of attorneys who shall render services free of charge to the relatives of soldiers who may be in need of legal assistance in presenting their claims or getting information, or whatever it may be, here in Washington. The Red Cross, through these attorneys, acts entirely without compensation. It is purely a gratuitous service, a part of the generous and beneficent functions of the Red Cross. And yet, if I read section 1 correctly, these Red Cross lawyers would be absolutely precluded by this language from even having correspondence with any branch of the United States Government, in spite of the fact that they were not receiving one cent of compensation, directly or indirectly, for that service.

Mr. DENT. I do not agree with the gentleman about that. I think if a man volunteers his services he does not come within the definition of a claim agent.

Mr. ROGERS. The section says that "no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized," and so forth.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, has consent been given for the consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. BLACK. I want to propose an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment. Does the gentleman from Alabama want to offer an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. DENT. Yes. I offer an amendment to line 8, changing it from one year to six months.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DENT: Page 2, line 8, strike out the words "one year" and insert in lieu thereof "six months."

Mr. ROGERS. I move to amend the amendment by adding to the amendment the words "after its accrual."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That amendment is not now in order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 26, noes 4.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment to insert the words "after its accrual."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "months," insert the words "after its accrual."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not yet get the idea of my colleague in using the word "accrual." Does he not think that it is better to use the words "after its presentation to the Government"? The claim might accrue on enlistment.

Mr. ROGERS. They may never present it. The question, as the gentleman from Texas made clear, devolves upon when it actually comes into being and not when it comes to the knowledge of the Government.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Suppose it does not come to the knowledge of the man himself?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLACK: Page 1, line 9, after the word "solicit," insert "a," and after the word "for" strike out the words "charge or receive," and, in line 10, after the word "solicit," insert "a," and after the word "for" strike out the words "charge, or receive."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, was any action taken upon the adoption of the committee amendment as amended?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not so far. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 of section 1 of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Strike out lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 on page 1.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 3, page 1, by inserting, after the word "no," the word "paid."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "no," insert the word "paid."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENLISTMENTS IN NATIONAL GUARD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 3735) to provide for enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be rather an important measure and I do not think we ought to take it up at this hour of the night. I object for the present.

PAY OF CADETS, MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 12834) providing increase in pay for cadets of the Military Academy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill can likewise go over to some subsequent date. I object.

LONGEVITY PAY OF CERTAIN OFFICERS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I have one other bill and I am through, and that is the bill H. R. 13016, which has not been reported from the Military Committee, and I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Military Committee from further consideration of that bill and that it be put upon its passage. This bill proposes to correct the ruling of the comptroller as to the longevity pay of officers who have served in the National Guard and Organized Militia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to discharge the Military Committee from further consideration of the bill H. R. 13016 and that the same be considered at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FEDERAL AID TO STATE HOMES FOR SOLDIERS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] has a bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs that he desires to call up.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 5167.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5167) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States," approved August 27, 1888, as amended March 2, 1889.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation as to wherein this bill changes existing law.

Mr. CURRY of California. It changes existing law by increasing the Federal contribution for the maintenance of these homes from $100 to $120 a year. That is the only place the change is made. The bill has been referred to the department and has been reported upon favorably.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman figured out what the cost of this change will be?

Mr. CURRY of California. We have one home in California where the increased cost will be between $15,000 and $16,000 a year. I believe there are 10 or 12 homes in the United States where the State pays half and the Federal Government pays half.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Let me answer the gentleman. In New Jersey we have a home at Kearny that has 500 patients, as a rule, or had; it is a little less now. The 500 patients used to cost $50,000 to the United States, at $100 apiece, and $60,000 to the State—a little more than that, $120 a year to the State. The State paid the most of the cost of that. About two-thirds went for mere subsistence, food, and the rest for salaries and expenses, coal, light, and so forth. Now, since the great increase in the cost of living, the cost of the food has gone to double, and instead of costing the State $60,000 it costs them over $100,000 a year—$120,000 a year—it has gone up so. Although they have reduced the salaries the food cost is something almost prohibitive. It was understood when the United States appropriated $100 a year that it expected to pay just the bare cost of food for the people who were there living and the other expenses were for the State and——

Mr. CURRY of California. And the medicines have doubled, too.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, we had a very exhaustive hearing on this bill by the superintendent of the California home, who brought the complete figures there. The policy of the Government has been for the National Government to pay one-half of the cost of those men in the different soldiers' homes, $100 a year being the fixed price, but owing to the increased cost, as the gentleman from New Jersey has explained, the Government does not anywhere near now pay one-half, and the modest increase of $20 a month, in the opinion of the committee, does not cover the increased cost to the State or the Government in the maintenance of the soldier, and this $20 a month is only a partial payment to the State of the extra expense.

Mr. CURRY of California. It costs our State $175 for each one now in addition to what they get from the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This is a Union Calendar bill.

Mr. CURRY of California. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all States or Territories which have established, or which shall hereafter establish, State homes for disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States who served in the War of the Rebellion or in any previous or subsequent war, who are disabled by age, disease, or otherwise, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning a living, provided such disability was not incurred in service against the United States, shall be paid for every such disabled soldier or sailor who may be admitted and cared for in such home at the rate of $120 per annum.

The number of such persons for whose care any State or Territory shall receive the said payment under this act shall be ascertained by the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers under such regulations as it may prescribe, but the said State or Territorial homes shall be exclusively under the control of the respective State or Territorial authorities, and the board of managers shall not have nor assume any management or control of said State or Territorial homes.

The board of managers of the National home shall, however, have power to have the said State or Territorial homes inspected at such times as it may consider necessary, and shall report the result of such inspections to Congress in its annual report: Provided, That no State shall be paid a sum exceeding one-half the cost of maintenance of each soldier or sailor by such State: Provided further, That one-half of any sum or sums retained by State homes on account of pensions received from inmates shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURRY of California, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING, EL DORADO, KANS.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R. 12881. I was not present this morning when it was called up, as I was unavoidably detained, and I would like the present consideration of the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 12881, which was objected to this morning.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12881) to increase the cost of the public building at Eldorado, Kans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I know the gentleman is very anxious to have this measure considered. He has spoken to me about it. I objected when it came up earlier in the day, and stated the reasons therefor, and I still think we ought not to pick out particular localities and permit an increased cost of buildings to be made, and I am inclined to further object to its consideration.

Mr. AYRES. My understanding is that you have no objection to its remaining on the calendar?

Mr. WALSH. No; I have not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman objects to the present consideration.

Mr. WALSH. I did not intend by my objection to send it off the calendar, but I objected just to returning and taking it up.

SANATORIUM AT DAWSON SPRINGS, KY.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee presents a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 437.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 12917, entitled "A bill to provide for the establishment of a sanatorium for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes"; that there shall be not to exceed one hour of general debate. At the conclusion of such general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. After the bill shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the same shall be reported to the House with such recommendation as the committee may make, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee: After the word "resolution" strike out "the House shall resolve itself," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "It shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Will the gentleman withhold that question until I ask unanimous consent on a bill that is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I should prefer to dispose of this matter now, if I can. Is it on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Yes; on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then I withhold my request.

PUBLIC-BUILDING SITE, YONKERS, N. Y.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill that relates to the correction of a site at Yonkers, N. Y.—House bill 8828.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 8828, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8828) authorizing the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Yonkers, N. Y.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. I will say that this is not any increase of appropriation for the public building. It is really to correct a situation regarding the site, and it is a bill that was drafted by the Treasury Department. An appropriation of $250,000 was made for the acquisition of a site in Yonkers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object. I think the bill ought to be reported before the objection is waived.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8828) authorizing the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Yonkers, N. Y.

Be it enacted, etc., That the existing legislation authorizing the acquisition of a public-building site at Yonkers, N. Y., at a limit of cost of $250,000, and for the erection thereon of a public building at a limit of cost of $250,000, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to fix a joint limit of cost of $662,500 for said site and building, and the appropriations heretofore made under said separate limits of cost are hereby made available for the acquisition of said site and the erection of said building within the joint limit of cost hereby prescribed.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, when said site shall have been acquired, to sell to the city of Yonkers, N. Y., for such price, at such time, and upon such terms as he may deem for the best interests of the United States, such portions of said site fronting on Buena Vista Avenue and Market Place as he may deem it advisable to spare for the purpose of widening the abutting streets, to convey said land to the city by the usual quitclaim deed, and to deposit the proceeds of said sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the existing legislation authorizing the acquisition of a public building site at Yonkers, N. Y., at a limit of cost of $250,000, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to fix a limit of cost of $338,500 for the said site, and the appropriations heretofore made under separate limits of cost are hereby made available for the acquisition of said site within the limit of cost hereby prescribed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire if it is the purpose to object to the consideration of the rule that has just been presented?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Answering for myself—and I can only answer for myself—I do not.

Mr. GILLETT. Did I understand you to ask if anybody was going to object?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. I think it would save time if the gentleman would allow me to state why I shall object. I do not think I have any sectional or any personal feeling on the subject; but I feel that if the Government is going to start in to build sanatoriums for tuberculosis, as the gentleman suggested this morning there would have to be one in every State. I think there ought to be before the House one general program by the health authorities before we commence. I have always supposed that Arizona and Colorado, and perhaps high places like the Adirondacks, were peculiarly sanitary in the treatment of tuberculosis. I may be wrong about that. I do not think this House ought to pick out one place now for one particular sanatorium, but I think the health authorities ought to come before us with a full and complete scheme, covering the whole country and the whole subject. Therefore I shall feel constrained to make the point of no quorum if this rule is insisted on.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman is not willing that it may be made the unfinished business?

Mr. GILLETT. No. I should be willing——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And would make the point of no quorum to-morrow?

Mr. GILLETT. I should make it again to-morrow. I do not want to be unfair about it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand. The gentleman from Massachusetts is never unfair.

Mr. GILLETT. Thank you. But it seems to me that my suggestion ought to impress itself upon all Members of the House, and therefore I shall feel——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It does not impress itself upon me. However, I shall make no objection.

Mr. BLACK. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I shall at the proper time insist upon this motion and let the gentleman from Massachusetts take the responsibility——

Mr. GILLETT. Yes——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Which he is always willing to take.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I want to make an inquiry about the bill that the gentleman from New York has asked consideration for. As I understand it, the present law authorizes the appropriation of $250,000 for the site?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. BLACK. And the bill as amended would raise the limit of cost for the site to $338,500?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Yes. If the gentleman will permit, the $250,000 has been expended, with the exception of $28,500. The Government, in order to acquire the land, was obliged to institute condemnation proceedings. There were five parcels. The total cost was $117,000, in accordance with the awards which have already been made, in excess of the money which they have already expended. They have acquired three parcels. They have the title to those three parcels. The two remaining parcels require $117,000.

Mr. BLACK. Have awards already been made?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Yes; awards have already been made. Awards have been made for all the parcels. In that situation the present administration of the city of Yonkers has said to the Government that the moment it acquires title to the two remaining parcels the city will contribute something near $60,000 of the amount required in purchase from the Government of two 20-foot strips on each of two ends of the block, where there are now narrow streets; so that they will be better adapted for post-office purposes if this bill goes through. Now, while the present administration of the city is bound by the offer they have made, the Government will get advantage of nearly $60,000 and also the advantage of two widened streets at the two ends of the block for post-office purposes.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. Condemnation proceedings have been brought?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Yes; and the awards have been made.

Mr. SEARS. I have several cities in my district that are entitled to buildings, but I have not pressed the claims on account of the agreement we entered into not to pass these bills during the war. But in that case, as I understand it, the bill was passed some years ago, and the Government has condemned the property and can take it over at any time. The parties that own the property therefore are in the position where they can not collect from the Government because there was not enough appropriated in the first bill. For at least more than one year they have had this property on their hands. They can not fix it up and lease it, and they can not make a time lease, but are forced to rent same from day to day or from month to month. In justice to the owners of the land the Government in this case, having gone through condemnation proceedings, should, it seems to me, make an appropriation sufficient to meet the findings of the court, so that the owners of the land can get their money. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not object in view of those facts.

Mr. BLACK. What kind of an assurance does the gentleman from New York have that the city of Yonkers will make this contribution?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. I have an assurance that comes from the authorities of a city of a hundred thousand people.

Mr. BLACK. Has the gentleman any evidence of that promise or assurance?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. I have here a formal letter from the mayor of the city of Yonkers. One reason why I am anxious to have this bill passed now is because administrations come and go; they change. There are always objections from taxpayers to the expenditure of public money, and the situation therefore that may exist to-day to the advantage of the Federal Government may not exist some time in the future. But the present situation, I can assure the gentleman from Texas, is that the moment this bill becomes a law, and the Government acquires the title to the two remaining parcels, the city will contribute the amount for those two 20-foot strips and will improve the street, and the widened streets will be of benefit for post-office purposes.

Mr. BLACK. Do I understand that the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended this increase?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. The Secretary of the Treasury has recommended it. The original bill was drafted in the Treasury Department.

Mr. BLACK. And the acceptance of the site from the city of Yonkers?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I presume it is the Secretary of the Treasury and not the Director of Railroads who is doing that. The Director General of Railroads is not so liberal in recommending the payment of sums of money due.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. I was referring to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH. Does this in any way increase the cost of the building?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. No; it does not. The bill as originally drafted by the Secretary of the Treasury provided for an increase in the cost of the building in accordance with the plans, but in that respect the committee amended the bill so as to eliminate the increased cost of the building and limited the bill only to the correction of the site situation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CERTAIN CLAIMS OF THE CHEROKEE NATION.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent (H. R. 357), conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine certain claims of the Cherokee Nation against the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I withhold it. As I stated yesterday, I went over these two bills several months ago. One of them I was very strongly opposed to and the other one I was not. I have not had time to go over the bill since. I wish to do full justice to the gentleman's bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Chair understands that this does not take this bill off the calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that it does not take the bill off the calendar.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to address the House to-morrow for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tmpore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I understand that if a point of no quorum is made we will recess until a week from Monday?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. That is the understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. I object. I understand there will not be any session to-morrow.

SANATORIUM AT DAWSON SPRINGS, KY.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the rule.

Mr. GILLETT. And I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement I made at the opening of the session to-day, I desire now to say that no further business will be transacted until one week from Monday and that that will exclude even requests for unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD. There will be no business transacted. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts withhold his point for a moment?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I now ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Reserving the right to object, in case there is no quorum, whether or not a quorum will be demanded.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. There will be no attempt to get a quorum until Monday, the 14th.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. At that time there will be an order asked to bring Members in.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman mean that a quorum will be demanded on Monday, the 14th?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. If a point of no quorum is made and no quorum is here, the House will order a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. But in the absence of any demand for a quorum there will be no call?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Certainly not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The real object of a quorum, as I understand, is the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. The urgent deficiency bill, the consideration of war measures, and the rule the gentleman from Tennessee presented awhile ago.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There will be some Members here. There will be some legislation that can be passed without objection, I think. For instance, here is a bill of very great importance pending touching the matter of the insurance of the old-line companies and in fraternal orders on the lives of soldiers. I do not know about the details of the bill, but I do not think there will be any objection to the passage of that bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. But there was objection yesterday to the consideration of it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to submit to the gentleman from Illinois whether or not he would insist upon making a motion to adjourn immediately after reading the Journal.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. That is my intention.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If objection is made to the consideration of the bill, or if a point of no quorum is made upon bringing in a rule for the consideration of the rule, then, of course, we would adjourn, but it seems to me there is some legislation unobjected to which could be passed by those who remain here. I do not wish to embarrass the gentleman from Illinois, and the gentleman from Illinois knows it.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. The gentleman from Tennessee was not present at the opening of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I was and heard the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. In view of the understanding at the beginning of the session I shall have to object to all business and move to adjourn each day when the reading of the Journal is concluded.

Mr. GILLETT. It seems to me that that is the only practicable course, because otherwise that would keep Members here, and the intention is that everybody shall be treated alike and need not stay here. It might happen that those who are in favor of the bill would be here while those not in favor of it would be away. I think the gentleman from Illinois is quite right in his program.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not complaining at all; I just thought that there were some things that even a small number could do to which there would be no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. I think they had better wait a week.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WOODS of Iowa. I object.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I announce that each day I will make a request for three days' recess, and if we can not get it by unanimous consent I shall move to adjourn each day after the reading of the Journal. I expect to move to adjourn to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the work of this Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the work of this Congress. Is there objection?

Mr. RAGSDALE. I object.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, October 5, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for necessary increases in salaries in the mechanical and laboring forces of the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1316); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia submitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the District of Columbia for disposal of city refuse fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1317); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Attorney General submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the Department of Justice for the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1318); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 13047) relative to the pay of regimental sergeant majors, battalion sergeant majors, and first sergeants, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRUMBAUGH: A bill (H. R. 13048) providing for the waiving of civil-service requirements in the case of certain honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, or marines; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 13049) providing for the extension of time for the reclamation of certain lands in the State of Oregon under the Carey Act; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DENTON: A bill (H. R. 13053) to incorporate the War Mothers of America; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. JAMES: Resolution (H. Res. 441) providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate conditions at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, Washington, District of Columbia; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. LONDON: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 54) creating a committee to be known as the Joint Congressional Committee on Reconstruction; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GRIFFIN: A bill (H. R. 13050) granting an increase of pension to Annie A. Cousins; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 13051) granting a pension to Mary Redfield; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KEY of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 13052) granting a pension to William H. Dean; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition from 46 citizens and relatives of the men in the military service of the Nation, urging the passage of the Edmonds bill (H. R. 5531) "to increase the efficiency of the Medical Department of the United States Army, to provide a pharmaceutical corps in that department, and to improve the status and efficiency of the pharmacist in the Army"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAKER: Petition from the Southern Pacific Mills Association, of San Francisco, indorsing the suggestion of the Food Administration that the mixed-flour law be suspended for the period of the war; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of the National Model League, against prohibition; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, October 5, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, for the disclosures Thou hast made of Thyself in the works of Thy hands; the history of men and of nations; the still, small voice; the life, character, and teachings of Thy Son, whom we recognize as the paragon of perfection, the acme of perfected manhood. May we emulate His character in the common daily duties of life, that we may walk in the light, enter the straight gate, and tread the narrow way which leads to life eternal; and Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY and Mr. RANDALL rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, but I understand that some sort of an arrangement has been made——

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object. I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next. Is there objection?

Mr. WOODS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4957. An act to establish the Lafayette National Park in the State of Maine; and

S. 4924. An act to amend section 336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the annual report on the statistics of commerce and navigation of the United States with foreign countries.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4924. An act to amend section 336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the annual report on the statistics of commerce and navigation of the United States with foreign countries; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 4957. An act to establish the Lafayette National Park, in the State of Maine; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, October 7, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, submitting a tentative draft of a proposed bill authorizing the appointment of additional field clerks for the Quartermaster Corps (H. Doc. No. 1319); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a tentative draft of a proposed bill, providing for the construction of new and additional vaults in the Treasury Building (H. Doc. No. 1320); to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII,

Mr. WARD introduced a bill (H. R. 13054) granting a pension to Edward Kneibe, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII,

Mr. LINTHICUM laid on the Clerk's desk a petition from Dr. R. R. Kemingham, favoring House bill 5407, allowing osteopath doctors to take the same examination set for the other systems of healing and if they pass be admitted to the Army on the same basis, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

MONDAY, October 7, 1918.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

O God, our Heavenly Father, amid the strife and confusion of the world at war, in the midst of scenes of sickness and death at home and on the battle fields of Europe, we turn in our distress to Thee for succor, for Thou art our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. May Thy kind providence therefore overshadow us and deliver us, and may we never lose sight of Thy grace and Thy power. As we go forth to battle for the right give wisdom to our leaders in all the delicate and difficult questions they have to consider. May Thy will be sought and may Thy plans be unfolded in all they do. May we be ready to lay upon the altar of our country all the sacrifices that are needful, and may our brave soldiers be fully supplied until these calamities are overpassed and a triumphant victory is achieved. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

CORRECTION OF RECORD—THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on October 3, the day we held the last session of the Senate, the question of printing a memorial of the chamber of commerce came up, and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] called attention to the fact that I had asked that the memorial be printed in the RECORD. At that time I had in mind the document the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] had asked to be printed in the RECORD, giving the names of the directors of the chamber of commerce and other information, and it entirely escaped my mind that when the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] offered an amendment to the then pending bill, based upon the report of the Federal Trade Commission, I did ask that the report of the subcommittee of the chamber of commerce be printed in the RECORD in connection with the statement I made at that time. That occurs in the RECORD of September 5, 1918.

I wish to make this statement so that the RECORD will show the facts.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I understand that it is the wish of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] to move an adjournment until Thursday. I desire, therefore, to give notice that on Thursday, October 10, after the close of the routine morning business, I shall discuss the constitutional power of the Federal Government to levy taxes upon the instrumentalities of the States, a subject which was discussed the other day by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX].

THE BUILDING SITUATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the War Industries Board supplemental to a communication of September 19, in response to a resolution of the Senate of September 13, 1918, which will be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

The communication is as follows:

WAR INDUSTRIES BOARD,
Washington, October 4, 1918.

To the honorable the PRESIDENT AND SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Referring to the answer, under date of September 19, 1918, by the War Industries Board to Senate resolution 304, passed September 13, 1918, asking for all orders promulgated by this board relative to the construction and alteration of public or private buildings, I beg to advise that since our answer was delivered Circular No. 21 (attached to the answer) has been amended by adding to subdivision (2) the following: "and new construction for farm purposes only, involving in the aggregate a cost not exceeding $1,000," so that this subdivision as thus amended now reads as follows:

"(2) Repairs of or extensions to existing buildings involving in the aggregate a cost not exceeding $2,500, and new construction for farm purposes only, involving in the aggregate a cost not exceeding $1,000."

I further beg to advise you that subdivision (4) of said Circular No. 21 has also been amended by adding thereto the following: "and production (but not refining) of mineral oil and natural gas," so that this subdivision as thus amended now reads as follows:

"(4) Those directly connected with mines producing coal, metals, and ferroalloy minerals, and production (but not refining) of mineral oil and natural gas."

I am bringing these matters to your attention because Circular No. 21 as originally promulgated, and as supplemented on September 10, 1918, has been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 21, 1918 (vol. 56, 220, p. 11448), and I assume that you will desire the above amendments to be printed also, so that when the subject comes up for discussion your honorable body may have before it Circular No. 21 as amended to date.

I have the honor to remain,
Respectfully, yours,

BERNARD M. BARUCH,
Chairman War Industries Board.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 12429) to authorize the health officer of the District of Columbia to permit the disinterment of the bodies of Eliza Hill Bowles, Bernice Worthen Bowles, and Bessie Vivian Bowles, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CALDER. I present a petition of members of the South Third Street Methodist Episcopal Church, of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant railroad rates of 1 cent a mile to soldiers and sailors, which I ask may be noted in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I present a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Spokane, Wash., urging that in the taking of the census of 1920 the civil service be applied in the selection with respect to the officials and employees in the Census Bureau.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Census.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON presented the memorial of Alfred J. Krank, of St. Paul, Minn., and a memorial of the Hegener Barbers' Supply Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., remonstrating against the proposed tax on nonbeverage alcohol, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Education of Minneapolis, Minn., remonstrating against the proposed taxation of municipal bonds, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Thomas C. Jones, of Russell, Minn., praying for the exemption of the Cooperative Elevator Co. from the proposed increased taxation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4564) for the relief of Chauncey Boyce, reported adversely thereon and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4974) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to purchase from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts a large dry dock and appurtenant lands, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 4472) providing for the sale of public lands for the purpose of using the proceeds arising therefrom in the construction of roads and other permanent improvements in national parks, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report (No. 579) thereon.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 4178) providing additional time for the payment of purchase money under homestead entries of lands within the former Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 578) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4947) to provide for a survey and classification by the Secretary of the Interior of all unentered public lands of the United States and all unused, cut-over, logged, and swamp lands, and other unused lands of the United States, with a view to disposing thereof to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and others, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 580) thereon.

Mr. GORE, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 331) authorizing the readmission to the United States of certain aliens who have been conscripted or have volunteered for service with the military forces of the United States or cobelligerent forces, reported it without amendment (S. Rept. 583).

CLAIMS FOR LOSS OF PRIVATE PROPERTY.

Mr. ROBINSON. From the Committee on Claims, I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 4964) for the payment of claims for loss of private property on account of the loss of firearms and ammunition taken by the United States troops during the labor strikes in the State of Colorado in 1914, and I submit a report (No. 581) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to have it read again by title.

The bill was again read by title.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no objection to its consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of of $7,800, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available and to remain available until June 30, 1919, for payment of claims on account of loss of firearms and ammunition taken by the United States troops from civilians in the State of Colorado during the labor strike troubles which occurred in the calendar year 1914: Provided, That settlement of such claims shall be made by the Auditor for the War Department, upon the approval and recommendation of the Secretary of War, where the amount of the loss has been ascertained by the War Department, and payment thereof will be accepted by the owners of the property in full satisfaction of such claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMHERST W. BARBER.

Mr. ROBINSON. From the Committee on Claims, I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 4787) for the relief of Amherst W. Barber, and I submit a report (No. 582) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object, but——

Mr. NELSON. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say I am not going to object to the consideration of the bill, although some 105 or 106 similar claims have been before the Public Lands Committee for a number of years, and have always failed to pass the House. I do not know whether it will do any good for the Senate to pass the bill.

Mr. NELSON. A favorable report was made on this matter by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SMOOT. That the claim is just there is no question; but there are about 105 similar claims, and I should like to have an omnibus bill covering the whole of them.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Amherst W. Barber, the sum of $263.37, for the resurvey of 23 miles, 75 chains, and 42 links of township lines on public lands in the State of Colorado, executed by him and necessary to complete the lines of survey embraced in his contract No. 710, dated April 2, 1885.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 4975) granting a pension to W. S. Coburn (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4976) granting a pension to William Maguire;

A bill (S. 4977) granting an increase of pension to Marion T. Mitchell; and

A bill (S. 4978) granting a pension to Francis E. Searway; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 4979) granting an increase of pension to George C. Houghton (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4980) granting an increase of pension to John A. Chadwick (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4981) granting a pension to Sarah M. Geiger (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4982) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States," approved March 19, 1918; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. PITTMAN (for Mr. THOMAS) submitted seven amendments, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

PURCHASE OF DRY DOCK.

The bill (H. R. 12982) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to purchase from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts a large dry dock and appurtenant lands was read twice by its title.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that this bill may have present consideration. The Committee on Naval Affairs has reported unanimously an identical bill and the matter is one of great immediate importance. Time is very necessary for the completion of the dock which the Government desires to purchase.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to contract with the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for the purchase of the dry dock, with its equipment, now under construction at Boston by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, together with the land adjacent thereto necessary for the proper utilization of said dock, and there is hereby appropriated for said purpose the sum of $4,550,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, in order to expedite the completion of the construction of said dry dock, may expend out of the sum above appropriated an amount not exceeding $350,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LODGE. I ask in this connection to have printed a letter from the Secretary of the Navy in regard to it, which appears in the House hearings.

There being no objection, the letter was orderd to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, September 20, 1918.

Hon. LEMUEL P. PADGETT,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. PADGETT: The dry dock under construction by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts at Boston is now approaching completion, and the Commonwealth, represented by the Commission on Waterways and Public Lands, with the approval of the governor and his counsel, have submitted a proposition for the purchase of this property by the Government.

The tentative proposal as presented by the Commonwealth for the acquiring of this property contemplates the following principal features: The Commonwealth will proceed with the construction under the contracts now executed and with other features which are necessary for the proper completion of the dock within the limit of the amount appropriated by the Commonwealth for this purpose, namely, $3,107,366.93. Upon the completion of the dock the Commonwealth will convey it, together with such adjacent land as may be necessary for its proper operation, to the United States free of all incumbrances.

The large dimensions of this dock and its location near the deep-water channel of the harbor makes it very desirable that this property should be acquired by the Government. This need is particularly urgent in view of the great necessity for additional docks to provide for the increasing units of the Navy, as well as for the rapidly expanding merchant marine, and particularly to provide facilities for the docking of the superdreadnaughts and large transports.

The contract for the dock was executed prior to the war and at a cost much lower than would now be required for the construction of such a dock. It is found that the progress of the work could be, and should be for the Nation's needs, greatly expedited and the dock rendered usable at a much earlier date than will be possible at the present rate of progress. To expedite the work will cost an amount estimated at $350,000.

It is estimated that approximately the sum of $4,550,000 will be required for the purchase of the foregoing property, including the amount necessary to expedite the completion of the work.

It is requested that this matter be given careful and favorable consideration by your committee, and the department will cheerfully supply such further and detailed informattion as the committee may call for in the premises.

There is submitted herewith a draft of a provision that it is believed will cover the desired legislation.

Sincerely, yours, JOSEPHUS DANIELS, Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill (S. 4974) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to purchase from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts a large dry dock and appurtenant lands will be indefinitely postponed.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3438) to prevent corrupt practices in the election of Senators, Representatives, or Delegates in Congress, which were: On page 1, line 4, to strike out "things" and insert "thing"; on page 1, line 8, to strike out "or persons"; and on page 1, line 8, to strike out "their" and insert "his."

Mr. GERRY. As these amendments are merely a question of verbiage and entirely immaterial, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PEACE PROPOSALS OF CENTRAL POWERS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to what I understand is the program of the Senate, to adjourn after the conclusion of the morning business until Thursday. As the Senate is well aware, there are pending before the country and before the world in a most critical stage of consideration problems more vital perhaps than any that have ever been presented for the decision of our Government—relating to our foreign affairs, relating to the action that may be taken by this Government upon the suggestions of representatives of the nations with which we are at war as to an armistice.

I scarcely know how to make the inquiry that I have in mind, but I content myself with expressing the hope that the Senate of the United States, which is peculiarly vested under our Constitution with responsibility relating to our foreign and international relations, acting through its Committee on Foreign Relations during the recess or adjournment of this body, will keep in touch with this vital situation and assure to the country and to the Senate that the great functions which this body ought to perform in connection with matters of this kind shall not be entirely ignored and neglected.

I do not know what the official relations of the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations with the President of the United States are nor how close they are keeping in touch with the consideration of these great questions, but the Committee on Foreign Relations ought to be consulted, they ought to seek an opportunity, if necessary, to be consulted, in regard to problems of this kind.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one second. They ought to keep the Senate advised. They ought to be ready to respond to questions in this body as to the progress of negotiations which may be on foot which affect in the most vital way the welfare of the country as to peace or war or as to the results which are to come out of the destructive war in which we have been engaged.

I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to say to the Senator that I anticipated that a question of this character might arise, and I prepared a resolution which I intend to introduce as soon as we reach concurrent resolutions, the purpose of which is to insist that the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations shall perform its functions, and that the Senate shall perform its functions under the Constitution in connection with the war and in determining matters of peace. That resolution will be introduced to-day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am gratified to know that a prominent member of the Committee on Foreign Relations has been alive to what seems to me is his responsibility in this situation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for a question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Would it not be satisfactory to the Senator if an agreement should be made by which in the matter of recesses it would be a recess subject to call from the joint action of the leader on the Republican side and the leader on the Democratic side? Every Senator wants to be here to aid and assist in any legislation that may be necessary, and I am sure that everyone would respond promptly and would be here if it were necessary, even upon the joint request of the two leaders of the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there never was a time, it seems to me, when the Senate ought to be more alert to the performance of its duties than this time, and certainly there could be such an agreement as that which the Senator from Colorado suggests, although I would myself prefer that that body which the Senate has selected itself to exercise in part the functions of the Senate, the Committee on Foreign Relations, should have some voice in calling the Senate together in the face of an emergency which may become acute at any day or any hour.

I notice statements in various newspapers this morning which seem to me to indicate a situation of danger to the country. In great newspapers whose loyalty is beyond question and whose influence is great, who throughout the course of this war have been diligent in upholding the hands of the Nation and of the Government, in protecting the interests of our people and the honor of the country, it is suggested that if Germany will evacuate the countries which she has conquered we will agree to an armistice in our military operations.

Mr. President, there could not be a proposition of more insidious menace to the vital interests of this Nation than that proposition which seems to have so much currency. What would the situation be—I want to make just a brief comment on it—if such a proposition as that were agreed to, we will say, by the Executive branch of the Government during a recess of the Senate? A compromise peace, a premature peace, a sacrifice of the fruits of the efforts which this Nation and our allies have made in this great war.

There is one fortunate condition, however, that exists in regard to this matter; and, strange to say, it is a factor in the situation which once was a source of weakness to the allied cause, and now, under the blessing of Providence, is a source of strength. That is the fact that the allied power is divided into a number of sovereign nations, leagued together for the purpose of conducting this war. It was a source of weakness when positive action was required, because of the difficulty of bringing about an agreement. It is a source of strength when negative action is required in wisdom, as a situation which puts obstacles in the way, in the face of the emergency which I have referred to, of the conclusion of a premature and compromise peace—in my opinion the most insidious danger which confronts the country to-day, and will confront it during the coming winter.

We have secured a unity of leadership in military matters, which has been the source of increased efficiency of the allies in the great campaign which they have conducted during the last two months. The prosecution of that military campaign will go on under one leader; and it is a fortunate thing that when propositions are made for a too early peace—propositions which have in them, although concealed, the element of surrender and sacrifice of that which is already almost in the hands of the United States and its allies—their acceptance may be prevented because of the impossibility of agreement between France, Great Britain, the United States, and their other allies. If there should be something in the form of our Government, something growing out of this condition of neglect of its responsibilities by the Senate of the United States, which would leave the way open for some unwise agreement by our Government to bring about an armistice, which would inevitably mean the end forever of any additional military effort, I have faith that Clemenceau, who has been called "the Tiger of France," in some respects the greatest man that this emergency has produced, or that Lloyd-George, the seer of Wales, the great statesman premier of England, would yet be alert to protect their countries and ours from the results of any such unwise step.

But what would be the result of the acceptance of this proposition, which I see it stated in many quarters we very probably would be willing to accept—that we would stop our campaign if Germany should evacuate the conquered territory? Germany would come out of the war a victor. Germany would come out of the war in the same situation in which she went into it, after all the crimes which she has committed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator.

If we accept this proposition, which seems to be so insidious and to have so much support, Alsace-Lorraine will still be German; Poland will still be enslaved; Italy still unredeemed; the Serbians and Bohemians of Austria still under the Austrian yoke; Russia, although evacuated, even though Germany's armies should be withdrawn from Russian soil, still at the mercy of Germany. This proposition, which is supposed to have so much support and so much authority back of that support, would leave all of the frightful wrongs of Belgium and France unindemnified. It would leave Constantinople occupying a situation strategically the most important and valuable in the world, still dominating the short line of commerce and intercourse between Europe and Asia under the control of the unspeakable and unterrified Turk.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield just a moment later. This proposition, Mr. President, would leave the German-Turkish alliance still intact. Even though territorially they might have been separated by the surgical operation of the occupation of Bulgaria, separating these Siamese twins of evil, still the alliance and treaty between Turkey and Germany would be continued.

I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I wanted to ask the Senator what proposition he is referring to?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am referring to the proposition that I have stated two or three different times, and that is that the United States should use its influence with the allies to bring about an armistice on the western front and on all fronts upon the condition that Germany evacuate the territory which she has conquered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Are those the only terms of the proposition?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the only proposition which is laid down by the newspapers and other sources to which I refer as the condition upon which this armistice would be entered into; and I am taking this opportunity to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, to the danger of any such proposition and to the results of it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is not the Senator omitting one very important condition of that proposition, which is that the nations which make it are offering to accept the 14 terms laid down by the President in his address of January 8, as modified later in February, and still later by his New York speech of September 27?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have all those things in mind. Now, I infer——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just let me answer the question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me pursue that inquiry. If the Senator feels that those conditions are accepted by Germany and Austria, is he not in error when he says that Belgium will be left in her present condition, that France will be left in her present condition, and that the Polish people will be left in their present condition? Do not the 14 conditions laid down by the President in his speech of January 8 to the Congress not only specifically mention the restoration and indemnification of Belgium, but the restoration of France and the giving back of Alsace and Lorraine to France?

Mr. LODGE. Does he say that?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, I think that may be at least inferred. I shall have to read it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I shall be obliged to decline to yield further. The Senator from Nebraska has stated his question. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment. What I meant was that I must decline to yield for a colloquy between the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Massachusetts, because the Senator from Nebraska has stated a very important proposition.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention——

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator from Florida. I want to answer the inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska, and call attention to the fact that the inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska itself demonstrates the dangerous and the insidious character of this proposition to which I referred in the beginning of my remarks and the far-reaching support which has been given to it. The Senator from Nebraska asked me, if Germany evacuates the territory which she has conquered in France and in other countries, whether the important condition is not attached that she offers to accept the 14 propositions of peace which President Wilson laid down, and to which I will briefly refer, as to their character, in a moment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. By that question the Senator from Nebraska seems to think that Germany's offer of acceptance can be relied upon as though these propositions of the President would be accomplished if we should go into an armistice with Germany and cease our military operations upon the condition that she evacuates the conquered territory and promises to accept the 14 propositions. What we would be left with, Mr. President, would be with Germany a great armed nation, with her unconquered army on her interior lines of defense, negotiating with the United States from that citadel of strength as to which one of the propositions of the President, if any, she will agree to, and furthermore—what is equally important—what interpretation should be placed upon the 14 propositions stated by the President, about the meaning of which even an ordinary lawyer, to say nothing of the astute diplomatists of Germany, can very easily raise a question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. POINDEXTER. For instance, I will call attention to the proposition just made.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am sure the Senator does not intend——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield in a second. I call attention to the proposition just made by Prince Maximilian, now chancellor of Germany, that Germany is willing to cease military operations and conclude a peace based upon principles of justice. Of course she will agree to that; but what she means by justice is not what we mean. Justice with Germany would mean the execution of some of the murderers and robbers who have laid waste Belgium and France. It would mean the trial by court-martial, or at least in some international tribunal, of the Kaiser for the crimes which he has permitted and which he has sanctioned; but that is not what Prince Maximilian means. Their ideas of justice and our ideas of justice are as far apart as the two poles. What they want is not justice, but mercy; and that is what they ought to ask for.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am not at all antagonistic to the attitude which the Senator is taking. I agree with him that the thought of the suspension of hostilities while Germany or Austria are occupying a single foot of Belgium, France, or Italy would be preposterous. It is impossible. But I hope the Senator will permit me to set him right in this matter.

The proposition which has been put forward is not simply one of suspending hostilities. If Germany and Austria agree to accept the terms which the President has laid down, and which the country in the main has accepted, and which the other nations in general terms have accepted, Germany would agree, for instance, to this proposition, which was No. 8 of the President's 14 propositions: Here is what the President proposed with regard to Alsace and Lorraine:

> All French territory should be freed and the invaded portions restored, and the wrong done to France by Prussia in 1871 in the matter of Alsace-Lorraine, which has unsettled the peace of the world for nearly 50 years, should be righted, in order that peace may once more be made secure in the interest of all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Now, let me ask——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me finish. When the Senator says it is seriously proposed by anybody to leave Alsace and Lorraine where they are now, in the possession of Germany, the Senator is mistaken. One of the very conditions which the President laid down, and which would be absolutely essential before the allied countries would undertake even to discuss terms of peace with Germany, is the restoration of those Provinces.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I must say that I am somewhat surprised at this statement, coming from the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate. He says that nobody has made this proposition; and yet I have read in at least half a dozen different leading papers this morning that if Germany will evacuate conquered territory we may then take up negotiations with her about the matters which the Senator from Nebraska is talking about.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the Senator has misread it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Where are your indemnities and guarantees to compel Germany to do any one of the things which the Senator says the President proposes?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me interrupt the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let me answer the Senator's question, and then I will yield further. I decline to yield until I have answered his question.

The Senator has read the eighth of the 14 propositions laid down by the President. As I understand the Senator from Nebraska, he interprets that to mean the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine, but it does not say so. It does not say anything of the kind. What it says is:

> All French territory should be freed and the invaded portions restored, and the wrong done to France by Prussia in 1871 in the matter of Alsace-Lorraine, which has unsettled the peace of the world for nearly 50 years, should be righted.

What does he mean by being "righted"? How should it be righted? I will tell you what my proposition is, if the Senator will allow me to express an individual opinion on that phase of the issues between Germany and the United States—that Germany should not only evacuate the French territory which she has occupied but that she should evacuate Alsace-Lorraine, and that Alsace-Lorraine—which was taken from France in 1871—should be occupied by the French, the German flag pulled down, and the French flag pulled up before we declare an armistice.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the very latest announcement in the afternoon paper, the heading being:

> Germans fire 20 towns—Flanders retreat begun.

In other words, they are going out of Flanders, but before they go they fire 20 towns.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. It reminds me of the lines in Shakespeare's Tempest, where one of the characters says—

> Hell is empty,
> And all the devils are here.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; very true; an apt quotation.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I might add, in connection with the interjection of the Senator from Florida, what guaranty would we have, upon the mere statement of Prince Maximilian that he will agree to it, that the unspeakable outrages of which the instance cited by the Senator from Florida is only one will ever be indemnified? After we have quit fighting, how are we going to begin again, in cold blood, to renew a war which has almost wrecked the world?

Mr. NELSON and Mr. HITCHCOCK addressed the Chair.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. It seems to me that this discussion is rather academic. Let us leave this matter to the commander in chief of our armies over there, Marshal Foch. Let Germany, through her military authorities, propose to him to lay down her arms and ask for an armistice. In other words, let the Germans do as the Bulgarians have done—come there and say: "We will lay down our arms; we will evacuate this territory; and we will submit to the dictates of the allied Governments in the matter of peace." I am surprised at the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee assuming the attitude which he does this morning.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I might add, Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not had an opportunity to assume any attitude.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment, and I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall assume an attitude in a few minutes when the Senator from Washington shall have finished.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There ought to be only 1 and not 14 terms to an armistice; the question of the basis of peace should be considered at some time in the future and ought to be discussed after peace has been attained. The only condition of an armistice ought to be an allied victory; unconditional surrender of our enemies. Anything else would be approaching in a degree the betrayal of the great cause for which we are fighting, and would be action along the line of what the Bolsheviki of Russia perpetrated in a larger degree. Any surrender by the United States of the use of its influence to compromise in any way whatever this great cause, any action which might be taken during the vacation of the Senate or at any other time to grant an armistice before we are in control of Germany, would be of the same sort. I have no idea that the President will, but this is a matter which the country should be alert upon, and which it is peculiarly the duty of the Senate to keep in touch with.

The Senator from Nebraska—and I suppose this will be what he will discuss in a moment—seems to be laboring under some confusion of thought as to the exact process by which we are going to arrive, if we arrive at all, at the result stated by the President in his 14, and afterwards his 4, propositions of settlement of this war.

I am not discussing for the time being the merits or the demerits or the construction which one country or the other might put upon these propositions. I will say, in passing, that some of them, in my opinion, have but little to do with the war.

The President's proposition about an economic free-trade league certainly is not a principle which this Government is going to fight very long to maintain, and ought not to be considered in any way whatever as a necessary basis for concluding hostilities between Germany and the United States. But whatever it does mean, and whichever one of these various propositions is essential and wise as a condition upon which this great controversy shall be settled, the question which I am discussing is that the power to settle it shall not slip out of our hands through such loose reasoning, if I may be permitted to say so, as the Senator from Nebraska just now indulges in, when he seems to think because Germany promises that she will accept these propositions that we shall obtain them. The only way we are going to obtain them, and the only basis upon which we should hope to accomplish them, is by force of arms, which we now, happily, have within sight.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Washington yield for a question?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Does not the Senator from Washington think that the plain English of it is that an armistice now means the loss of the war?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Exactly. I do not think that that is too strong a statement. An armistice now, or even when Germany only evacuates her conquered territory, if I can put it in a few words, and in the very simplest form, would be to leave Germany in the same condition of power and strength that she was when she began the war.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has the Senator any fear that anybody in this country favors an armistice now? Has the Senator any doubt about the fact that it will be rejected?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I know that some do favor it, on the sole and illusive condition that Germany evacuate allied country.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Who favors it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Otherwise I would not have spoken.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Who favors it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, there is a collection of editorials from various papers which are printed in the Washington Post of this morning, in which the Senator can read their various opinions; and I understand, if I understand anything at all, that the Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator has had an opportunity in the New York Times of this morning to read exactly what I favor; and, if the Senator reads that, he will see that I distinctly say that it is impossible and unthinkable.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, the Senator has just suggested by the question that he asked me that, if we insist upon Germany evacuating this territory, then we shall accomplish what the President of the United States has asked. I think that we shall not accomplish it until we compel not only the evacuation of conquered territory, but the evacuation of German Poland, the evacuation of German Alsace-Lorraine, the evacuation by Austria of the Italian Provinces in Austria, the evacuation by Austria of Bohemia and of the Serbian sections of Austria, and the establishment not only of autonomous governments in those countries, but of an independent nation, under such auspices as may be agreed upon by the allies, without consulting with Germany.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I want to call the Senator's attention to a news item which is contained in the noon edition of the Washington Times. Of course, I can not vouch for its accuracy, but it comes with the usual sanction of telegraphic reports which are printed in this newspaper, which is certainly one of good standing. It is as follows:

PARIS, October 7—10.31 a. m.

The Germans are burning villages and towns behind their lines along the whole front from Lille to Rheims. This is believed to presage a retirement in several sectors.

South of Cambrai the enemy is reported already to have fallen back 2 miles on a 7-mile front.

At least a score of places are in flames. Laon, the great communication center and base east of the St. Gobain massif, was set on fire yesterday. Sallaumines, east of Lens, and several villages southeast and west of Lille and between Douai and Somain are burning. The French found Nogent-L'Abbassee, Bein, and all the villages in the Suippe Valley in flames.

M. Civirieux, writing in the Matin, says: "The fighting continues and will continue to the end until there is a general German retreat. This retreat is announced by the burning of villages. Great evacuations seem near."

I am calling the Senator's attention to this simply to emphasize the fact that it appears, notwithstanding the Germans are asking for peace, that they are still making war like barbarians.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. REED. But I have not any doubt, if the Senator from Washington will permit me this one remark, that our allies and that America will not grant any armistice until Germany desists from carrying on war in a manner more atrocious than ever did the Sioux Indians of North America or the savages of South Africa.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I will say that the Sioux Indians never violated a treaty and never gambled away their honor on "a scrap of paper."

Mr. REED. I said the Germans were worse than they were, and, however much worse the Senator wants to make it, he can fix it in that way.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator from Washington will permit me, I should like to read a letter, signed by Gen. Grant during the Civil War, which, it seems to me, would be very appropriate for the President to use in replying to the note of the Kaiser asking for an armistice. It was written at "Headquarters, Army in the Field, Camp near Donelson"; and is as follows:

FEBRUARY 16, 1862.

Gen. S. B. BUCKNER,
Confederate Army.

SIR: Yours of this date, proposing armistice and appointment of commissioners to settle terms of capitulation is just received. No terms except an unconditional and immediate surrender can be accepted. I propose to move immediately upon your works.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT,
Brigadier General.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is very appropriate for the occasion, it seems to me.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has asked me who advocated this proposition. I was going to say, from a recollection of reading it this morning, that the Washington Post advocated it, as illustrative of much other expression on the subject. I want to read what it says. I agree in the main with the editorial in which it is contained; the objects which it has in view are excellent; and I entirely agree with them; but, as I have attempted to explain before, the question which

I am raising is as to the means of accomplishment; in other words what guarantees are we going to have.

Now, here is what the Post says, after saying that there should be no peace until after unconditional surrender:

> When Germany really wants peace she will know how to get it—that is, by withdrawing her armies from every foot of allied soil in the west, in the Balkans, and in Russia.

That is the program that is advocated by this great newspaper and by many others, and which, it seems to me, was approved by the Senator from Nebraska.

Now, the status is, supposing Germany does everything that is proposed in that editorial, she will be occupying her own country; she will be occupying Poland; she will be occupying Italian Provinces in Austria; she will be occupying Alsace-Lorraine; and, to repeat what I said a moment ago, Belgium will not be indemnified, and the destruction which Germany has wrought in France will not in any way be made good.

How are we going to compel her to do these things after we declare an armistice? That is the question. We must receive adequate guarantees; and the only guarantee which is adequate to the situation that I know of is the occupation of German territory, pursuing the policy that Gen. Franchet d' Esperey, in Serbia, pursued, who out of hand, showing that he was a statesman as well as a soldier and a general, laid down for Bulgaria, that her army should be demobilized; that her territory should be occupied; and that her means of transportation should be put into the hands of the allies.

Then, when we are in that position, and not until then, the United States and her allies will be able to guarantee a just peace, the indemnification of Belgium, the righting of the wrongs of France, the abolishment of the spirit of ruthlessness from the world—then, and not until then, can a peace be made which will make it clear that those who sleep in France shall not have died in vain.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] opened his address by inquiring what, if anything, the Committee on Foreign Relations would do to keep the Senate advised and to keep in touch with diplomatic conditions. I am not in a position to answer a question of that sort, and I think no member of the committee is in any such position.

We are confronted by a situation which is absolutely without any precedent. I can say this, however, that I believe the members of the committee coincide fully with the opinion of the Senator from Washington that the Senate of the United States, which is called upon to ratify any treaty that is made, should be advised in advance of important agreements and treaties that may come up for discussion, and I believe it will be.

The Senator from Washington says that what he calls a "proposition" has been made to grant an armistice to Germany and Austria and to suspend hostilities in order that peace terms may be discussed. I do not know of any responsible person in the United States who advances such a ridiculous proposition. The situation is that our enemies are in possession of large areas of France, Belgium, and Italy; they are in no condition to sue for peace. It would be ridiculous for enemies, under those conditions, to do so. On the other hand, they are in retreat, and we know that they are in no condition to offer or dictate terms of peace. Austria has made a certain proposition, the terms of which we do not as yet know exactly, and Germany has made a proposition. They have asked for a suspension of hostilities. It is unthinkable that such a request will be granted either by the United States or by any other power; it is unthinkable that a suspension of hostilities can even be considered while our enemies are in possession of the territories belonging to France, Belgium, and Italy. So I say, when the Senator declares there are in this country responsible individuals who are proposing the acceptance of these terms, that he is grossly in error.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator just said, if I can repeat his words, that no responsible person in this country proposes an armistice so long as the German armies are in possession of allied countries. From that position I infer he means that if Germany evacuates the allied countries these responsible persons in this country are driven to an armistice.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I request the Senator to withhold his inferences. I am here to state in a general way the view of the situation which I take.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have a right to make a legitimate inference.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I decline to yield further on that point. The Senate has nothing to do with the initiation of peace proposals. We have nothing to do with the consideration of the granting of an armistice. That is a military matter. It belongs to the President. All we can do here in the Senate at this time can be done by anyone else in a responsible position. We can express our opinion, and I want to express mine in a few words, if the Senate will permit.

The President of the United States on the 8th of January appeared before the Congress and delivered an address in which he practically gave an answer to Germany, in which he laid down 14 conditions or principles which would be absolutely essential as a preliminary to the discussion of terms of peace or as a basis for the discussion of terms of peace. He elaborated those 14 propositions in his address on the 4th of July of this year, and again in his speech in New York on the 27th of September. Those declarations by the President have up to the present time stood as the declaration of the American people, and not only that, but they have been in general terms tacitly accepted by everyone of the nations associated with us in the present war.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We have a right to assume that they constitute in large degree the basis of any general terms of peace.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was just about to ask the Senator——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In addition to this we recall that when Austria recently made application to the United States that we should enter into negotiations with her to ascertain the terms of peace the President replied in this brief and emphatic fashion:

> The Government of the United States feels that there is only one reply which it can make to the suggestion of the Imperial Austro-Hungarian Government. It has repeatedly and with entire candor stated the terms upon which the United States would consider peace and can and will entertain no proposal for a conference upon a matter concerning which it has made its position and purpose so plain.

We all know that this reply of the President was not only acclaimed by the whole country and by other nations of the world as an adequate and proper one, but that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Relations and Republican leader in the Senate of the United States, gave it his full and complete indorsement. If that is so, those terms so repeatedly stated have become the foundation stones for any possible peace.

Mr. LODGE. I gave my entire approval to the President's reply to the Austrian note. I did not cover anything else.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And that reply referred only to these conditions as being the terms upon which the United States would consider peace.

Mr. LODGE. How does the Senator know they referred to those conditions?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It was specifically stated.

Mr. LODGE. Was it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What could the President refer to if he did not refer to this address to Congress and to the great address in New York on the 27th of September?

Mr. LODGE. He did not say so. He said our purposes were plain.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What he stated was "that the Government of the United States has repeatedly and with entire candor stated the terms upon which the United States would consider peace." He could not be any more specific. I say, therefore, not only has the United States accepted the statements of the President of January 8 and subsequently as the foundation stones for a peace settlement, but they have been at least tacitly accepted by all the nations of the world associated with us in this war.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator has asserted a second time that they have been practically agreed upon by all the nations of the world. Is there one word of reparation—there is of restitution, but is there one word of reparation in those 14 articles, and have not both Lloyd-George and Clemenceau declared again and again that there must not only be restitution of the territory but that there must be reparation for the wrongs inflicted by Germany?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a very fair inquiry made by the Senator, who is also a member of this committee, and I will answer it.

The President nowhere says, nor have I said, that these are the complete terms. Others will, of course, be imposed. I myself am very anxious that another condition shall be imposed. While I do not believe that we as a Nation have any right to dictate to Germany what kind of a government she shall have, we can say with what government we will conclude terms of peace and what government we will not deal with.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to finish. We have the right to say whether or not we will enter into a contract with the Hohenzollern dynasty, and I believe we should add to what the President has specifically set forth the further condition that we will not enter into any contract with Germany unless the representative of the German people are first vested with the power to make a contract with us, intrusted with the power of war and of peace heretofore held by a few war lords.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator the President's speech of September 27 before him?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I have not.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator will find a paragraph in that speech which makes that statement very clearly. The President says there that we can not deal with the Government of Germany; that we do not speak the same language of agreement. There can not be any doubt about what that kind of language means. I will read it:

> We are all agreed that there can be no peace obtained by any kind of bargain or compromise with the governments of the central empires, because we have dealt with them already and have seen them deal with other governments that they were parties to this struggle, at Brest-Litovsk and Bucharest. They have convinced us that they are without honor and do not intend justice. They observe no covenants, accept no principle but force and their own interest. We can not "come to terms" with them. They have made it impossible. The German people must by this time be fully aware that we can not accept the word of those who forced this war upon us. We do not think the same thoughts or speak the same language of agreement.

There can be no mistake about what the President said.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am glad the Senator has quoted it into the RECORD at this time. It corresponds with the former statement of the President. I had, however, gathered the impression from reading the speech of the President in New York that he was more disposed at the present time to trust to a league of nations to enforce the terms of peace which might be agreed upon at the close of this war, and that he might not adhere to that earlier expressed opinion of his, that any contract made with Germany must be made by the representatives of the German people. The fact is that such a condition would really involve a change in the organic law of Germany. So, whether or not the President intended in the New York speech to adhere to that former statement of his, I certainly think it ought to be one of the conditions laid down by us which must be accepted by Germany. Indemnities must also, of course, be included.

Mr. President, I have said all that I care to say. As one member of the Committee on Foreign Relations I can assure the Senator from Washington that the committee will go as far as it properly can, not only to uphold the dignity and the importance of the Senate of the United States in its proper function in any consideration of peace terms, but from what I know of the membership of that committee I believe I can say that it will probably go as far as the Senator from Washington would feel justified in going in influencing the terms of peace. This thing, however, must be remembered. The Senate has no initiative. That is with the President. He is in control of our foreign negotiations and our foreign relations, and we must be content with the extent to which he deems it wise to take into his confidence Members of the Senate pending negotiations and before agreements are reached. I hope I have made it absolutely clear, especially to the Senator from Washington, that the thought of suspending hostilities as requested by Germany and Austria at this stage of affairs is absolutely abhorrent to every member of the committee and I believe to every Member of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there can be no doubt of the fact that the initiation of any negotiations for peace rests wholly in the hands of the President. As Commander in Chief he can make or agree to an armistice. I do not myself suppose that he has the slightest thought of agreeing to any armistice at this time. I can not imagine that he should, and I do not believe for one moment that he is even thinking of it.

Mr. President, I agree most cordially with the statement which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has just placed in the RECORD, made by the President with regard to negotiations with the existing German Government. We have no right to undertake to settle a form of government for any other Nation, but we have an absolute right to demand that when we negotiate in any way, great or small, we shall negotiate with somebody who does not regard treaties as scraps of paper. This the President himself has said over and over again, and I am in full accord with him.

Mr. President, it is not a question of the 14 points or the 4 points or 8 points or whatever they are. The question now is a very simple one. Germany has begun this great peace offensive, as it is called. I predicted it upon the 23d of August. It was an easy prediction to make and one certain of fulfillment. It comes. Every newspaper in the country blazes it in headlines and fills columns with the account of it. They treat it as if it were something that we ought to deal with seriously at this stage.

What is the German proposition? That they will have an armistice and then begin to discuss the principles laid down by the President; that they will undertake to discuss peace, while they leave their armies in full activity, burning the cities and towns of France and Belgium at this moment; while they hold vast tracts of Russia and are ready to go on at any moment; under these conditions they propose to us to enter into a long discussion of the basis of peace.

Mr. President, as I said when I interrupted the Senator from Washington, an armistice now could mean simply the loss of the war and all we fight for. As to this theory that the Senator from Washington has so strongly and I think wisely denounced, that if Germany will retire from the country she has conquered we will lay down our arms and begin to talk peace. It can not be too strongly condemned. Mr. President, where are you going to begin to draw the line on what Germany has conquered? In all the conquered territory she holds there is not one conquest more infamous than Frederick the Great's conquest of Silesia, when he tore it from Austria in utter disregard of solemn obligations which he had entered into, took it by surprise, and as Macaulay said after the Seven Years' War "all Europe in arms had failed to tear Silesia from that iron grasp." In all history there never was a worse case of armed robbery than that. Is it proposed to go back to that? I fancy not, although it would satisfy eternal justice if we did so.

Do we propose to go back to the war of 1870? Yes, most assuredly. The French people will never submit in my judgment to anything less than Alsace-Lorraine without condition, without deduction, and it is the interest of the entire world that we should take Lorraine from Germany forever, because there she got most of her iron, 21,000,000 tons last year, to make shells and munitions of war to slay our troops and those of the allies. France did not desert us. It is not conceivable that we should ever desert her.

We know what other things she has taken. When she retires into her own boundaries, not the boundaries of her robberies, and holds up her hands, then let her ask for an armistice.

The President of the United States, in the fulfillment of his high responsibilities, and I believe with the universal approbation of the American people, has recognized the Czecho-Slovaks as a belligerent nation. That is not territory conquered by Germany. It was conquered by Austria a good many centuries ago. We are committed to the Czecho-Slovaks. We have recognized them as a belligerent nation. Are we going to leave them under Austrian oppression and hang our heads forever after in shame for a breach of faith? I do not believe that is contemplated for one instant, either with the Czecho-Slovaks, or with Poland, or the Jugo-Slavs.

Mr. President, there is but one right course in my judgment, and one only, and that is to put Germany in such a position as to physically guarantee that she can not break out upon the world again, to put her in such a place that she can not again enter upon a war of world conquest. It does not matter what treaty she signs, put her behind the bars; treaties with Germany have no worth or meaning. She has inflicted more misery on an innocent world in four years than was ever dreamed of in the human imagination. I think myself that we should not only put her in a position where she never can break out upon the world again but make full reparation; for I firmly believe that there is such a thing in this world as retributive justice and punitive justice. She has not only violated all human laws, she has violated the higher laws which have been recognized by all nations since we have had any history.

Mr. President, the mischief is in any discussion of the principles upon which peace should be debated. When Germany has surrendered, when she holds up her hands and says: "We are beaten; what terms will you impose?" then the allies and the United States can tell her what terms they will impose. There is, there must be, no other end, no other solution.

As for this league of nations to enforce peace, it is caught up by Germany in order to divert attention. Can you imagine our going to work and forming a league to enforce peace on the world with Germany as one of the partners? There is one league to enforce peace now in existence, and that is the United States and the allies; and when they have beaten Germany, as she must be beaten, the world will have peace. Nobody else wants more war, and the world does not mean to have more war; but we must put Germany in such a position that she can make no more war. Until we get her in that position there is no use in talking about discussions of any kind whatever, or armistices, or anything of the sort. The true peace will come when American soldiers and French soldiers and British soldiers are on German soil, and hold military and strategic points of such advantage that Germany must surrender.

It is a long, hard path; I recognize it; but all the awful sacrifices we are making would be a crime if we did not bring back that result to the world, to make the world safe, not merely for democracy, but safe against Germany, against such hideous atrocities as have been poured out on us in the last four years.

I am sorry that any newspaper pays attention to these propositions which all emanate from Germany and are as poisonous and insidious as the gases she uses in the field. They are all made to chill our blood, to hold us back as we are advancing to victory. They should be cast into the dust heap. The time for peace will come when we have won this war, and it will never come until we have won it and crushed Prussian militarism to the earth never to rise again.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say that I have not risen to take part in the discussion which has just been under way further than to add this word: In my judgment, the people of the United States desire and will demand a just, honorable, and enduring peace; a peace that will last, not a truce that will break, not a truce that will spawn future wars and future woes. We are in this war now, and—

> Should we wade no more,
> Returning would be worse than going o'er.

This may be a pretty good time to write the last chapter in the history of the Hapsburgs and the Hohenzollerns, and seal that history with seven seals. I merely suggest this as a sort of peace insurance policy. Being in, this is the best time to teach Prussian militarism that he that liveth by the sword shall also perish by the sword; the best time to teach the Kaiser that his "place in the sun" is a spot in the sun, and to teach the world that such sun spots are plague spots, breeding wars, pestilence, and famine.

There may be a great deal of hard fighting and a great many heavy sacrifices ahead of us yet; but to prepare for the worst is sometimes the best way to prepare for the best.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply want to make two observations:

First, I think it unfortunate, as has been said, that we should treat this so-called peace offer at this time in a serious manner. I think the discussion of peace in the way it has been carried on is liable to affect seriously the present liberty loan. Thousands of people will hesitate about subscribing, believing that it will be found unnecessary to subscribe. I am inclined to think this proposition may have been put forward at this particular time with that as one of its objects, namely, to discourage this loan. As has been very properly suggested to me by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BENET] that point gains force when we understand in connection with it that the last German loan has failed; at least, so the press states. I think, therefore, that as far as the Senate can it ought to give the country the understanding that there is nothing in the propositions which have been made which warrants us for a single instant in relaxing our vigilance and our efforts.

Next I want to point out the deceptive character of the Austrian and German propositions. The casual reader would understand that the President had laid down certain demands of a specific and definite character which Austria and Germany now unconditionally accept. As a matter of fact, what the President laid down were certain principles of action declaring that a peace must embody those principles; but for the most part the President did not state specifically what should be worked out under these principles. Therefore an antagonist may say: "We accept the principles," and still the entire controversy may remain open. For instance, if the President had said: "This war shall never cease until the Teutonic powers shall agree to do justice by the world," and if the Teutonic powers were to say: "We accept your proposition," the question would arise, "What is doing justice by the world?" and we would have arrived at no point whatsoever.

Most of the propositions laid down by the President, as I have said, are propositions of principle; and it is easy enough for our antagonists to say, "We accept these principles." If they can get the war stopped we never will be able to get them to agree on how to interpret and apply the principles.

Let me give you one illustration of that. Now, let nobody understand that I am criticizing the President's method of statement. Indeed, when he stated the principles he did all that could be done, or practically all, at the time he stated them. But before we stop our fighting these principles ought to be reduced to concrete propositions of fact; and I illustrate now the thought I had in mind that I expressed a moment ago. I will read paragraph 9 for illustration:

> A readjustment of the frontiers of Italy should be effected along clearly recognizable lines of nationality.

A very proper principle; but if we stop the war before the lines are actually fixed, or our right to fix them conceded, then Germany or Austria might contend that the frontier line drawn according to that principle possibly should be where it is now, whereas Italy might think it ought to be far over into Austrian territory, and we would have arrived at nothing after all our controversy.

I cite simply that one clause, not because it is perhaps the best illustration, but because it serves to illustrate the fact that what the President laid down were general principles and not concrete demands, for the most part. Of course he does say our enemies must get out of certain countries; but when this "foxy" gentleman—I think I will use the slang term—who has just been put into the ministry of Austria for the purpose of camouflaging—I will use that much-abused term again—the house of Hapsburg and the house of Hohenzollern, attempting to appear as a sort of a democratic representative, although owing his appointment to these particular sources, steps before the world and says, "We are ready to accept the President's peace terms," he well knows that the President never undertook to write down specifically what the terms were, but simply to lay down certain principles of action. I think if that were understood in our country there would be less misunderstanding of this proposal that has been made. It would be estimated at its true value, which is that Austria wants time and that Germany wants time.

They are like a contestant whose breath is getting short, whose muscles are becoming weak, and who longs for the sound of the gong, so that he can get a little time to rest. They want the hand that is now closing on their throat to relax its iron grip. They want time to breathe. They want an opportunity for their armies to rehabilitate themselves, to bring up supplies, to reassure their people, to improve their fortifications, to get ready to stand on a new line, which perhaps will be somewhere near the German border, where, with a girdle of fortresses to sustain their earthworks, they can be prepared to withstand siege. They want also, as has been again wisely suggested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BENET], who sits by me, to wait for winter to slow up our operations. It is inconceivable to me that any man at this time thinks for one minute of stopping that process of hammering, hammering, hammering, which Foch has been so well conducting.

Let me say one thing further that is as absolutely certain, I believe, as any statement that a human being can make at this time—that Germany will not consent to any peace we can now accept unless Germany knows she is whipped; and whenever Germany knows she is whipped, and we know she is whipped, then will be the time for the United States and her allies in this war to write the terms of peace; and when we write the terms of peace, it seems to me that they will be written along the line indicated by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], namely, that we will not trust to treaties with nations that tear treaties to pieces. We will not trust to guaranties that such nations may give us, but we will reduce them to a condition where they can not do any harm for a long time in the future, and then we will not need to trouble ourselves about agreements.

Mr. President, I think the President of the United States will know pretty well how to handle this matter; and I have every confidence that he will handle it so that the honor of America will be vindicated, the safety of the world will be assured, and every compact, express or implied, that we have with our allies will be redeemed. Germany will be taught that he who takes the sword shall perish by the sword, and that, if out of a Christian charity something less than that may be imposed, still the punishment will be rigorous enough so that while we live and those that come after us within the next century shall live there will be a historic example of the fact that the conquest of the world by military power is a thing that can never be accomplished.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I simply wanted to suggest to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], whose remarks I have been following very closely, that there is one thing the President has said that Germany apparently has not yet agreed upon. Her spokesmen may have verbally stated that they have agreed upon the 14 grounds of settlement; but the President of the United States has very definitely stated, as I remember, that it would be impossible to negotiate with Germany until the German people established a government that believed in honesty. That has not yet been done. The same government that brought about this war; that depended upon militarism; that violated treaties with Belgium and other weak people; that has laid down as its line of principle the law of necessity as against the law of honesty and right is still in existence; and there is not any question as to what position the President of the United States will take on this matter. He will still hold that the German people have not come within the requirements of negotiation by the establishment of an honest government.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I did not overlook that fact, although I did not mention it, because it had been mentioned, and the statement of the President of the 27th of September had been read. I think, perhaps, the Senator from Nevada was out at the time.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was absent at the time.

Mr. REED. I did not mean in any way to do more in my statement than to supplement the statements that had already been made. I thank the Senator, however, for emphasizing, as he has very properly emphasized, the fact that the President, as I interpret his words, has clearly stated that he does not propose to make treaties with governments that break treaties.

Mr. PITTMAN. I intended to make no statement on the subject at all; and I thought it was a good opportunity, in the Senator's time, to inject that observation. I was not here when that phase of the matter was discussed.

Mr. LODGE. I referred to that; so did the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. PITTMAN. That would relieve me of the necessity of making any statement.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I may be permitted, I hope, to say just a word or two in this connection. The whole discussion, as it seems to me, is premature. We are talking as if Germany were whipped; we are giving notice to the world, while we are trying to sell bonds, that we have no enemy before our soldiers in France. What the American people ought to understand, the one great lesson they ought to learn, is that we have just started on this great war to whip Germany to the point where she has got to come before we can deal with her at all. It seems to me the call should go forth from this body to the American people to subscribe to the new liberty loan, and oversubscribe for it.

It is not now time to talk of peace. Even when Germany shall have withdrawn her line, as the Senator well suggested she may do in any event when the winter sets in, she will have all her present resources left. When the Kaiser's offer that came through the Austrian official, who has been called "the new camoflеur," was made, the Kaiser is reported in the papers to have said that no peace except an honorable peace would he ever consent to on the part of Germany; yet we are here talking as if we had already whipped them. Let us admit that we have not done so, and will not do so before this time next year, and let our people know that they have got to put up their money and that they have got to make this fight. Let the call go forth from both branches of Congress.

There is nothing more calculated to weaken the people in their subscriptions to the liberty loan than the impression gained from reading the papers that Germany is already whipped. Such an impression will stop the liberty-loan effort in the midst of the preparations and campaign being made; and many a man will be a reluctant subscriber who would be a very willing one if he appreciated the actual danger that confronts us. Many hundred thousand soldiers are yet to be killed, and we had better quit talking about peace, or even the ultimate terms of peace, until, as the Senator from Massachusetts has frequently so well said, the Kaiser is absolutely on his knees listening to the terms that the allies shall dictate and which the German people will be compelled to accept.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have been waiting some two hours until we could reach a place in the morning business when I could submit a concurrent resolution. I offer the resolution and ask the Secretary to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 24), as follows:

Whereas the Imperial German Government has signified a desire for an armistice and a discussion of peace terms on the basis of the declaration of the President contained in his address to the Congress on January 8, 1918, and subsequent addresses on the same subject; and

Whereas the Imperial German Government refused to consider the proposals contained in said address at the time it was made, but, on the contrary, defied this country and our allies, asserted its purpose to dominate all central Europe, and with such domination to control the destiny of the world and subject all other nations to its military power, and to force indemnities from its enemies; and

Whereas it has continued its war of conquest with unrelenting savagery and against all laws of honorable warfare, and has since said address caused the death of about 1,000,000 men and forced this country and our allies to a further sacrifice of life and property; and

Whereas by its refusal to accept those more than just terms it has forfeited its right to limit this country to the proposals stated in said address; and

Whereas since the date of that address its retiring armies have burned and destroyed all cities and villages evacuated by those armies; and

Whereas under the Constitution of the United States, upon Congress alone is devolved the duty of determining between peace and war: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring) That there shall be no cessation of hostilities and no armistice until the Imperial German Government shall disband its armies and surrender its arms and munitions, together with its Navy, to the United States and her allies in this war;

That before any armistice shall be considered the Imperial German Government shall unreservedly consent to the principles of reparation declared as terms of peace by our allies;

That it will pay in damages the cost of rebuilding and reconstructing all the cities and villages destroyed by its armies, and restore to fertility the lands devastated by it;

That it will repay every dollar and the value of all property exacted from the people of any territory invaded by it;

That it will make proper compensation and allowance for every crime committed by its armies contrary to the laws of warfare and humanity, whether on land or sea;

That it will return to France Alsace and Lorraine and the indemnity exacted from her in 1870; and

That it further accepts all the additional conditions laid down by the President in his said address of January 8, 1918.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, those are terms that we can consider; those are the terms that we should exact. At a proper time I shall move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and at some future period I shall take occasion to discuss it in the Senate.

The resolution contains nothing unjust to the German Empire. If they seek a just peace, it is for our allies and ourselves, after considering who caused this war, who inflicted these miseries upon the world, to determine what is just; and there can be no such thing as justice which leaves Germany free to perpetrate another such crime against the world. I would not exact punitive damages beyond the ability of the people to pay, but I would let the German people and the German nation understand that they must pay for the damages they have committed contrary to the rules of honorable warfare; that they shall return Alsace and Lorraine; that they shall return the billion dollars that they exacted from France; that they shall return the tribute that they have exacted from the people of Belgium and other conquered territories; that they shall pay for the property which they confiscated in those territories; that they shall pay for every ship sunk by submarines contrary to the rules of warfare; and when they have done that I think they will have learned the lesson that the world will not recognize the right of any nation to defy the rules of humanity.

I ask, Mr. President, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor, I should like him to give his opinion about the question that I am about to ask him.

The fourth provision of the President's program for the world's peace, as laid down in his address to Congress on January 8, is as follows:

IV. Adequate guaranties given and taken that national armaments will be reduced to the lowest point consistent with domestic safety.

I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota, in view of the requirement contained in his resolution as to disbandment and surrender of the German Army as a condition precedent to peace, whether he thinks that anything less than that will insure a world peace? Does the Senator think that the mere retirement of the German Army from the countries which it has conquered or which it now occupies would be any assurance of peace? Does he think, as long as the German Army exists in Germany, armed and munitioned as it is, that there is any assurance of the peace of the world?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it is very easy to answer that question. The resolution which I have introduced declares that the Germans shall surrender their armies, surrender their arms and munitions, surrender their navy. When they have disbanded that army and surrendered its arms, I think there will be little danger of our not being able to enforce the guaranty. Until they have done that I do not think we ought even to talk to them.

I think another reason why we should not speak with them upon the matter of any cessation of hostilities now lies in the remarks made by the German chancellor, which, to my mind, are insulting to the intelligence of the world, in which he declares that Germany is fighting only a defensive war for its own life. We all know who caused this war; we all know who started it; we all understand the ambitions of the Kaiser; and now are we to have them speak to us of peace, to declare as the basis of that peace that they are fighting a defensive warfare for the life of the German Empire, and invite us to meet them on equal grounds, as though we had committed the same kind of crimes that they have committed, and as though we were in any wise responsible for the war?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And, Mr. President, if I may be permitted for expressing an opinion in relation to the German proposition for an armistice, in addition to the other difficulties and objections to it which have been cited by Senators, there is this: The proposition offered by Prince Maximilian does not express agreement to the terms of peace laid down by the President; it simply begs for an armistice for the purpose of entering upon a discussion of them. Of course, that is a mere trap to divide and separate the allies. When Germany agrees to these terms of peace and disbands her army, or when that army is conquered in the field, it will be time enough to consider terms of peace, in my opinion.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I was struck just now by a headline in the New York World. I read from that paper as follows:

PRINCE MAXIMILIAN'S NOTE ASKING WILSON FOR PEACE.

[Associated Press.]

AMSTERDAM, October 6.

The text of the note forwarded by the German chancellor, Prince Maximilian, to President Wilson through the Swiss Government follows.

Omitting the first two paragraphs, the concluding paragraph of the note reads as follows:

With a view to avoiding further bloodshed, the German Government requests the immediate conclusion of an armistice on land and water and in the air.

I presume the chancellor thought that, like Cyrano de Bergerac, in the last lines he would be strongest.

To hear that the German Government is concerned about bloodshed and to hear it thus hypocritically express a desire to avoid further bloodshed is the supreme sarcastic fling of the century—the grimmest bit of irony perpetrated in this war. The German Government sprang like a tiger at the throat of an unoffending and unsuspecting civilization, caused the rivers, the streets, and the fields of continental Europe to run red with innocent blood, then insults the intelligence of the world by pretending that it is very much concerned about the further shedding of blood!

Mr. President, the German junkers and German Kaiser are not only red-handed, but yellow-hearted; the moment the bayonets of the patriotic soldiers of the world have pricked their cowardly hides they yell for peace. A wide pathway of fire and blood from the Rhine to Berlin should be the course our Army should take; and when our armies have reached Berlin, in the city of Berlin, the German Government will be told what the peace terms will be.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I will not yield at this moment; I will yield when I conclude.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ASHURST. Some Senators say this discussion is of no value. This discussion is of value. We must assure the American people that we are not going to commit the sacrilege of dishonoring our dead soldiers by thinking of peace until our soldiers have entered Berlin. Anything other than complete and triumphant victory will not suffice. A glacial grinding and crashing down of German autocracy is the only thing that should be considered for a moment. I would deem it a sacriligious insult to the memory of our patriotic dead to think for a moment of doing other than striking the enemy all the harder for the insult offered by his proposing an armistice.

For what did we go into the war if not to make civilization safe? And it can not be made safe until the German junkers and the German Kaiser, the man with the withered soul, are absolutely annihilated. Revenge; no. Justice; yes! Have we the strength of heart and the sinew and the thew, and the soul to do justice? We have. Like the Czar of Bulgaria, who did not even have the attribute of personal courage, the Kaiser and his war lords have proven themselves to be what every tyrant and every autocrat in the history of the world has been, not only red-handed, but yellow-hearted.

We can do our country a service here, and I think the Senators who have spoken have done their country a service, by letting our constitutents, our countrymen, and the world know that we look with contempt, derision, and disdain upon any such notes as have come this morning through the public press asking for a cessation of hostilities to avoid any "further effusion of blood."

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not intend to interrupt the Senator. I thought he had concluded his remarks.

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not intend to interrupt the Senator, but what I have to say will occupy only a moment. I am delighted that the Senator has expressed the view that he has. I think it is a public service to make known the attitude of the Senate on this question.

But what I desired to say was rather in answer to the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who, in answering the query which I made of him, stated that he as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee would not consider for one moment the granting of an armistice to Germany at this time. There was nothing in the remark which I made which called forth that statement by the Senator from Nebraska or that suggested that anybody would consider for a moment the granting of an armistice at this time. What I discussed was an entirely different question, a question which has been considered by a great many people of importance in this country.

Mr. ASHURST. Whenever you hear anybody talking of an armistice or a premature peace, if the Senator listens closely he will detect a decided German accent in such fellow's voice.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think there is a good deal of merit in that suggestion. The proposition is insidious and sinister that we should discuss an armistice now. But the Germans themselves when they see defeat staring them in the face say they will retire from the conquered territory on condition that they get an armistice. My proposition to the Senator from Nebraska is, What is his attitude on that question? We are all agreed upon the victorious conclusion of the war, and the question is, How are we going to bring it about? Whether we are going to compel it, as we now have the power to do, or whether, by submitting to an armistice, calling a halt to our military campaign, after all the sacrifices we have made, we will have to depend upon negotiations with Germany to determine whether or not there shall be a victorious conclusion to this tragedy.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, as I was saying when I yielded, I think all the speeches of this morning are of value to this country and they are of value to our soldiers. These proceedings here serve notice, as I said before, that the treaty-making branch of the Federal Congress of the United States have opinions on this subject, that the body of men who under our Constitution will ratify treaties of peace have decided opinions, and are not going to conceal what those opinions are. Moreover, the Chief Executive, whose burdens are very great, has a right to know that we are behind him in his wondrously successful conduct of this stupendous conflict which has engaged the energies of the patriotic people of nearly all the countries of the world. So these proceedings have not been without benefit, and the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], who initiated them this morning, did a public service. When cowardly vandals, who have attempted to murder you and burn your house over your head, outraged your wife and family, begin to plead for peace and express their regret, would you, an officer of justice, be content to let the vandals escape by mere expressions of regret? The German Kaiser and all his criminal junkers should be made to know that in this world there is a law of compensation which sooner or later does its perfect work; made to know that the thief robs himself; that the outrager and the pillager outrage and plunder themselves; and that behind every criminal kaiser in the universe silent but relentless stands with uplifted blade the shadow of retribution and vengeance. Not a single effort of any sort on land or sea or sky should be made to soften any blows we are aiming toward Germany. Let the business of justice move onward.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL THURSDAY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock has arrived.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn until Thursday at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE TALBOTT.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. J. FRED. C. TALBOTT, late a Representative from the State of Maryland, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions just received from the House of Representatives be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. J. FRED. C. TALBOTT, a Representative of the State of Maryland.

Resolved, That a committee of 16 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, as a mark of respect to the distinguished Representative I send the following resolutions to the desk and ask for their adoption.

The resolutions (S. Res. 312) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. J. FRED. C. TALBOTT, late a Representative from the State of Maryland.

Resolved, That a committee of 12 Senators be appointed by the Vice President, to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to attend the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT, under the second resolution, appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. LODGE, Mr. NELSON, Mr. PENROSE, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. GERRY, and Mr. FRANCE.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, at a later date I shall ask the Senate to set aside a day for further suitable testimonial in memory of the distinguished Member of the House of Representatives, whom I knew well and intimately for very many years, and for whom I had the highest regard and esteem. I move as a further mark of respect that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, October 10, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, October 7, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everliving God, whose goodness stands approved, so move upon the hearts of Thy children that the grief and sorrow which they have brought upon themselves may be removed; that the peace which all true men are praying for and compelled to fight for may come in liberty, justice, and righteousness; that the world may be free from the sin and iniquity which follow in the wake of war.

We stand before Thee, our Father, with bowed heads and sorrowing hearts because of the removal of a Member of this House, who from his early manhood lived to his convictions—a faithful and gallant soldier, fighting for what he believed to be right, and when the war was over, accepted as gallantly its conclusions and gave himself to restoring the Government of the United States, in his State and in the affairs of the Nation.

Wise in his counsels, clear in his judgments, he won the respect and favor of all who knew him.

Comfort us and his kinsfolk with the everlasting promises of the immortality of the soul.

Fare thee well old friend until we meet again, where wars and sorrows never enter; and everlasting praise be thine, in the name of Him who died that we might live. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. WHEELER, to assist in the liberty-loan campaign.

To Mr. BANKHEAD, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan (at the request of Mr. MAPES), on account of a death in the family.

To Mr. JONES of Texas, for two weeks, on account of the liberty-loan campaign.

CLOSING THE HOUSE GALLERIES.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, it is matter of common knowledge that an epidemic of alarming proportions is prevailing throughout the country. Out of an abundant precaution the Senate has ordered the galleries closed, which action, I understand, meets with the approval of the medical authorities, and so I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker be instructed to close the galleries of this House until further action shall be taken by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DEATH OF HON. J. FRED. C. TALBOTT.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, with a heart full of sorrow I rise to inform the House of the death of my colleague, Mr. TALBOTT, who died at his home in Lutherville, Baltimore County, Md., Saturday afternoon. With the exception of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD], Mr. TALBOTT's service here antedates that of any other Member of the House. He was serving his twelfth term. I think there are only three other Members of the House who have ever had longer service here. He was one of the three former Confederate soldiers on this side of the aisle. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. TALBOTT, died a martyr to his duty here. When the naval appropriation bill was before the House for its consideration he sat here day after day, although not a well man, giving the members of his committee the benefit of his advice, counsel, and good judgment. I urged him at that time to go away—I saw that he was failing rapidly—but he would not do it. He felt his duty was here and he stayed here. After the bill came back here from the Senate and was sent to conference he was appointed one of the conferees. I again urged him to go away, because I felt he was failing rapidly. He said to me then, "I will not go away; I shall stay here doing my duty until I sign that conference report if it is the last report I ever sign." It was the last report he signed.

At some future time, Mr. Speaker, I shall ask the House to set aside a day on which his colleagues may address the House on his life and character. He was a splendid man, bright, genial, with a happy disposition, and the best thing I can say of him is that I never heard him speak ill of any man, friend or foe. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 443.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. J. FRED. C. TALBOTT, a Representative from the State of Maryland.

Resolved, That a committee of 26 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The question was taken; and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee on the part of the House: Mr. COADY, Mr. LINTHICUM, Mr. PRICE, Mr. MUDD, Mr. ZIHLMAN, Mr. PADGETT, Mr. ESTOPINAL, Mr. RIORDAN, Mr. HENSLEY, Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas, Mr. OLIVER of Alabama, Mr. VENABLE, Mr. VINSON, Mr. LITTLEPAGE, Mr. WILSON of Texas, Mr. KETTNER, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. BROWNING, Mr. FARR, Mr. BRITTEN, Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, Mr. PETERS, Mr. HICKS, Mr. MCARTHUR, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. GILLETT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the additional resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, October 8, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII,

Mr. SCULLY introduced a resolution (H. Res. 442) providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate the causes and ascertain the losses sustained by the recent explosion at Morgan, N. J.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII,

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana introduced a bill (H. R. 13055) granting an increase of pension to John Trimble, which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. RAKER: Petition of R. E. Miller, president of the Owl Drug Co., protesting against tax on distilled spirits, etc.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of May Blakely, secretary of Boston Grange, No. 1256, Boston, N. Y., protesting against the present postal laws and demanding their repeal; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, October 8, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who hast made us and not we ourselves, our Father in heaven, who hast endowed us with wisdom and understanding; and bestowed upon us the power of choice; and who hast taught us by a long line of predecessors in history, sacred and profane, that Thy laws are inexorable. To obey them is wisdom, peace, happiness; to disobey them brings confusion, wars, desolation. Give us the courage, strength, and fortitude to do what we know to be right that the peace which passeth all understanding may be ours. In the name of the Lord Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, in compliance with the agreement, I move that the House do now adjourn, to meet again on Friday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn until next Friday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, the gentleman is not making that as a privileged motion? He is making it in accordance with the agreement?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4787. An act for the relief of Amherst W. Barber; and

S. 4964. An act for the payment of claims for loss of private property on account of the loss of firearms and ammunition taken by the United States troops during the labor strikes in the State of Colorado in 1914.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3438) to prevent corrupt practices in the election of Senators, Representatives, or Delegates in Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 12982) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to purchase from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts a large dry dock and appurtenant lands.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. J. FRED. C. TALBOTT, late a Representative from the State of Maryland.

Resolved, That a committee of 12 Senators be appointed by the Vice President, to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to attend the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect that the Senate do now adjourn.

And that under the second resolution the Vice President had appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. LODGE, Mr. NELSON, Mr. PENROSE, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. GERRY, and Mr. FRANCE.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 12429. An act to authorize the health officer of the District of Columbia to permit the disinterment of the bodies of Eliza Hill Bowles, Bernice Worthen Bowles, and Bessie Vivian Bowles.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HARDY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence on account of death in family.

ADJOURNMENT.

Accordingly, under its previous agreement, the House (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Friday next, October 11, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SINNOTT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12579) to grant to citizens of Malheur County, Oreg., the right to cut timber in the State of Idaho for agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, and to remove such timber to Malheur County, Oreg., reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 826), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII,

Mr. RAKER introduced a bill (H. R. 13056) to grant to the citizens of Modoc County, Cal., the right to cut timber in the State of Nevada for agricultural, mining, and other domestic purposes, and to remove such timber to Modoc County, Cal., which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13058) granting an increase of pension to Margaret A. Van Dyke; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, October 10, 1918.

Rev. G. W. Popkins, of the city of Washington, delivered the following prayer:

Most gracious God, our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee that we can realize under the stress of one of the most trying periods in the country's history that Thou art our Father and our God. Accept of the gratitude of our hearts for the preservation of our lives, for health and strength. Let Thy blessings rest upon these Thy servants here. Endow them with wisdom from on high in these great crises in the history of our country. Guide and enlighten them by Thy Spirit. Bless our boys in foreign lands. May the spirit of God be around and about them. May they be protected from the pestilence that walketh in darkness. May their arms be crowned with victory for the glory and the honor of God and the attaining of a righteous peace to all the nations of the earth. We humbly ask it all in Jesus' name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was read and approved.

PEACE PROPOSALS OF CENTRAL POWERS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have a telegram which I shall read. It is addressed to me and the Washington delegation in Congress, and is as follows:

OCTOBER 10,

It is the opinion of these bodies and this community that Germany's latest peace proposals are promulgated in part for the purpose of hindering the fourth liberty loan, and, further, to delay operations in the hope of gaining time to strengthen their armies and prolong the war. Therefore we trust our Representatives in Congress will stand for unconditional surrender as our only terms of settlement with Germany.

This telegram comes from Sunnyside, Wash., and is signed by H. Lloyd Miller and W. J. Cloud, presidents of the local organizations of the National Council of Defense and the American Defense Society.

Mr. President, I have a telegram similar in sentiment from the American Defense Council of Sumner, Wash.; also one similar in sentiment from the Commercial Club of Kennewick, Wash.; also one similar in sentiment, but expressed in much more vigorous language, from the chairman of the American Defense Society, Chelan County, Wash.; another from the Puyallup National Loyal League, Washington.

Mr. President, all these telegrams come from small communities; most of them are communities of farmers, and I am satisfied they express the real sentiment and patriotic heart of the people of our State and of the Nation. They appeal to their Representatives in Congress to act. They apparently overlook the fact that in the matter of negotiations for peace, or an armistice, Congress has absolutely no authority; that it rests entirely with the President as the Chief Executive and Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy.

I would say nothing that might be construed as a criticism of the President of the United States in connection with Germany's peace call. He may know some things that I do not know that led him to do what he did. I do desire to say that my own personal view as to the course to be followed is in hearty accord with the sentiment of these telegrams. I think it would be far better for us to tell Germany that she must throw herself upon our mercy than to attempt to negotiate at the same time we are carrying on war. This war must end, if it ends rightly, in Germany accepting such terms as the allied nations of democracy shall deem wise and just to impose. Anything short of this will be a German victory as well as a distinct shock to the aroused soul of the American people, who are fully set upon doing completely and well what they have sent millions of their sons to France to do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, in line with the telegram which the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] read, I desire to say that I have received a telegram from the Connecticut Chamber of Commerce which reads as follows:

HARTFORD, CONN., October 9, 1918.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Washington, D. C.:

The Connecticut Chamber of Commerce approves the resolution passed unanimously by the Connecticut State Council of Defense on October 7, copy of which has been forwarded to the President, and desires no peace with the Imperial German Government which is not preceded by unconditional surrender and is not followed by restoration and restitution.

CONNECTICUT CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By AUBREY I. MADDOCK, Secretary.

Mr. WARREN. I present three telegrams, one from the American Defense Association, of Buffalo; one from the One Hundred Per Cent American Club, of Lovell; and another from the One Hundred Per Cent Society, of Superior, all in the State of Wyoming, in relation to the late tender of Germany. The telegrams are very short, and I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The telegrams are as follows:

BUFFALO, WYO., October 9, 1918.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The 400 members of our chapter are unalterably opposed to considering any peace proposal except on terms of unconditional surrender. Confirmation by mail.

WILSON MCBRIDE, President,
R. W. WATKINS, Secretary,
American Defense Association.

LOVELL, WYO., October 9, 1918.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

One Hundred Per Cent American Club, of Lovell, urge that your influence be exerted to the end that nothing but unconditional surrender of Germany and her allies be accepted as a satisfactory basis for peace.

ONE HUNDRED PER CENT CLUB,
By H. S. JOLLY, M. D. HARRIS, REN LEEDOM.

SUPERIOR, WYO., October 9, 1918.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Consider latest German peace offer for purpose of hurting fourth liberty loan. Resolutions passed by this society urge rejection of German peace proposals and demand that peace be granted only on unconditional surrender of Germany and her allies.

ONE HUNDRED PER CENT SOCIETY, Superior, Wyo.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, among many telegrams and communications relating to the question of suspending hostilities I have received one letter that I really think worthy of a place in the RECORD, and I believe it would be no imposition on the time of the Senate if I asked the consent of the Senate for the Secretary to read it. It comes from one who had just been a participant in a memorial to nine soldier boys in one small community who have given their lives in the war. The letter is so near a classic that I should like to have consent for the Secretary to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

MARYSVILLE, OHIO, October 8, 1918.

Hon. WARREN G. HARDING,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Ever since Sunday morning I have been in close touch with the people of this county, and I find the sentiment among them not only unanimous but intensely earnest with reference to Germany's request for an armistice "to consider" the terms of peace.

Nothing would outrage more the feelings of a county that has sent out 600 boys to make a thorough "job" of the effort to break the power of the most iniquitous political power that has ever cursed the world than to accede to its cowardly whine for a cessation of hostilities at this stage of the game.

A beaten outlaw has no claim on the leniency of the person whom he has attacked. We sent our boys over to "lick" the Kaiser, not to coddle him. If we had our way we would make his abdication and that of the whole Hohenzollern family a sine qua non of any armistice or parley or negotiation with the German Nation with reference to peace.

You will readily understand, then, how your constituents in Union County would regard any concession made to the proposal of the German chancellor. It would be regarded as a monstrous injustice to summon our sons to sacrifice themselves in an effort to crush this accursed autocracy, and then when they have all but accomplished their mission to cry "hands off," and thus spare the monster and give it time to recover its breath and secure for itself a new lease of life.

Last Tuesday we held a memorial service in honor of nine brave boys who had given up their lives and whose bodies lie now somewhere in the sacred blood-bought soil of France. They went from us with our benediction. Germany broken, humbled, repentant would be some compensation for their death. Germany sitting at the council table and administering on what is left of the world from the ruin she has wrought would be an insult to every home in the country that has suffered bereavement in consequence of the President's call upon it to give its best and bravest to wage relentless war against the "evil thing" he professes so utterly to detest. Let the President know that those who commended him for keeping us so long out of the war will condemn him the most severely if he takes us out of it too soon. He has no right to make the demand upon us for so great a sacrifice unless he is prepared to persevere until the objects for which the sacrifice was demanded are fully attained. The unconditional surrender of the foe is the only condition that will be just to those brave boys whom we have sent to fight him. Let Germany forsake her idols and bring forth fruit meet unto repentance; then, and then only, can we be just to our martyred heroes in heeding her plea for peace.

Very respectfully, yours, J. L. DAVIES,
Pastor First Congregational Church.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the letter just presented by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] was presented by him probably as expressing his own opinion or at least as having met his approval. I listened to it very carefully. It shows a total ignorance of even the text of the President's note, or, on the other hand, it shows a prejudice which is willing to give a misconstruction to it.

There have been some other telegrams introduced of a similar character this morning from the Republican side. I think it is nothing but fair, and not only fair but I think it is due the country at this time, to publish the note itself and to publish some of the criticisms bearing on the note from newspapers and people whose opinions would be worthy of some weight.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. Excuse me; I wish to take only a few minutes to read the matter into the RECORD. I do not care to be interrupted. I want to read into the RECORD right here the President's note and Senator LODGE's criticism.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, Senator LODGE, the leader of the Republican Party in the United States Senate and, in fact, throughout the United States, and the senior member of the minority of the Foreign Relations Committee, has, in my opinion, I regret to say, publicly misconstrued the reply of the President of the United States, made through the Secretary of State, to the peace note of Prince Maximilian, the chancellor of the German Empire.

The construction given by the Senator from Massachusetts in a public interview can not possibly serve any good public purpose, but, on the contrary, may lead the German people and even some of our own citizens who are not familiar with the facts to believe that the President of the United States has receded from the positions taken by him in his message to Congress on January 8 and in his speech delivered in New York on the opening of the fourth liberty-loan campaign on the 27th day of September last, and that he is now unduly anxious to enter into peace negotiations with the Imperial German Government. The establishment of such a conviction in the minds of the German people and many of the citizens of the United States would deaden the enthusiasm and zeal of our people at home; would be detrimental to the spirit and vigor of our own armies and the armies of our allies in the field, and would tend to destroy the confidence of the world in the President of the United States, whose highest service is essential to a lasting and just peace.

This is what the Senator from Massachusetts said, in the interview referred to, published in the Washington Post of October 9:

I am keenly disappointed that the President should at this stage enter into a discussion with the Imperial German Government, as he has done in the note signed by Mr. Lansing. In his first and second paragraphs he asks for further information and invites further discussion. It is true that in the last paragraph he inquires whether Prince Maximilian of Baden represents merely the constituted authorities of the German Empire. Prince Maximilian is the chancellor of the German Empire, appointed by the Kaiser. I do not understand what he can possibly represent except the constituted authorities, which represent the German Empire and the German people, unless a revolution has occurred of which the world has as yet no knowledge. To us he stands as the representative of Germany and of the Kaiser.

Personally I adhere to the statement of the President made in his speech of September 27, in which he said:

"We are all agreed that there can be no peace obtained by any kind of bargain or compromise with the Governments of the central empires, because we have dealt with them already and have seen them deal with other Governments that were parties to this struggle at Brest-Litovsk and Bucharest * * *."

I feel very strongly that there should be no discussion with the German Government until they are ready and compelled to accept the terms we think it right to impose.

The President, answering the suggestion by the Imperial German Government of an armistice, says the good faith of this proposal rests on the consent of the central powers to withdraw their armies from invaded territory. Are they to withdraw unattacked from Belgium and northern France, burning and robbing and destroying as they go, to positions behind the Rhine, where they will have time and opportunity to refresh their armies and replenish their munitions? Alsace and Lorraine are not invaded territory.

I can not but feel a painful anxiety as to what effect this note will have upon the allies, upon our armies, upon our soldiers who are fighting and dying and conquering in order to "crush the thing" with which the President is opening a discussion.

At the same time Representative FESS, the leading Republican of the House of Representatives and chairman of the Republican congressional campaign committee, gives this interview:

The way has been opened for Germany to save herself by withdrawing her armies within her own border by agreement rather than by retreat under fire as she has been forced to do the past few weeks. Peace discussions with Germany before our armies are on her soil will not insure the future. The imperial chancellor, the appointee of the Kaiser and as such the spokesman of the Hohenzollern government, will doubtless enter the door now open to declare himself the voice of the German people. Who will be able to refute it?

I had hoped that no step would be taken to transfer the discussion from the field to the table. I do not believe the soldiers or the country will ever be satisfied with anything short of a conclusive peace, which can only be assured by such chastisement of Germany as will make a like sacrifice in the future impossible.

This is what the President of the United States said in his note to Prince Maximilian, which was criticized by Senator LODGE in his interview:

Before making reply to the request of the Imperial German Government, and in order that that reply shall be as candid and straightforward as the momentous interests involved require, the President of the United States deems it necessary to assure himself of the exact meaning of the note of the imperial chancellor. Does the imperial chancellor mean that the Imperial German Government accepts the terms laid down by the President in his address to the Congress of the United States on the 8th of January last and in subsequent addresses and that its object in entering into discussions would be only to agree upon the practical details of their application?

The President feels bound to say with regard to the suggestion of an armistice that he would not feel at liberty to propose a cessation of arms to the governments with which the Government of the United States is associated against the central powers so long as the armies of those powers are upon their soil. The good faith of any discussion would manifestly depend upon the consent of the central powers immediately to withdraw their forces everywhere from invaded territory.

The President also feels that he is justified in asking whether the imperial chancellor is speaking merely for the constituted authorities of the Empire who have so far conducted the war. He deems the answers to these questions vital from every point of view.

In the first place, the President did not "enter into a discussion with the Imperial German Government." He expressly stated that he would not make reply until the note was made more definite in certain particulars. He further pointedly asked whether the Imperial German Government was ready to accept his terms for a lasting and just peace. If they answered in the affirmative and proceeded immediately to carry out all of those conditions, the war will be won as fully and completely as it is possible to win it. If the answer is in the negative or equivocal then the reply of the President will undoubtedly be only a repetition or a reference to the demands he has heretofore made. How or why the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts placed such a construction upon the President's reply I do not know. I do know, however, that the people of this country and the press of the United States do understand the President's message and do not concur with the Senator from Massachusetts in his misconstruction of it.

As an example of what the press of the country thinks of the President's note and the construction to be placed upon it, I will read comments from three of the largest and most influential newspapers in the United States.

The New York World says:

In dealing with the German peace offensive, President Wilson has employed the same tactics that Foch used in breaking the German military offensive—a counter offensive. * * * The President has simply shifted the issue back to Germany, and left the German Government to get out as best it can of the trap which was so carefully set for the United States and the allies.

The comment of the New York Tribune is as follows:

Our conclusion is that President Wilson's "inquiry" was intended by him not to express the state of mind in this country toward a faithless people * * * but to make it impossible for the Imperial German Government to capitalize its insincerity in terms of morale by saying to the German people, "We have asked in vain for peace on President Wilson's own conditions."

While the New York Sun, the most powerful Republican paper in the United States, gives this clear and forceful analysis of the note:

Perhaps no document has ever gone so swiftly to the heart of the question or disposed with such candid and yet subtle dialectic skill of a dangerously plausible trick of the enemy's diplomacy as the President's reply. * * * It is as incontrovertible in its majestic simplicity as the laws governing the movements of the heavenly bodies and as beautiful as the American flag.

The Associated Press has just reported that text of the President's note has reached the foreign offices of our allies, and that it meets their hearty approval.

Mr. President, this is not the first time that the Senator from Massachusetts has voiced his disapproval of the principles, policies, and methods pronounced by the President for the conduct of the war, the negotiation of peace, and the settlement of post-war conditions looking to a lasting and permanent peace.

In the President's address to Congress on January 8 he laid down definitely and specifically a program for world's peace embracing 14 distinct points. This program was agreed to and adopted by all of our allies and received the hearty approval of all of the neutral countries of the world. Yet it did not satisfy the senior Senator from Massachusetts. In the United States Senate on August 23 he laid down his own program for world's victory. This program differed from the program of the President in the readjustment of territory after the war. The spirit that the two programs breathe is as different as might is from justice. The program of the Senator from Massachusetts means war for victory, revenge, and advantage, while the program of the President means war for victory, justice, and everlasting peace.

The President in his New York speech on September 27 described the essential instrumentality of a lasting peace. He said:

If it be in deed and in truth the common object of the Governments associated against Germany and of the nations whom they govern, as I believe it to be, to achieve by the coming settlements a secure and lasting peace, it will be necessary that all who sit down at the peace table shall come ready and willing to pay the price, the only price, that will procure it; and ready and willing also to create in some virile fashion the only instrumentality by which it can be made certain that the agreements of the peace will be honored and fulfilled.

That price is impartial justice in every item of the settlement, no matter whose interest is crossed; and not only impartial justice but also the satisfaction of the several peoples whose fortunes are dealt with. That indispensable instrumentality is a league of nations formed under covenants that will be efficacious. Without such an instrumentality, by which the peace of the world can be guaranteed, peace will rest in part upon the word of outlaws and only upon that word. For Germany will have to redeem her character, not by what happens at the peace table but by what follows:

Senator LODGE is not in accord with this program of the President, as is evidenced by his remarks in the United States Senate on October 7, when he said:

As for this league of nations to enforce peace, it is caught up by Germany in order to divert attention. Can you imagine our going to work and forming a league to enforce peace on the world with Germany as one of the partners? There is one league to enforce peace now in existence, and that is the United States and the allies; and when they have beaten Germany, as she must be beaten, the world will have peace.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts is not in accord with many of the principles, policies, and actions of the President of the United States in the conduct of this war looking to everlasting peace. He is not encouraging the warring powers to accept the program of the President, but, on the contrary, he is openly opposing such program. In his speech on the 7th day of October he made this statement:

Mr. President, it is not a question of the 14 points, or the 4 points, or 8 points, or whatever they are.

Mr. President, the opposition of any statesman of the Senator's great ability and learning to the efforts of the President of the United States, upon whom the duty devolves to successfully conduct this war and bring about a lasting peace, would have its effect, but when that statesman is the leader of the Republican Party in the United States Senate, and by virtue of that position in the United States, and the minority leader on the great Foreign Relations Committee, his opposition becomes a matter of grave concern to all of the people of our country. He can now obstruct the carrying out of the principles and policies of the President of the United States; but if he were the leader of a Republican majority in the United States Senate he could block the consummation of such world policies. It is true that the President of the United States is vested with the sole authority to direct the Army and Navy of the United States. He has the sole jurisdiction to conduct diplomatic and foreign negotiations. He is the chief executive officer of our Government, upon whom devolves the duty of formulating treaties and agreements with other governments; but these treaties do not become operative until ratified by the United States Senate. Would a Republican United States Senate, under the leadership of Senator LODGE, ratify treaties embracing the President's program, or would they substitute for it a program formulated by the senior Senator from Massachusetts?

This is but one of a hundred illustrations that might be made to prove the necessity of a united Government in time of war. This is the people's war, and it is to the interest of every citizen of the United States to see that the President of the United States is upheld in every particular in his great humane policies that have been approved and adopted by all of our allies. Our people do not distrust Woodrow Wilson. He is loved, trusted, and respected not only by all of the people of the United States, but by the suffering peoples of the governments of our allies. He is recognized throughout the world to-day as the predominant statesman of the age. I recognize and admire the statesmanship, learning, and loyalty of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, but he has no right to be offended if I say to him that in the eyes of the world he does not compare with Woodrow Wilson. He will have his chance for a test in the coming election, because the contest is inevitable between the policies of Woodrow Wilson and the policies of Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE.

Mr. WILLIAMS and others addressed the Chair.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am quite willing that this discussion should proceed at the proper time, but we have some business to transact; and so I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope that the Senator will not insist upon that. Three or four speeches were permitted to be made the last time the Senate met, criticizing the President of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not object to discussion of the subject. I may take part in it myself later on; but I think we should have a morning hour devoted to the transaction of morning business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, Mr. President, I have made the request. I think it would have been fairer if the point had been made the other day, instead of making it to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not wish to offend the Senator, and, if he desires to go on now, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are several matters we ought to attend to. We can get through with them in a few minutes, and then this discussion will have the broadest opportunity in the entire Senate. There are two or three matters in the ordinary line of business that we ought to get through with during the morning hour. Then we shall have two or three hours for discussion of this subject. Would it not be just as agreeable to the Senator from Mississippi to speak a half hour later as now?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection to any request of that sort. I was merely saying that it seemed to me it would have been more fair if the objection had been made the other day, instead of waiting to make it now; but that is all right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Petitions and memorials are still in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN presented the petition of Mrs. Vivia A. B. Henderson, of Cheyenne, Wyo., Wyoming representative of the League of American Pen Women, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the American Defense Society of Rock Springs, Wyo., favoring the Americanization of foreigners through education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4894) to amend the one hundred and eighteenth article of war and to authorize the calling into service of dismissed or discharged officers (Rept. No. 587); and

A bill (S. 4946) to permit organizations, units, and detachments of the military forces to sell kitchen by-products, waste, and garbage from their messes, and to permit the Government to be the purchaser thereof (Rept. No. 586).

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4858) to provide method of settlement for materials, stores, and supplies transferred between different bureaus, departments, or agencies of the Government, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 585) thereon.

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 282) amending the public-buildings act approved March 4, 1913, providing for the purchase of a site for a public building at Nogales, Ariz., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 584) thereon.

Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted a report (No. 588) accompanied by a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 179) authorizing national banks to subscribe to the united war-work campaign.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

DAYLIGHT-SAVING LAW.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, is absent from the city, as is likewise the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], the ranking member of the majority side of that committee. The chairman of the War Industries Board has submitted a request, supported by information, for the modification of the day-light saving law, so as to give it permanent effect. On behalf of the Committee on Interstate Commerce—who, I think it fair to say, has been polled, no formal meeting of the committee having been held, but the committee having been polled and a considerable majority of the members having subscribed to the report—I desire to submit a report on Senate bill 4982, being a bill to make permanent the daylight-saving law, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The reason I make the request for immediate consideration of the bill is that the period contained in the daylight-saving act expires on the 27th day of October, being the last Sunday in the month of October; and the bill should be passed prior to that time, if it is to be passed at all, in order to avoid confusion and inconvenience.

The reason which, in Mr. Baruch's opinion, justifies this legislation, and that of the committee also in part, is that it will result in a very great saving of electric and other power, which at this time is necessary to the successful conduct of war industries. A report from the chief of the War Industries Board, power section, accompanies the report of the committee. It is several pages in length, and I would not at this time like to read the report in detail, unless some Member of the Senate desires to hear it read; but I will state that the report shows that there will be an enormous saving of power, and that almost every large city in the United States, where this is a vital question, has reported in favor of the legislation, the conclusion of the War Industries Board being that it will result in saving at least 250,000 kilowatt capacity of power.

I ask that a letter to the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] be printed in connection with the committee's report, and I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be reported by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4982) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States," approved March 19, 1918.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in order to be consistent, I must object to the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I give notice that at the conclusion of morning business I shall ask for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall not object to its consideration at that time.

FEDERAL BUILDING AT EATONTON, GA.

Mr. REED. On behalf of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I report back the bill (H. R. 10609) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the present Federal building site at Eatonton, Ga., for another site on the public square in said city. I desire also to say, as did the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who preceded me, and I desire also to advise the Senate, that the committee was polled, and that there was no regular session of the committee; but it is a bill which involves only a matter of $5,000. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the bill does not carry an appropriation. It is merely an authorization to the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange a post-office site in a little city in Georgia for another post-office site. The bill has been passed by the other House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS. I shall have to object to its consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I shall ask for the consideration of the bill at the close of the morning hour. It involves merely a formal matter.

CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES TO PRIVATE PROPERTY.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, I desire to make a favorable report on the bill (S. 4945) to amend an act entitled "An act to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad," and I submit a report (No. 589) thereon.

I presume it is unnecessary to ask for the immediate consideration of the bill, although I intended to do so, but I give notice that I shall try to get action upon it at the close of the morning business. Gen. Pershing has just cabled the War Department asking for information relative to the status of the bill and setting forth the necessity for immediate action thereon. It is hoped that the bill may be speedily passed.

PROTECTION OF TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH SERVICE.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12976) providing for the protection of the users of the telephone and telegraph service, and the properties and funds belonging thereto, during Government operation and control, and that it be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. The bill has already passed the House of Representatives. Jurisdiction of the matter, I think, properly lies in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. May I inquire who introduced the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is a House bill——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh!

Mr. ROBINSON. And was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. There accompanies this request a letter from the clerk of the committee in reference to the matter, which I ask may be printed in connection with the request.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What committee did the bill come from in the House of Representatives?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My understanding is that the bill originated in the Post Office Committee in the other House, and it seems to me that it is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Post Office Committee of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That may be so; I have not seen the bill, and I am not aware of its provisions.

Mr. ROBINSON. I can state to the Senator from Connecticut that the bill provides certain penalties for the misuse of the telegraphs and telephones, which are now under the control and operation of the Postmaster General.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. All I wanted to ascertain was whether, the bill having been referred by the Senate to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, that committee had requested that it be discharged from its further consideration?

Mr. ROBINSON. I assumed to speak for the chairman of the committee, as I said, in connection with another request which I submitted a few moments ago. The chairman of the committee is absent from the city, and my attention was called to the matter by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I was convinced that the jurisdiction under existing circumstances lies properly with the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Committee on Interstate Commerce will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 4983) for the relief of Northrop Banks (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4984) granting an increase of pension to Ella R. Brown (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED (for Mr. LEWIS):

A bill (S. 4985) to provide surgical or medical treatment for the men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard who have been honorably discharged from the service; and

A bill (S. 4986) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant a perpetual easement for railroad right of way and a right of way for a public highway over and upon a portion of the military reservation of Fort Sheridan, in the State of Illinois; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On my own account and also at the request of the National Educational Association and the Association of College Presidents of the United States I introduce a bill to create a department of education.

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia:

A bill (S. 4987) to create a department of education, to appropriate money for the conduct of said department, to appropriate money for Federal cooperation with the States in the encouragement and support of education, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4988) amending those paragraphs relating to extension of time on desert-land entries contained in an act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1915; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4989) to increase the pensions of widows of men who served in the War with Mexico; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4990) to repeal a proviso of paragraph 3, section 1, of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, and further amending said act; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. GORE submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. THOMAS. I offer an amendment to the revenue bill, being House bill 12863, designed to levy an income tax upon political contributions to campaigns. I ask that the amendment be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. THOMAS to House bill 12863:

At the end of Title II, page 53, add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 261. That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in respect of the excess over the sum of $500 which any person, firm, or corporation shall give, advance, pay, expend, subscribe, or contribute in the aggregate during any taxable year for the purpose, directly or indirectly, of influencing the nomination or defeat of any candidate or candidates for nomination, or the election or defeat of any candidate or candidates for office, or the success or defeat of any proposition, to be voted upon at any primary election or general or special election at which candidates for Members of the House of Representatives or for United States Senator or presidential electors are to be nominated or elected, a tax equal to 100 per cent of such excess; such expenditures or contributions to include all sums in any form contributed, subscribed, advanced, expended, paid, or given to or for such candidate or candidates or to or for party or other political committees or campaign funds, but not to include expenditures made by such candidates or regular political committees or out of such campaign funds of moneys lawfully contributed to them.

"Every person required by this title to make a return shall state therein specifically each item and the date thereof of all gifts, advances, expenditures, subscriptions, payments, and contributions made, and to whom, for the purpose of influencing the result of such primary and general elections and of all taxes due thereon under the provisions of this section. And the treasurer or chairman of all State or congressional committees and of all political committees as defined in the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910, entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected,' and of all associations or committees organized to promote or prevent the nomination or election of any candidate for Member of the House of Representatives or of the Senate of the Congress of the United States or for presidential elector or electors, shall, within 30 days after the election to be held therefor, file with the collector for the district where the headquarters or other office where such committee or association is located, a return stating specifically all sums of money received, from whom received, and the date thereof. Such return shall be verified by the chairman or treasurer of such committee or association."

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—GEORGE H. HAUF.

On motion of Mr. PENROSE, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 4238) granting a pension to George H. Hauf, Sixty-fifth Congress, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CORINNE LOWE.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 313), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Corinne Lowe, sister of James W. Lowe, late a carpenter in the employ of the United States Senate under the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. LODGE, at his own request, was relieved from further service as chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. NELSON, at his own request, was relieved from further service as chairman of the Committee on Five Civilized Tribes of Indians.

On motion of Mr. WARREN, it was Ordered, That the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] be assigned to the chairmanship of the Committee on Private Land Claims.

That the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] be assigned to the chairmanship of the Committee on Five Civilized Tribes of Indians.

ALIENS IN MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. GORE and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent to call up House joint resolution 331, being calendar No. 533. I will state that it is a measure in which the State Department has expressed a great interest, and it is one that ought to be passed without delay.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 331) authorizing the readmission to the United States of certain aliens who have been conscripted or have volunteered for service with the military forces of the United States or cobelligerent forces.

Mr. LODGE. I think the joint resolution had better be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 331) authorizing the readmission to the United States of certain aliens who have been conscripted or have volunteered for service with the military forces of the United States or cobelligerent forces.

Resolved, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3 of the immigration act of February 5, 1917, excluding from the United States aliens who are likely to become a public charge, or who are physically defective, or who are contract laborers, or who have come in consequence of advertisements for labor printed, published, or distributed in a foreign country, or who are assisted by others to come, or whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another or by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government, or who are stowaways, or who are illiterate, aliens lawfully resident in the United States when heretofore or hereafter enlisted or conscripted for the military or naval service of the United States, or of any one of the nations cobelligerent of the United States in the present war; and aliens lawfully resident in the United States who have enlisted for service with Czecho-Slovak, Polish, or other independent forces attached to the United States Army or to the army or navy of any one of the cobelligerents of the United States in the present war, who may during or within one year after the termination of the war apply for readmission to this country, after being honorably discharged or granted furlough abroad by the proper military or naval authorities, or after being rejected on final examination in connection with their enlistment or conscription shall, within two years after the termination of the war, be readmitted; and that any alien of either of the foregoing descriptions who would otherwise be excluded under said section of the immigration act on the ground that he is idiotic, imbecile, feeble-minded, epileptic, insane, or has had one or more attacks of insanity, or on the ground that he is afflicted with constitutional psychopathic inferiority, tuberculosis, a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, or mental defect, shall be readmitted if it is proved that the disability was acquired while the alien was serving in the military or naval forces of the United States or of any one of the nations cobelligerent of the United States in the present war or in an independent force of the kind hereinbefore described, if such alien returns to a port of the United States within two years after the termination of the war; and that the head tax provided in the immigration act of February 5, 1917, shall not be collected from aliens readmitted into the United States under the provisions of this resolution.

PEACE PROPOSALS OF CENTRAL POWERS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this joint resolution, I think, requires very careful consideration. With the purpose of it

I am in sympathy, but I hope Senators will look at it with some care, because it seems to me that it contains some provisions which, if not guarded, might lead to very serious abuse. It lays aside all the inhibitions of the immigration laws; it removes them from aliens with the worst physical defects if they have served in the army of any of our cobelligerents and if they acquired those defects in such army. It is somewhat difficult to prove some of those matters, and I should be glad if the Senator——

Mr. GORE. The Senator says that it applies——

Mr. LODGE. One moment, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. GORE. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I desire merely to call attention to the joint resolution and to its importance; but in connection with the war, of which this bill now before us is an outgrowth, I desire, Mr. President, to say a few words, as a statement which I made in the press has been brought before the Senate, I think not in full, as nearly as I can judge from the reading, and has been criticized seriously by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

Mr. President, peace negotiations, however approached, are entirely different, from the constitutional point of view, from measures for the conduct of the war. In all measures relating to the conduct of the war the President is the Commander in Chief, and the measures necessary for the conduct of the war, although they may merit criticism or amendment, it has seemed to me my duty to support, even if I did not fully approve or even if I disagreed with them in some respects; but in the question of making peace the President's power is not that of the Commander in Chief; it is a power specifically and separately conferred upon him by the Constitution. The power of initiating and negotiating peace is wholly his, but a treaty can never become law, it can never find ratification, without the advice and the consent of the Senate. The responsibility of a Senator in dealing with any question of peace is as great in his sphere as that of the President in his. The manner of making a treaty of peace and the provisions it shall contain differ very widely from the question of the conduct of the war. I think, therefore, that the right of Senators to discuss anything that looks toward the negotiation of peace is unquestionable.

Mr. President, if I had taken the ground that the President was going too far in the direction of hostility to the German Government, that he was involving us in needless extension of the war; if I had been trying to hold him back from laying down terms of an extreme kind, I might justly be criticized for interfering with the progress of the war. I did the exact contrary. I expressed regret that he had not taken stronger ground, that he had not gone further, not that he went too far.

Mr. President, I did not hope that the President's reply to the note of the German chancellor would be a decisive reply, I counted upon its being so with absolute certainty. On the 27th of September in New York, about a fortnight ago, the President said:

> We are all agreed that there can be no peace obtained by any kind of bargain or compromise with the governments of the central empires, because we have dealt with them already, and have seen them deal with other governments that were parties to this struggle, at Brest-Litovsk and Bucharest. They have convinced us that they are without honor and do not intend justice. They observe no covenants, accept no principle but force and their own interest. We can not "come to terms" with them. They have made it impossible. The German people must by this time be fully aware that we can not accept the word of those who forced this war upon us. We do not think the same thoughts or speak the same language of agreement.

That was the President's statement on the 27th of September. With that statement I am in the fullest accord; on that statement I am ready to stand. I am standing with the President on his statement of September 27 against the President in his note of queries and inquiries of October 8. I think, with submission and in all respect, that I have a legitimate right to a preference for one statement of the President over another by the President. Believing, as I did firmly, that the reply to Prince Maximilian would be in that same high tone as the New York declaration which I have quoted, I was, I confess, astonished when I read not a reply but three queries, to use Mr. Lansing's definition of the note.

When you ask questions seriously of another nation, you enter into debate, because it is to be supposed that you expect and will await an answer to them. The one great source of regret to me was that the President should ask questions of the German Empire through its chancellor after that vivid description which he gave of Germany in New York. His last question is whether Prince Maximilian represents merely the constituted authorities of the empire. I can not conceive what the chancellor of the German Empire represents except the hereditary and the elective bodies of the State. He can represent nothing but the constituted authorities. He is appointed by the Kaiser under the constitution, of the Reichstag of the empire, as I understand. He is the representative of the executive in the Reichstag, and those constituted authorities represent the German people until the German people see fit to lay them aside. He might easily reply by asking whether Mr. Lansing, who signed the note, represented merely our constituted authorities or whether he was elected by the people. He certainly is, and beyond all doubt, the chancellor of the German Empire, and the President asked him two questions as to what he meant and as to his attitude in regard to 14 points, which, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] pointed out the other day, are declarations of principles, not terms of peace in any sense. They are broad principles, and the President asks the chancellor whether he is to understand that Germany accepts the principles and then will agree to discuss the details. The details, Mr. President, are the vital points involved. But these points as to the note, Mr. President, are incidental.

That which disappointed me, that which I regretted in the note, because, as I said, what I was looking for was an answer on the basis of the New York speech, was the fact that the President asked questions which invited discussion. What possible value is it to put Germany in a dilemma? As to the shifting of the onus of the war, Mr. President, if we are to end this war as it ought to be ended, as we every one of us on both sides of this Chamber desire it should be ended, are we not ready to bear the onus of carrying it on until the great end is reached? If we are not ready to take that onus, then we should not have begun with the still greater onus or burden of entering the war at all.

The shifting of responsibility for the continuance of the war by a debate in diplomatic notes does not seem to me at this time to have much value. The note containing the President's queries, as the Secretary of State describes them, has given rise to questions of interpretation from one end of this country to the other. The note is being interpreted and explained everywhere. Was it a crime for me to wish that he should have sent an answer which needed no explanation and no interpretation? He sent a reply on September 16 to the Austria-Hungarian note. I think that by the accident of recognition I was the first in the Senate to give that note the most cordial approbation of which I was capable. Nobody undertook to interpret that note. Nobody found it necessary to explain that note. The mere fact that this note requires an explanation and defense is my criticism. I did not want a note that needed either explanation or defense. I wished it to go out as the note to Austria-Hungary went out—with general acclaim, a note that he who ran might read, that the whole people with one voice said we are behind, we are not puzzled about it, we know just exactly what it means, it needs no defense or explanation, it is the voice of the American people denying the attempt at peace made by Austria-Hungary.

Mr. President, I do not desire to go into the details of the note. I do not wish to examine all the possibilities which arise under it. The first query is as to whether Germany means to accept the 14 points, and also the language is what has been said "in subsequent addresses." Therefore it is an inquiry whether Germany will accept the 14 points and also the 4 points which came in another message and these great statements made subsequently at New York and at Baltimore. You all recall the latter. Let me read it to you again:

> There is, therefore, but one response possible from us: Force, force to the utmost, force without stint or limit, the righteous and triumphant force which shall make right the law of the world, and cast every selfish dominion down in the dust.

That is included in the subsequent addresses. That is the sentence of which the whole people were proud and which roused them up from one end of the land to the other. That is one of the propositions for which I stand.

The President asks the German chancellor if they accept his 14 points and his subsequent addresses. What they will say I do not know, and I do not care, but he gives them a large opportunity to say a great many things and discuss a great many points for a very long time. He asks them if they accept those principles and are prepared then to proceed. If they do, then the only open question is the agreement on details. Mr. President, as I have already said, those details are the very life of the whole question. They are vital. They go to the very heart of things. Everything is involved in those details.

To take one instance, the President laid down a general principle as to Alsace-Lorraine. He said the great wrong of 1870 and 1871 must be righted. The detail is, How shall it be righted, and what is to be called righting it? France thinks that that wrong can be righted in only one way, and that is by the return of the Provinces then rent from her by German armies, without condition, without deduction, without any German arrangement about vote and autonomy and a buffer state, that they shall simply come back to France. That is one of the details. I hope

I shall not be thought to be saying anything that "grazes treason" when I say that the view of France is my view. I think Alsace and Lorraine ought to go back to France absolutely and unconditionally. That is one of the details which is to be considered. I believe profoundly that Italia Irredenta should go to Italy, who has served and sacrificed greatly, without condition or restriction. Is that a detail to be settled by notes?

Here is another thing which does not occur in the 14 points or in the 4 points. By a great act of the President, one with which I was in the most hearty sympathy, a great irrevocable act, he recognized the Czecho-Slovaks as a belligerent nation. They are not only an integral part of Austria, but Bohemia is the most valuable Province in the Austrian Empire. Bohemia is the western Province. Then comes Moravia; then what they call Slovakia, which is where the Slovaks live, on the northern slope of the Carpathians. The Slovaks are a peasant people, and the lands are in the hands of the most oppressive landlords in the world, the Hungarian Magyars. That is the territory lying there in the heart of Europe, and those are the people, the wonderful people, whose exploits in Russia and Siberia the world has been admiring, and that the President, joining with Italy and France and England has recognized as a belligerent nation. There is one of the details not mentioned in the 14 points. Does anyone imagine that Austria is going to sit at a table and bargain away those Provinces? Those Provinces will receive the independence which we have promised them when the recognition we have given them is fulfilled. They will receive it when Austria-Hungary and Germany are in a position where we shall impose our own terms upon them and not one minute before.

Every encouragement has been held out to the Poles and to the Jugo-Slavs. I was thankful to the President when I saw the tone he took both in his address to the Poles and still more in the 14 points. There must be a large Poland, taking all those regions rent from the Polish people by the partitions, one of the most infamous crimes in history. There must be a large Poland, a strong Poland, a Poland with access to the sea by the River Vistula, which flows entirely among the Polish people until it reaches Dantzig. It is for our interest, the interest of the world, to have that great barrier State built up between Russia and Germany, to aid and protect Russia and help to bar Germany on the east, for the people who, under John Sobieski, saved Europe from the oncoming Turk, have not lost their capacity for brilliant fighting or for devoted patriotism. Then there are the Jugo-Slavs. They have been encouraged, I am happy to say, by the President. They are headed by the Serbs, whose treatment has been worse, if anything, than that of Belgium, who are fighting now with undiminished gallantry and breaking through the enemy lines into Bulgaria. Those Jugo-Slavs we must protect.

Let me read another extract from the address of the President at Baltimore. He says:

Their purpose—

Referring to Germany—

Their purpose is undoubtedly to make all the Slavic peoples, all the free and ambitious nations of the Baltic Peninsula, all the lands that Turkey has dominated and misruled, subject to their will and ambition, and build upon that dominion an empire of force upon which they fancy that they can then erect an empire of gain and commercial supremacy—an empire as hostile to the Americas as to the Europe which it will overawe—an empire which will ultimately master Persia, India, and the peoples of the Far East.

He sees plainly, and never has it been better stated, the absolutely vital importance of the independence of the Czecho-Slovaks and the Jugo-Slavs. That is another of the vital details. Without Constantinople and without the independence of those nations our war would be only half won.

Do you think that Germany is going to yield those things on an exchange of notes? They will yield them as they must yield them, as they shall yield them when they are beaten and not before.

Mr. President, in the principles with many of which I find no fault, in the principles laid down of the 14 points or 4 points, I find nothing that is satisfactory to me at least about reparation. The German Armies are falling back to-day. In Flanders and northern France they are burning every town, every harmless village as they go, without any regard to its military value. They have taken people into slavery, and as they become hopelessly diseased they send them back to be fed until their death in France. I am not going to rehearse the crimes of the Germans, but that is what they are doing now as they retreat. As they fall back in Flanders I am filled with fear that they will blow up and destroy Bruges and Ghent, not in any military process, but just out of pure savagery, two of the most beautiful cities in Europe. Though I think we ought to have a large reparation for some of our merchant ships and for our passengers who went down on the Lusitania, the world ought to have, must have, far larger reparation. There is such a thing as retributive justice; there is such a thing as punitive justice. If any criminals have ever walked this earth deserving retributive justice and punitive justice it is the empire of Germany, and in any peace in which I have even the smallest share I want to see something done for reparation for all those crimes which are being committed. Am I to be accused of treason because I demand that? It is not mentioned even in the details.

Now, Mr. President, let me read just one little extract that I clipped from the papers this morning:

GOMPERS CABLES GERMANY TRIES TO DIVIDE ALLIES.

In a cablegram from Rome, Italy, received yesterday at American Federation of Labor headquarters from Samuel Gompers, who is with the American labor mission in Rome, Mr. Gompers has this to say of the German peace offer:

"The offer of an armistice is nothing more than another maneuver of Germany and the central powers to weaken the solidarity of the allied democracies and their will to fight for the destruction of imperialism, militarism and autocracy. The safety of labor and of the people generally demand from the central powers their unconditional surrender or that their military menace be crushed. This is the judgment of not only the American labor mission now in Rome, but of all with whom we have come in contact."

Mr. President, all I say, is what Mr. Gompers says, and they will be very slow, let me tell you—anybody, certainly on the Democratic side, will hesitate long before accusing Mr. Gompers of hostility to the President. I say nothing more than what he said. I believe that Mr. Gompers correctly interprets the will and the wishes of the American people.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], as he always does, undertook to give a party complexion to this subject. Mr. President, if there was any party advantage in it, and I do not suppose there is the slightest, I say to you with all the solemnity that I can bring that I would have gladly forfeited any advantage to myself, any advantage to my party, which could possibly be dreamed of if the President would only have written a note like the Baltimore speech, like the reply to Austria-Hungary, and not a series of queries and had given neither me nor anybody else anything to criticize or find fault with.

Party advantage is as nothing in what we are dealing with now. Upon the question of discussion with Germany hangs the result of the war. I could not help being disturbed for fear that the queries might be misinterpreted, that they might be misunderstood. I hope and trust that I am utterly wrong, but I could not but feel anxiety lest the thought, conveyed to the popular mind that we are on the eve of peace negotiations might affect the liberty loan among people who did not look closely into language. I hope and trust that it will do nothing of the kind. No liberty loan was ever more necessary than the one we are now making, and a failure of it would be equivalent almost to the loss of a battle. But when we begin to talk about peace and ask Germany what she thinks about certain things the average man is confused and misled and imagines peace to be upon the threshold.

Mr. President, my view is a simple one. Nelson once said that the best diplomatists in Europe were his hundred-gun ships. Mr. President, the best diplomatists in Europe at this moment are the armies of France and Italy, of England and the United States. The best men to carry on discussion with Germany are Haig and Pershing and Diaz, and over all the great commander, Marshal Foch. Those are the negotiators with whom I would leave the question of peace. They will win it. They will win it on German soil. They will bring back the peace which the whole American people desire, for they desire, I believe, unconditional surrender, and unconditional surrenders are not obtained by clever discussion and exchanges of notes. They are won by armies in the field.

When the war ends, Mr. President, is wholly secondary to how it ends. The war might end in such a way as to make us feel like criminals, because we had been responsible for the sacrifice of the young manhood of America with no result. The result must justify the sacrifices. Nothing else is possible and nothing will justify those sacrifices but putting Germany where she can not again break out like an armed lunatic upon the world. That will do more than any league of peace. Are we going into a league to enforce peace with Germany as a partner? The way to compel the peace of the world is to break Germany down and make her accept our terms.

Mr. President, as a Republican—and I know I speak for all about me—let me say that we have given, we shall continue to give, a full and whole-hearted support to the President as the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. We give it to him because he is there by the election of the people and our belief is in laws, not men. We have been brought up on the old doctrine that this is a Government of laws and not of men, and as to the man placed at our head at this great hour, not only as President, but as Commander in Chief, the law has placed him there and he has our support, not for what he can give us, not for what he can do for us, but because he is the head of the Nation under the law and the Constitution of the United States, the head of the Nation in time of war.

Mr. President, the highest allegiance is that which we bear on both sides of this Chamber equally. The highest allegiance is to the country and the cause. To that all else must yield and to that all else will yield in the end. The Republican Party stands for unconditional surrender and complete victory, just as Grant stood. My own belief is that the American people mean to have an unconditional surrender. They mean to have a dictated and not a negotiated peace. That is my own belief here, deeper in my heart than any belief I have ever had. I may be wrong, but I so believe with all my heart and soul, and I shall stand for my belief in this great hour of my country's fate, in public or in private, in any field at any time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me for less than five minutes?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only wish to ask in connection with this debate to have printed the President's peace terms announced January 8, February 11, July 4, and September 27 and the correspondence with the Governments of Austria-Hungary and Germany. I wish the people when reading the Senate discussion to have before them in the RECORD these statements by the President. Let me add the further statement that while agreeing to the main results announced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] which we must accomplish, I also believe that the President's last letter was wise and will be fraught with real service to the country.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have no objection to having the matter printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

PRESIDENT'S PEACE TERMS ANNOUNCED JANUARY 8, FEBRUARY 11, JULY 4, AND SEPTEMBER 27.

President Wilson's program of world peace, stated in 14 terms in his address to Congress last January 8, and which the German chancellor now is asked to say whether he accepts without qualification, before the President replies to the latest peace proposal, is as follows:

1. Open covenants of peace, openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind, but diplomacy shall proceed always frankly and in the public view.

2. Absolute freedom of navigation upon the seas, outside territorial waters, alike in peace and in war, except as the seas may be closed in whole or in part by international action for the enforcement of international covenants.

3. The removal, so far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance.

4. Adequate guaranties given and taken that national armaments will be reduced to the lowest point consistent with domestic safety.

5. A free, open-minded and absolutely impartial adjustment of all colonial claims, based upon a strict observance of the principle that in determining all such questions of sovereignty the interests of the populations concerned must have equal weight with the equitable claims of the government whose title is to be determined.

6. The evacuation of all Russian territory and such a settlement of all questions affecting Russia as will secure the best and freest cooperation of the other nations of the world in obtaining for her an unhampered and unembarrassed opportunity for the independent determination of her own political development and national policy and assure her of a sincere welcome into the society of free nations under institutions of her own choosing, and, more than a welcome, assistance also of every kind that she may need and may herself desire. The treatment accorded Russia by her sister nations in the months to come will be the acid test of their good will, of their comprehension of their needs as distinguished from their own interests and of their intelligent and unselfish sympathy.

7. Belgium, the whole world will agree, must be evacuated and restored, without any attempt to limit the sovereignty which she enjoys in common with all other free nations. No other single act will serve as this will serve to restore confidence among the nations in the laws which they themselves have set and determined for the government of their relations with one another. Without this healing act the whole structure and validity of international law is forever impaired.

8. All French territory should be freed and the invaded portions restored, and the wrong done to France by Prussia in 1871 in the matter of Alsace-Lorraine, which has unsettled the peace of the world for nearly 50 years, should be righted, in order that peace may once more be made secure in the interest of all.

9. A readjustment of the frontiers of Italy should be effected along clearly recognizable lines of nationality.

10. The peoples of Austria-Hungary, whose place among nations we wish to see safeguarded and assured, should be accorded the freest opportunity of autonomous development.

11. Rumania, Serbia, and Montenegro should be evacuated; occupied territories restored; Serbia accorded free and secure access to the sea and the relations of the several Balkan States to one another determined by friendly counsel along historically established lines of allegiance and nationality; and international guaranties of the political and economic independence and territorial integrity of the several Balkan States should be entered into.

12. The Turkish portions of the present Ottoman Empire should be assured a secure sovereignty. But the other nationalities which are now under Turkish rule should be assured an undoubted security of life and an absolutely unmolested opportunity of autonomous development. And the Dardanelles should be permanently opened as a free passage to the ships and commerce of all nations under international guarantees.

13. An independent Polish State should be erected which should include the territories inhabited by indisputably Polish populations, which should be assured a free and secure access to the sea, and whose political and economic independence and territorial integrity should be guaranteed by international covenant.

14. A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guarantees of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small States alike.

TERMS GIVEN IN FEBRUARY.

In an address to Congress on February 11, 1918, President Wilson "enumerated the principles which must be applied to any further exchanges of view between governments," as follows:

1. That each part of the final settlement must be based upon the essential justice of that particular case and upon such adjustments as are most likely to bring a peace that will be permanent.

2. That peoples and Provinces are not to be bartered about from sovereignty to sovereignty as if they were mere chattels and pawns in a game, even the great game, now forever discredited, of the balance of power; but that

3. Every territorial settlement involved in this war must be made in the interest and for the benefit of the populations concerned, and not as a part of any mere adjustment or compromise of claims amongst rival States; and

4. That all well-defined national aspirations shall be accorded the utmost satisfaction that can be accorded them without introducing new or perpetuating old elements of discord and antagonism that would be likely in time to break the peace of Europe and consequently of the world.

MOUNT VERNON SPEECH.

On July 4, 1918, in an address at Mount Vernon, President Wilson said:

These are the ends for which the associated peoples of the world are fighting and which must be conceded them before there can be peace:

1. The destruction of every arbitrary power anywhere that can separately, secretly, and of its single choice disturb the peace of the world; or, if it can not be presently destroyed, at the least its reduction to virtual impotence.

2. The settlement of every question, whether of territory, of sovereignty, of economic arrangement, or of political relationship, upon the basis of the free acceptance of that settlement by the people immediately concerned, and not upon the basis of material interest or advantage of any other nation or people which may desire a different settlement for the sake of its own exterior influence or mastery.

3. The consent of all nations to be governed in their conduct toward each other by the same principles of honor and of respect for the common law of civilized society that govern the individual citizens of all modern states in their relations with one another; to the end that all promises and covenants may be sacredly observed, no private plots or conspiracies hatched, no selfish injuries wrought with impunity, and a mutual trust established upon the handsome foundation of a mutual respect for right.

4. The establishment of an organization of peace, which shall make it certain that the combined power of free nations will check every invasion of right and serve to make peace and justice the more secure by affording a definite tribunal of opinion to which all must submit and by which every international readjustment that can not be amicably agreed upon by the peoples directly concerned shall be sanctioned.

ADDRESS IN SEPTEMBER.

On September 27 President Wilson, addressing Congress, said:

"These, then, are some of the particulars, and I state them with the greater confidence because I can state them authoritatively, as representing this Government's interpretation of its own duty with regard to peace:

"1. The impartial justice meted out must involve no discrimination between those to whom we wish to be just and those to whom we do not wish to be just. It must be a justice that plays no favorites and knows no standard, but the equal rights of the several peoples concerned.

"2. No special or separate interest of any single nation or any group of nations can be made the basis of any part of the settlement which is not consistent with the common interests of all.

"3. There can be no leagues or alliances or special covenants and understandings within the general and common family of the league of nations.

"4. And more specifically, there can be no special, selfish, economic combinations within the league and no employment of any form of economic boycott or exclusion except as the power of economic penalty by exclusion from the markets of the world may be vested in the league of nations itself as a means of discipline and control.

"5. All international agreements and treaties of every kind must be made known in their entirety to the rest of the world.

REPLY TO AUSTRIA'S PLEA.

The following is President Wilson's answer to the first peace proposal of Austria-Hungary, sent on September 16, 1918:

"The Government of the United States feels that there is only one reply which it can make to the suggestion of the Imperial Austro-Hungarian Government. It has repeatedly and with entire candor stated the terms upon which the United States would consider peace and can and will entertain no proposal for a conference upon a matter concerning which it has made its position and purpose so plain."

TEXT OF GERMANY'S PEACE PROPOSAL TO UNITED STATES.

The German Government requests the President of the United States of America to take steps for the restoration of peace, to notify all belligerents of this request, and to invite them to delegate plenipotentiaries for the purpose of taking up negotiations. The German Government accepts, as a basis for the peace negotiations, the program laid down by the President of the United States in his message to Congress of January 8, 1918, and in his subsequent pronouncements, particularly in his address of September 27, 1918. In order to avoid further bloodshed the German Government requests to bring about the immediate conclusion of a general armistice on land, on water, and in the air.

MAX, PRINCE OF BADEN,
Imperial Chancellor.

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 9, 1918.]

TEXT OF REPLY OF UNITED STATES TO GERMANY'S PEACE OVERTURES.

Secretary Lansing yesterday handed the following note to Frederick Oederlin, chargé d'affaires of Switzerland, ad interim:

"I have the honor to acknowledge, on behalf of the President, your note of October 6, inclosing a communication from the German Government to the President; and I am instructed by the President to request you to make the following communication to the imperial German chancellor:

"'Before making reply to the request of the Imperial German Government, and in order that that reply shall be as candid and straightforward as the momentous interests involved require, the President of the United States deems it necessary to assure himself of the exact meaning of the note of the imperial chancellor. Does the imperial chancellor mean that the Imperial German Government accepts the terms laid down by the President in his address to the Congress of the United States on the 8th of January last and in subsequent addresses and that its object in entering into discussions would be only to agree upon the practical details of their application?

"'The President feels bound to say with regard to the suggestion of an armistice that he would not feel at liberty to propose a cessation of arms to the Governments with which the Government of the United States is associated against the central powers so long as the armies of those powers are upon their soil. The good faith of any discussion would manifestly depend upon the consent of the central powers immediately to withdraw their forces everywhere from invaded territory.

"'The President also feels that he is justified in asking whether the imperial chancellor is speaking merely for the constituted authorities of the Empire who have so far conducted the war. He deems the answers to these questions vital from every point of view.'"

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I listened with the closest attention to the eloquent and inspiring statement of his position upon this great question by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who has just taken his seat. In that connection, I want to mark the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts just delivered, to which the Senate, I noticed, paid the closest attention, by referring to the statement made a few minutes ago upon this floor by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], to the effect that the policies and views of the Senator from Massachusetts upon this question differ greatly from the policies and views of the President of the United States. We have just heard the views of the Senator from Massachusetts as to the way the war with Germany should end. He is in favor of an unqualified victory; he is in favor of subduing the military power of Germany and of imposing upon her a peace and a reestablishment of conditions after the war to be dictated by the allies.

The Senator from Nevada says that is not the position of the President of the United States. As for me, Mr. President, if that is true, I take my stand upon this question by the side of the Senator from Massachusetts and not by the side of the President of the United States on the conditions of peace, if the view of the Senator from Nevada as to the difference between them is correct, because I indorse, and I believe that the overwhelming sentiment of this country approves, the position just taken by the Senator from Massachusetts.

That further recalls the remarks that were made by the Senator from Nevada. He said that the Senator from Massachusetts, in a statement which he had given to the newspapers, had publicly misconstrued the reply of the President to the offer of the German chancellor, and I listened with rapt attention to the entire carefully prepared statement of the Senator from Nevada for a demonstration of the proposition that the Senator from Massachusetts had misconstrued the reply of the President; and I think I do no injustice to the Senator from Nevada in saying that he did not show, nor did he even attempt to show, in any respect whatever any injustice that was done to the President in the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts in any misunderstanding of the President's note delivered through the Secretary of State, or any misconstruction of it.
